Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think that the observations of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] must receive the concurrence of all who listened to them. The only clause which could by any possibility have any retroactive effect is the concluding clause of the amendment, "who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law," and it is to that class that I understand the observations of the Senator from Missouri are directed. But I am very sure that the Senator from Missouri on reflection will not deem the matter of sufficient importance to ask that the amendment be passed over, because it is conceivable, of course, that a man might have been admitted in conformity with law some three years ago but that he will now fall within one of the classes whose entry is prohibited by this law, and upon a strained construction it might be held that he was liable to be deported. But such a construction could hardly be given to it, because of the concluding language, "who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law," which undoubtedly refers to the classes excluded by the law as it existed at the time of his entry.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, I said at the time this amendment came up that I had had no opportunity really to examine it. I suggest after the word "classes," in line 8, to insert the word "then," so that it would read:

Or who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes then excluded by law.

Mr. LODGE. I see no possible objection to that amendment. I think it makes it clearer. The committee accepts it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified, if there be no further discussion, will be agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 19, page 42, line 14, after the word "causes," to strike out "existing prior to the" and insert "not affirmatively shown to have arisen subsequent to," so as to read:

Any alien who within five years after entry becomes a public charge from causes not affirmatively shown to have arisen subsequent to landing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 19, page 42, line 25, after the word "who," to insert "manages or," and, on page 43, line 4, after the word "assists" to insert "any prostitute or," so as to read:

Any alien who manages or is employed by, in, or in connection with any house of prostitution or music or dance hall or other place of amusement or resort habitually frequented by prostitutes, or where prostitutes gather, or who in any way assists any prostitute or protects, or promises to protect from arrest any prostitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 19, page 43, line 15, after the word "hereof," to strike out "any alien"; in line 16, after the word "entry," to insert "any alien"; in the same line, after the word "shall," to strike out "enter" and insert "have entered"; and in line 21, after the word "officials," to insert "or who enters at any time or place without inspection," so as to read:

At any time within three years after entry, any alien who shall have entered the United States by water at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officials, or by land at any place other than one designated as a port of entry for aliens by the Commissioner General of Immigration, or at any time not designated by immigration officials, or who enters at any time or place without inspection, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 19, page 43, after line 23, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That for the purposes of this act, the marriage to an American citizen of a female of the sexually immoral classes the exclusion or deportation of which is prescribed by this act shall not invest such female with United States citizenship.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. One moment. I am not going to object to the amendment, but I think it is going to raise some interesting questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to without objection.

The next amendment was, in section 19, page 44, line 19, after the word "final," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall also apply to the cases of aliens who come to the mainland of the United States from the insular possessions thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, page 45, line 12, after the word "If," strike out the word "effected" and insert "deportation proceedings are instituted," so as to read:

If deportation proceedings are instituted at any time within five years after the entry of the alien, such deportation, including one-half of the entire cost of removal to the port of deportation, shall be at the expense of the contractor, procurer, or other person by whom the alien was unlawfully induced to enter the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 16, after the word "attendance," to strike out "he may" and to insert "the said Secretary shall when necessary," so as to read:

Provided, That when in the opinion of the Secretary of Labor the mental or physical condition of such alien is such as to require personal care and attendance, the said Secretary shall, when necessary, employ a suitable person for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 21, page 47, line 10, before the word "may," to insert "the said Secretary," so as to read:

SEC. 21. That any alien liable to be excluded because likely to become a public charge or because of physical disability other than tuberculosis in any form or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease may, if otherwise admissible, nevertheless be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor upon the giving of a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by said Secretary, in such amount and containing such conditions as the said Secretary may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 22, page 47, line 21, after the word "alien," to insert "shall have been naturalized or"; in line 25, before the word "said," to strike out "if" and insert "and"; on page 48, line 1, before the word "children," to insert "minor"; and in line 2, before the word "children," to insert "minor," so as to read:

SEC. 22. That whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him, and said wife or any of said minor children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder, such wife or minor children shall be held.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 14, after the word "admitted," to insert:

Provided, That, if the person sending for wife or minor children is naturalized, a wife to whom married or a minor child born subsequent to such husband or father's naturalization shall be admitted without detention for treatment in hospital, and with respect to a wife to whom married or a minor child born prior to such husband or father's naturalization the provisions of this section shall be observed even though such person is unable to pay the expense of treatment, such expense to be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED subsequently said: I want to call the attention of the committee to the amendment which was adopted on page 48, which reads:

Provided, That, if the person sending for wife or minor children is naturalized, a wife to whom married or a minor child born subsequent to such husband or father's naturalization shall be admitted without detention for treatment in hospital, and with respect to a wife to whom married or a minor child born prior to such husband or father's naturalization the provisions of this section shall be observed even though such person is unable to pay the expense of treatment—

As to the amendment thus far I raise no objection, but it continues—such expense to be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act.

It would seem to me that that language would compel the United States Government to defray such expenses even though the husband were abundantly able to do so. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if that is not the construction that is likely to be given to that language?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think that the context, the line just preceding, is explanatory of that, though it may be a little awkwardy expressed. It reads:

The provision of this section shall be observed even though such person is unable to pay the expense of treatment, such expense—

That is, if they are unable to pay "such expense."

Mr. LODGE. The lines above read, "and if it shall be determined that the disorder is easily curable and the husband or father or other responsible person is willing to bear the expense of the treatment," they may be admitted. This enlarges it, so that if such person can not bear the expense the Government undertakes it.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Massachusetts, I think, was otherwise engaged when I made my observation and did not catch its import.

Mr. LODGE. Possibly I did not.

Mr. REED. The provision that if the individual or the relative is not able to bear the expense the Government shall do so is all right, but the last four lines read:

The provisions of this section shall be observed even though such person is unable to pay the expense of treatment, such expense to be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act.

It occurs to me that that throws the burden upon the Government regardless of the ability to pay, and I beg to suggest that the amendment ought to be amended to read "in which case the expense shall be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act."

Mr. LODGE. I see I did not catch the point which the Senator from Missouri made, which is a very sound point. I think the change he suggests ought to be made.

Mr. REED. I make the suggestion, then, to strike out in line 22, on page 48, the words "such expense to be" and to insert "in which case such expense shall be," so that the clause would read:

In which case such expense shall be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 23, page 50, line 18, after the words "Secretary of Labor," to insert:

Provided, That no person, company, or transportation line engaged in carrying alien passengers for hire from Canada or Mexico to the United States, whether by land or water, shall be allowed to land any such passengers in the United States without providing suitable and approved landing stations, conveniently located, at the point or points of entry. The Commissioner General of Immigration is hereby authorized and empowered to prescribe the conditions, not inconsistent with law, under which the above-mentioned landing stations shall be deemed suitable within the meaning of this section. Any person, company, or transportation line landing an alien passenger in the United States without compliance with the requirement herein set forth shall be deemed to have violated section 8 of this act, and upon conviction shall be subject to the penalty therein prescribed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 24, page 51, line 25, after the word "laborers," to insert "and induced and assisted immigrants," and on page 52, line 1, after the word "employ," to insert "for such purposes and for detail upon additional service under this act when not so engaged," so as to read:

Provided, That said Secretary, in the enforcement of that portion of this act which excludes contract laborers, and induced and assisted immigrants, may employ, for such purposes and for detail upon additional service under this act when not so engaged, without reference to the provisions of the said civil-service act, or to the various acts relative to the compilation of the official register, such persons as he may deem advisable and from time to time fix, raise, or decrease their compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 9, after the word "act," to strike out "$50,000" and to insert "$100,000," so as to read:

He may draw annually from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act $100,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 28, page 54, line 12, after the word "organization," to strike out "entering" and to insert "entertaining," so as to read:

SEC. 28. That any person who knowingly aids or assists any anarchist or any person who believes in or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or who disbelieves in or is opposed to organized government, or all forms of law, or who advocates the assassination of public officials, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, before the amendment in section 28, on page 54, line 12, is finally adopted I have a suggestion to make to the committee. I understand, of course, that the amendment has been made to correct the misprinting of a word. As corrected the language reads:

Or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government.

I think the word "entertaining" only weakens the sentence, and that if it were stricken out, so that the sentence would read "teaching disbelief," it would be a stronger sentence. Though it is not very material, I make the suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, this amendment has been made to correct a misprint; but to strike out the word "entertaining" would change the present law, for the language of the present law is "entertaining and teaching."

Mr. REED. Very well; though I think it should be merely "teaching." If you have got to prove both entertaining and teaching, you are not as strongly situated as if you simply had to prove teaching.

I move, however, in accordance with a suggestion which has been made to me by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to change the word "and," in line 12, to the word "or," so that the clause would read:

Or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining or teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The committee accepts the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 30, page 56, line 2, after the words "Bureau of Immigration," to strike out "and Naturalization," so as to read:

SEC. 30. That there shall be maintained a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 33, page 58, line 21, after the word "reshipping," to insert "under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe to prevent aliens not admissible under any law or treaty from remaining permanently in the United States," and, on page 59, line 3, after the word "given," at the end of line 2, to insert "by the master or the seaman himself," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That in case any such alien intends to reship on board any other vessel bound to any foreign port or place, he shall be allowed to land for the purpose of so reshipping, under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe to prevent aliens not admissible under any law or treaty from remaining permanently in the United States, and may be paid off, discharged, and permitted to remove his effects, anything in such laws or treaties or in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, provided due notice of such proposed action first be given by the master or the seaman himself to the principal immigration officer in charge at the port of arrival.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 34, page 59, line 5, after the word "shall," to strike out "desert his vessel" and to insert the word "land"; and, in line 6, after the words "United States," to strike out "or who shall land therein," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 34. That any alien seaman who shall land in a port of the United States contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States, and shall, at any time within three years thereafter, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and brought before a board of special inquiry for examination as to his qualifications for admission to the United States, and if not admitted said alien seaman shall be deported at the expense of the appropriation for this act as provided in section 20 of this act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no desire to be pestiferous or troublesome, but before we adopt this amendment I wish to ask the chairman of the committee or some other member of the committee if the object of these sections is not to prohibit what is commonly called desertion by seamen?

Mr. LODGE. Not at all, Mr. President. The sections are very carefully drawn to avoid that. That is the reason why we propose to eliminate the word "desert." One of the most prolific sources of evasion of the immigration laws, however, has been by reason of people coming to this country occupying some position on a ship. Having failed, perhaps, in many cases to come in as immigrants, they come as seamen, shipping for merely the voyage here as stewards or stokers. They merely land on the wharf from the ship and never pass through the immigration inspection at all. Over 15,000 such cases occurred two years ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 35, page 60, line 7, after the words "sum of," to insert "$25, and pending departure of the vessel the alien shall be detained and treated in hospital under supervision of immigration officials at the expense of the vessel," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 35. That it shall be unlawful for any vessel carrying passengers between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country, upon arrival in the United States, to have on board employed thereon any alien afflicted with idiocy, imbecility, insanity, epilepsy, tuberculosis in any form, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, if it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor, from an examination made by a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service, and is so certified by such officer, that any such alien was so afflicted at the time he was shipped or engaged and taken on board such vessel and that the existence of such affliction might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time; and for every such alien so afflicted on board any such vessel at the time of arrival the owner, agent, consignee, or master thereof shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $25, and pending departure of the vessel the alien shall be detained and treated in hospital under supervision of immigration officials at the expense of the vessel; and no vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability of the payment of such fine and while it remains unpaid: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine: Provided further, That such fine may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, be mitigated or remitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 36, page 61, line 5, after the word "has," to strike out "deserted" and insert "illegally landed from," so as to read:

SEC. 36. That upon arrival of any vessel in the United States from any foreign port or place it shall be the duty of the owner, agent, consignee, or master thereof to deliver to the principal immigration officer in charge of the port of arrival lists containing the names of all aliens employed on such vessel, stating the positions they respectively hold in the ship's company, when and where they were respectively shipped or engaged, and specifying those to be paid off and discharged in the port of arrival; or lists containing so much of such information as the Secretary of Labor shall by regulation prescribe; and after the arrival of any such vessel it shall be the duty of such owner, agent, consignee, or master to report to such immigration officer, in writing, as soon as discovered, all cases in which any such alien has illegally landed from the vessel, giving a description of such alien, together with any information likely to lead to his apprehension, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment which has just been agreed to, and very properly agreed to, which shows the purpose which I was indicating to him. The House bill employed the word "deserted," which was a technical word arising under treaty. We struck it out, and put in the words "illegally landed from," which have reference only to the provisions of this act.

Mr. REED. I think the committee is right in its contention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments, save those which have been passed over.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it may be a little out of order, but I desire to recur now to the much-discussed amendment on page 41, which was amended so as to read, "unless the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that to refuse treatment would be inhumane or cause unusual hardship or suffering."

I suggest to the committee that there be added to that amendment as now adopted a clause similar to the one found on page 60, which provides that an alien detained and treated in the hospitals under the supervision of immigration officials shall be kept there at the expense of the vessel. I think if that clause were added to the provision on page 41 it would have a tendency to bring about the very object the committee had in view, namely, to penalize the vessel owner for bringing over those who are afflicted with disease which could have been detected.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment on page 60 includes the words "and pending departure of the vessel."

Mr. REED. We will have to modify that language.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that will have to be modified. Of course, if an alien is not admitted to hospital treatment he remains on the vessel under treatment of the ship's surgeon.

Mr. REED. I suggest this language to come in after the word "suffering," in line 9, page 41:

If, under the order of the Secretary of Labor, such immigrant shall be admitted to the hospital, he shall be treated under the supervision of the immigration officials and at the expense of the vessel transporting such immigrant.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I accept that amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] makes a suggestion to me which will improve the wording of the amendment and accomplish the same result, namely, to add, after the word "suffering," the words "in which case the alien shall be treated in the hospital under the supervision of immigration officials at the expense of the vessel transporting him." I suggest that as an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The committee will accept that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That does not affect the amendment as adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. It is practically a new amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, line 9, after the word "suffering," it is proposed to insert "in which case the alien shall be treated in the hospital under the supervision of immigration officials at the expense of the vessel transporting him."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are certain amendments which, the Chair understands, were passed over. The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 2, line 18, after the words "United States," the committee proposes to insert "except that with respect to an alien accompanied by his wife, child, or children said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child." Mr. O'GORMAN has proposed an amendment to the amendment, as follows:

In line 18 strike out the words "an alien accompanied by his" and insert the word "the," and after the word "child" insert "of an alien," so as to read: "except that with respect to the wife, child, or children of an alien said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is absent to-day, and I suggest that that amendment be allowed to go over.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think that what the Senator from New York seeks to accomplish will perhaps be better accomplished by an amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], which, in lieu of the amendment of the committee in lines 18, 19, and 20, proposes to insert these words:

Provided, That children under 15 years of age who accompany their father or their mother shall not be subjected to said tax.

After hearing his statement, in view of the fact that the Senator from Minnesota is not present, and it is acceptable to the committee, I suggest that as an amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not it would be acceptable to the Senator from New York. I would not undertake to pass on that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am perfectly willing that the amendment shall go over.

Mr. REED. I think it ought to go over.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Minnesota, who has offered the amendment which the Senator from South Carolina has just described and which I think is very good, is not present, either.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be passed over. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, in section 3, page 6, line 17, after the word "unskilled," to insert "mental or manual."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. REED. That amendment was passed over at the request of the committee, and I had assumed that the committee would probably have something to suggest.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the committee, having gone very thoroughly into this matter, and being of the opinion that no other wording would so accurately reach the object which this clause was intended to reach, has seen no reason at all to recede from the proposed amendment. The chairman of the committee took occasion the other day to try to explain fully just why it was necessary to use this phraseology.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, getting no very definite information as to the classes at which this particular provision was directed in the course of the discussion the other day, I took the matter up with the Department of Labor, and I have here a memorandum showing some typical cases of alien contract laborers admitted to the United States on the ground that they were engaged in labor the predominant feature of which was mental rather than manual. I will ask that the memorandum be printed as a part of the discussion without reading, but I will refer to a few of the cases to which it adverts:

CASE OF HENRY STOWE.

An English-Canadian railroad section hand, imported by the New York Central Railroad for service as a section foreman on its tracks. Admitted by the Department of Commerce and Labor on January 8, 1912, as a "mental laborer."

I should be disposed to differ from the construction placed upon the act by the Department of Labor. I think it is going a long way to hold that a section foreman is engaged in labor the predominant feature of which is mental in character.

CASE OF CHARLES EDWARD CLARKE.

English-Canadian loom repairer; rejected by the board of special inquiry at Port Huron, Mich., on September 21, 1911, the record being forwarded to the department on September 26 by the officer in charge with recommendation that the appeal be sustained, as the claim had been made, and not disproved, that the alien was to be employed as foreman in a woolen mill that had advertised for an employee of that kind in a foreign newspaper, and that the mental elements would predominate in such employment. The alien, without awaiting for the decision of the appeal, entered the United States surreptitiously, and was later found in the employ of the mill in the capacity of an ordinary workman, showing that he was being imported under the guise of a foreman, a subterfuge quite frequently resorted to; whereupon he was arrested and deported.

So you will observe that the gentleman did not succeed in getting into this country on the ground that he was a mental laborer.

CASE OF ANDRE PIGNARD.

A French silk-tulle weaver, admitted by the department on March 5, 1912, it appearing from the record that he was to occupy the position of foreman in a silk-manufacturing mill—it also being claimed that labor of like kind unemployed could not at the time be found in the United States.

So this particular individual came in under the provision which has been adverted to covering cases where it is impossible to find laborers to do the work in this country.

CASE OF GEORGE DAVIES.

English golf links "green keeper," admitted by the department on March 11, 1912, because it was found that the alien was to supervise the work of the ordinary laborers in keeping the golf links of the club importing him in proper condition.

And so on through this list, Mr. President, which convinces me that the evil that exists, so far as it does exist at all, is due to an unwarrantable construction which has been given by the Department of Labor in certain instances to the present act. The relief is sought simply because in some particular instances the Department of Labor extends the list of those embraced within the class of mental laborers to limits that are entirely unwarranted by the law.

I do not find that there has ever been any authoritative adjudication holding a man to be engaged in labor the predominant feature of which is mental where there was any particular reason why the man should be excluded from this country as a laborer. I freely admit that by an erroneous and absurd construction of the present act some people can get into this country upon the ground that they are engaged not in manual labor but in mental labor; but under any proper construction of the act I do not think there is any evil whatever to be remedied.

It has been suggested that musicians sometimes are brought into this country under contract, and the question is raised as to whether the members of a band are engaged in mental labor or in manual labor. It may be that some cases of that kind do arise—I dare say they do—in which we all agree that they ought not to be admitted if they come here under contract, or by the inducement or solicitation against which the bill is aimed. The solicitor for the department suggests that instead of the language used in the amendment certain language used by him might be employed. I read from the letter:

The department fixed upon the insertion of the words "mental or manual," in line 17, page 6, as the briefest and most direct manner of accomplishing the purpose in view, because the distinction between mental and manual labor is the gist of the Attorney General's opinion. Of course, however, it has no pride of authorship in this matter, and would be glad to see the purpose accomplished in any way that might seem acceptable to you and other Senators interested in the subject. Thus you might think that the object can be accomplished just as well, and the use of the words to which exception has been taken avoided, by inserting in lieu of such words some such expression as this, "except only as hereinafter provided," thus specifically indicating the connection between the excluding provision and the exceptions later appearing in the proposed law.

But, of course, to incorporate language such as that would exclude everybody except those specifically mentioned in the subsequent clause. I find, however, that greater liberality has been exercised by the department in the construction it gives to the words "recognized learned profession," because it appears that persons belonging to almost all of the so-called professions, whether heretofore denominated as learned professions or whether they are recognized learned professions, are regarded as being entitled to admission under the exception. For instance, I am told in the letter from the department as follows:

In United States v. Laws (163 U. S., 258) the Supreme Court held that a chemist being brought to the United States under contract for employment in a sugar factory was undoubtedly a member of a recognized learned profession; and the department has never hesitated to admit all kinds of chemists coming to the United States to follow that vocation. Reference was also frequently made to engineers. The department has repeatedly held that all branches of the engineering profession are to be regarded as a "recognized learned profession." The case that you had particularly in mind, to wit, the importation of a man skilled in the propagation of sugar beets for seeding purposes, I have no doubt whatever would be regarded, if it ever arose, as falling within the exception in favor of the importation of labor on the ground that labor of like kind unemployed could not be found here if, indeed, the alien would not belong to some branch of the chemistry profession, a soil chemist, for instance.

In view of these considerations, Mr. President, I do not feel like pressing the objection I made to this portion of the bill. I ask, however, that the entire communication be printed as part of the discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 1½, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to our conversation of Friday last, regarding the debate in the Senate on Thursday with respect to the proposal of the Immigration Committee to insert in section 3 of the pending immigration bill, on page 6, line 17, after the word "unskilled," the words "mental or manual," I have the honor to hand you herewith a memorandum furnishing briefly the facts in a number of cases selected hurriedly and somewhat at random from among hundreds of similar cases, the records of which are on file in the Bureau of Immigration, illustrating the difficulty in the administration of the law which the department desires to overcome, and in pursuance of which desire the amendment mentioned was suggested by the department to the Senate Committee on Immigration. The facts of these cases speak for themselves to a considerable extent, but in order to make their illustrative character perfectly clear there has been inserted in the memorandum, following some of the statements of fact, brief comment with regard to the particular case covered. I also wish to set forth the reasons which, in the department's judgment, render it imperative that the amendment proposed by the Senate committee, and passed over temporarily by the Senate on Thursday last, or some other amendment calculated to effect the purpose in view, shall be adopted before the immigration act is passed.

It seems to me that most, if not all, of the objections voiced by you and several of the other Senators who took part in the debate would not have been raised if the several disjointed provisions of section 3 relating to alien contract laborers had been brought together and their joint effect considered. Because of the manner in which section 3 is constructed, obviously they could not conveniently be so joined in the draft. As a preliminary to my discussion of them I bring them together as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States (p. 4, lines 21–22): Persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, ASSISTED, ENCOURAGED, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, WHETHER SUCH OFFERS OR PROMISES ARE TRUE OR FALSE, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled, mental or manual (p. 6, lines 10–17): Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country, AND THE QUESTION OF THE NECESSITY OF IMPORTING SUCH SKILLED LABOR IN ANY PARTICULAR INSTANCE MAY BE DETERMINED BY THE SECRETARY OF LABOR UPON THE APPLICATION OF ANY PERSON INTERESTED, SUCH APPLICATION TO BE MADE BEFORE SUCH IMPORTATION, AND SUCH DETERMINATION BY THE SECRETARY OF LABOR TO BE REACHED AFTER A FULL HEARING AND AN INVESTIGATION INTO THE FACTS OF THE CASE (p. 10, lines 6–15): Provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession" (p. 11, lines 2–8).

So much of the above as appears in ordinary type is the existing law (sec. 2, act of Feb. 20, 1907; 34 Stat., 898); so much as appears in capitals represents changes of language placed in the measure by the House of Representatives in the interest of clearness and exact consistency with other provisions of the proposed law and in conformity with recommendations growing out of the work of the congressional Immigration Commission and of the Bureau of Immigration; and only the words "mental or manual," italicized, are suggested by the Senate committee. The law constituted of the provisions above quoted is what is commonly known as the alien contract-labor law, passed first in 1885 (23 Stat., 332), slightly amended in 1888 (25 Stat., 565), again in 1891 (26 Stat., 1084), again in 1893 (27 Stat., 569), and finally brought into substantially the form now proposed in 1903 (32 Stat., 1213). From 1903, if not even an earlier date, until June, 1909, the alien contract-labor law was construed by the Bureau of Immigration and the department of which that bureau was a part to include all kinds of labor, whether mental or manual, or a combination of the two, the theory of such construction being that the use in the law of the words "labor of any kind, skilled or unskilled," or, as they appeared in the earlier statutes, "labor or service of any kind," and the insertion in the statute of special exceptions to this broad and general provision, justified the conclusion that Congress intended that the law should reach all classes of aliens induced to come to this country by an offer or promise of employment, except such as Congress had seen fit to specifically except from said general provision. But on June 2, 1909, the Attorney General rendered an opinion (27 Ops., 383) holding that an alien who was being imported under contract to serve an American employer as superintendent of a lumbering camp was not excluded by the alien contract-labor law, and based such holding upon a theory argued largely from the decision of the Supreme Court, construing the original contract-labor law of 1885, in Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States (143 U. S., 457). Thereupon the Bureau of Immigration and the Department of Commerce and Labor—and, commencing with its formation, this department—adopted an application of the law under which the effort was made to distinguish between cases of manual labor and cases of mental labor, which application of the law was continued until January, 1914, when the Supreme Court rendered its decision in Lapina v. Williams (232 U. S., 78), construing provisions of the law other than those relating to contract labor, but holding, broadly, that, inasmuch as section 2 of the act of 1907 "contains its own specific provisos and limitations," such provisos and limitations, "on familiar principles, strongly tend to negative any other and implied exception" (p. 92), and also pointing out that after the Supreme Court rendered its decision in the Holy Trinity case the law was changed so as to specifically except from the operation of the contract-labor provisions "ministers of any religious denomination" (pp. 88–89). Having learned by actual experience that it was so difficult as to be practically impossible to distinguish in many instances between mental and manual vocations or to determine which of the two elements predominated in any particular calling, and having found that because of this difficulty and because of the tendency toward widening which always occurs once that a breach has been made in the administration of a statute of this kind, that many American workers of classes undoubtedly intended to be protected by the contract-labor provisions were not receiving due protection, this department welcomed the decision of the Supreme Court in the Lapina case, although merely obiter dicta for the particular purpose in mind, as a means of escaping from the ill effects of the Attorney General's opinion and of the effort to enforce the law in accordance with the terms of such opinion, and it accordingly gave instructions to the immigration officials to return to the construction of the law which had been followed uniformly prior to the handing down of the said opinion.

The suggestion made to the Senate Immigration Committee in the letter of the Secretary of Labor (S. Doc. No. 451, p. 5), adopted by the Senate committee, as shown on page 5 of its report (S. Rept. No. 355), was merely with the purpose of clarifying the situation and making it certain that the construction of the law followed by the bureau and department prior to June, 1909, and since January, 1914, and intimated by the Supreme Court, obiter dicta, to be correct, should obtain in applying the new law instead of the construction given the statute in the Attorney General's opinion. Obviously if Congress should pass the pending measure without inserting therein some expression indicating that it does not approve of the construction placed upon the law by the Attorney General, those who wish to narrow the application of the statute or gradually to break it down will be afforded the strongest kind of an argument with which to support the contention that the law applies only to manual laborers, and that in every case where it is shown that the mental element predominates over the manual the department must admit the alien contract laborer, and the Government can not proceed against the person or corporation making the importation.

Without including in this letter a specific reference to each of the cases covered by the inclosed memorandum, it seems desirable at this time to set up several illustrations. Take the very case to which the Attorney General's opinion relates. There was nothing in the record to show that there were not in the United States unemployed at the time the alien McNair applied for admission a number of skilled logging and lumbering men who through aptitude and experience and the possession of inherent executive ability were perfectly capable of filling the position of superintendent of a logging camp. Were not those unemployed American skilled workmen entitled to believe that the law protected them against the importation of a foreigner to take the job which they were qualified to fill and anxious to obtain? Again, take the case of lithographers. Can men following that vocation be classed as manual laborers without doing violence to common sense? They are of so high a class that it has been contended that they are artists (26 Ops. Atty. Gen., 284, 285–286); yet everyone familiar with the history of contract-labor legislation knows that the lithographers' union has always supposed that American lithographers were protected against the importation of foreigners, and have always insisted that they be given such protection; in fact, in the very case in which the opinion just cited was rendered the union complained of the action of the department in admitting the two foreign lithographers on the theory that labor of like kind unemployed could not be found here. Take again the case of musicians—members of bands and orchestras—who have not yet attained that standing in the musical world which would entitle them to be regarded as artists. The union having in its membership many American musicians of this character was one of the most active advocates of the contract-labor law, and naturally has always supposed that its members were protected by such law. Yet who would undertake to hold that such a musician is a manual laborer? Who could do so without making himself ridiculous? The opinion in the McNair case resulted, of course, in the admission of the alien and in the establishment of a precedent under which all manner of superintendents, foremen, and overseers, whose work is of a directory nature, requiring the use of the brain to a greater extent than the use of the brawn, could be admitted. The admission of a lithographer or a musician establishes a precedent which can readily be used by members of the large numbers of trades and occupations in which the performance of the work requires a mental training and aptitude which predominates over the manual dexterity and is necessary to the exercise of the latter. Are not these high-class American operatives and workmen entitled to the same protection that is afforded by the law to the common manual laborer and the skilled mechanic working mostly with his hands?

It seems to me that when the law as proposed and its exceptions are read together every case suggested during the course of Thursday's debate can readily be taken care of. At any rate, it can be stated most positively that during the long period when the law was given the construction which it is proposed to have the Senate approve by inserting the words "mental or manual" there was not the least difficulty in admitting to the United States peculiarly skilled foreign workmen, whether their vocation was mental or manual, or a combination of both, in every instance in which the establishment here of a new industry or a scarcity here of skilled men to be engaged as employees in an established industry was shown to exist and in which the aliens whom it was desired to employ came to a port of the United States and applied for admission. The only difficulty that was encountered in cases of this kind arose from the fact that the law contained no provisions under which the right of the employer to make the importation could be determined in advance of the aliens' application for admission, men belonging to the higher-class vocations often not being willing to leave their foreign homes unless they could be assured in advance that they would be promptly landed on reaching a United States port. This difficulty is taken care of by the provision inserted in the law by the House appearing on page 10 (lines 6–15) of the bill as reported by the Senate committee, which has been amended by the Senate in its adoption of the recommendation of the committee for the elimination from the provision of the words stricken through in the reported print of the bill, lines 15 to 25, page 10, and 1 to 2, page 11. The reasons for eliminating this awkward and, it is believed, unworkable plan are briefly shown on page 6 of Senate Report No. 355, and in more detail on page 6 of Senate Document No. 451, the latter being this department's letter to the chairman of the committee, recommending the striking out of the words in question.

In the debate reference was frequently made to chemists, several of the Senators apparently being of the opinion that a chemist is not a member of a "recognized learned profession." In United States v. Laws (163 U. S., 258), the Supreme Court held that a chemist being brought to the United States under contract for employment in a sugar factory was undoubtedly a member of a recognized learned profession; and the department has never hesitated to admit all kinds of chemists coming to the United States to follow that vocation. Reference was also frequently made to engineers. The department has repeatedly held that all branches of the engineering profession are to be regarded as a "recognized learned profession." The case that you had particularly in mind, to wit, the importation of a man skilled in the propagation of sugar beets for seeding purposes, I have no doubt whatever would be regarded, if it ever arose, as falling within the exception in favor of the importation of labor, on the ground that labor of like kind unemployed could not be found here, if, indeed, the alien would not belong to some branch of the chemistry profession—a soil chemist, for instance. There is no trouble in taking care of these exceptional cases. Probably the law could not be so drawn as to include within its exceptions, in terms, every variety of exception that might be encountered in practice; but, of course, the statute must be prepared so as to lay down a positive and broad rule and keep the exceptions closely enough confined to prevent their negativing the effect of the general provisions, leaving a reasonable application of the measure to specific cases to the discretion of the department charged with the enforcement of the law.

I note also from the debate that several of the Senators seem to have been laboring under the impression that decision of all these matters is vested by the statute in "the immigrant inspector or agent." They have overlooked the fact that no alien can be excluded from the United States by an immigrant inspector. All the inspector can do is to admit or, if he is not satisfied that the applicant is entitled to admission, to have such applicant set aside from the inspection line and held for examination by a board of special inquiry. The board is composed of three inspectors, always selected because of long experience and demonstrated capacity for this kind of work, and even the board can not finally say that the alien has no right to enter, in cases of the nature under discussion, the alien having the right of appeal to the Secretary of Labor, before whom every reasonable opportunity is afforded for the presentation of evidence and the submission of argument by or on behalf of the alien and by or on behalf of the person or corporation that is attempting to make the importation. Under the law as now proposed, anyone desiring to import a skilled laborer from abroad could lay his entire case before the Secretary of Labor in advance of sending for the alien, present his evidence, make his argument, and, if the permission is granted, send for the alien, with the assurance that on arrival he would be admitted, so far as the contract-labor provisions were concerned, immediately on landing from the ship. Surely no plan better calculated properly to enforce the law, with fairness to all concerned, could possibly be devised than that proposed in the bill now pending before the Senate and the report of the committee thereupon.

The department fixed upon the insertion of the words "mental or manual," in line 17, page 6, as the briefest and most direct manner of accomplishing the purpose in view, because the distinction between mental and manual labor is the gist of the Attorney General's opinion. Of course, however, it has no pride of authorship in this matter and would be glad to see the purpose accomplished in any way that might seem acceptable to you and other Senators interested in the subject. Thus you might think that the object can be accomplished just as well and the use of the words to which exception has been taken avoided by inserting in lieu of such words some such expression as this, "except only as hereinafter provided," thus specifically indicating the connection between the excluding provision and the exceptions later appearing in the proposed law, and also now standing in the existing law, and showing that the Senate is following the obiter dicta suggestion of the Supreme Court in the Lapina case, supra, that the insertion of exceptions shall "negative any other and implied exception." I trust, however, that upon reading the foregoing you may reach the conclusion that the Senate committee amendment should be adopted as proposed.

Very truly, yours,

J. B. DENSMORE,
Acting Secretary.

MEMORANDUM SHOWING SOME TYPICAL CASES OF ALIEN CONTRACT LABORERS ADMITTED TO THE UNITED STATES ON THE BASIS OF THE OPINION OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL DATED JUNE 2, 1909 (27 OPS., 383).

CASE OF HENRY STOWE.

An English-Canadian railroad section hand, imported by the New York Central Railroad for service as a section foreman on its tracks. Admitted by the Department of Commerce and Labor on January 8, 1912, as a "mental laborer."

CASE OF CHARLES EDWARD CLARKE.

English-Canadian loom repairer, rejected by the board of special inquiry at Port Huron, Mich., on September 21, 1911, the record being forwarded to the department on September 26 by the officer in charge with the recommendation that the appeal be sustained, as the claim had been made, and not disproved, that the alien was to be employed as foreman in a woolen mill that had advertised for an employee of that kind in a foreign newspaper, and that the mental elements would predominate in such employment. The alien, without waiting for the decision of the appeal, entered the United States surreptitiously and was later found in the employ of the mill in the capacity of an ordinary workman, showing that he was being imported under the guise of a foreman, a subterfuge quite frequently resorted to, whereupon he was arrested and deported.

CASE OF ANDRE PIGNARD.

A French silk-tulle weaver, admitted by the department on March 5, 1912, it appearing from the record that he was to occupy the position of foreman in a silk-manufacturing mill, it also being claimed that labor of like kind, unemployed, could not at the time be found in the United States.

NOTE.—The above cases sufficiently illustrate the effect of the Attorney General's opinion upon the admission of superintendents, overseers, and foremen, and skilled laborers employed in like capacity.

CASE OF GEORGE DAVIES.

English golf links "green keeper," admitted by the department on March 11, 1912, because it was found that the alien was to supervise the work of the ordinary laborers in keeping the golf links of the club importing him in proper condition.

CASE OF HARRY HOUGHTON.

English-Canadian car weigher, admitted by the department on October 31, 1910, having been imported by one of the railroad companies for employment as a weigher of cars. The opinion of the Attorney General was relied upon and the conclusion reached that the weighing of railway cars was more mental than manual in character.

CASE OF EUGENE PARE.

French-Canadian telegraph operator, admitted by the department on February 28, 1911, being imported by a railroad company to work at his trade, the decision being that such occupation is of a more mental than manual nature.

CASE OF WILLIAM JOHN SELDON AND FREDERICK CHARLES BROWN.

English-Canadian musicians (members of a band), admitted by the department on May 19, 1910, being under contract to serve as musicians with "Kemp's Wild West Show" at $8 per week. In this case the bureau recommended exclusion, but the department overruled the recommendation and ordered the aliens landed, it being considered that the playing of music did not involve manual labor, or, at least, that the mental element predominated.

CASE OF ANTONIO CAYOL AND MANUEL FERREIRA PEREZ.

Spanish boys, attempting, in March, 1910, to enter Porto Rico to accept employment previously contracted for in retail merchandise houses. The bureau recommended exclusion, holding that, inasmuch as the boys were mere apprentices and would be obliged, for some time at least, to perform the ordinary heavy work around the store, the manual element predominated; but such recommendation was overruled by the department and the aliens landed upon the theory that the occupation of salesman in the store is a mental occupation.

CASE OF JOHN A. WATSON.

Scotch-Canadian clerk, admitted by the department on December 3, 1909, being under contract to accept employment as clerk in a dry-goods house. The bureau recommended exclusion, expressing the view that selling dry goods over a counter was an occupation in which the manual elements exceeded the mental, but the department ruled otherwise.

CASE OF ALBERT LEVY.

Turkish boy, imported by a post-card house in St. Louis to fill the position of salesman or "hawker" of picture post cards. Secured admission on primary inspection by not disclosing the facts regarding the offer of employment, but was subsequently arrested. Finally released by the department on March 9, 1912, the holding being that the occupation was mental rather than manual.

NOTE.—The above cases sufficiently illustrate how efforts to administer the law in such a way as to follow the distinction laid down in the Attorney General's opinion necessarily constantly tend toward the cutting down of the provisions of the statute and the admission to the country of all alien workmen with respect to whom it is not clearly shown that the occupation is of a strictly manual nature.

CASE OF OMER DUBE AND JEAN DESAUTELS.

French-Canadian organ mechanics, rejected by the department in May, 1912, on the ground that the claim that the aliens were to be employed as foremen in an organ factory was not established by the evidence; later admitted on the basis of additional evidence showing that the work they were to perform was of a peculiarly skilled nature and that men capable of performing it could not be found unemployed in the United States.

NOTE.—The case last given illustrates not only the fact that employers are every ready to seize upon the pretext that alien employees are being brought in for supervisory work, that being a claim easy to set up and difficult to disprove, but also the fact that it is perfectly easy for employers to import foreign skilled help when there is a real scarcity or nonexistence of such help in the United States, the department being willing to admit upon the second claim, although the importers had failed to prove the first claim to its satisfaction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 14, line 4, after the word "solicit," to insert the words "or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, has the committee some suggestion to make with reference to this amendment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the committee has no suggestions to make. This language was put in at the suggestion of the solicitors charged with the legal administration of the provision. They asked that we insert it in order to avoid certain difficulties they had already experienced in the interpretation of the provision, and at the worst it can only be a strained construction. I think it is all right as it is. The committee has no suggestions to make.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it has been repeatedly said by Senators who have debated this bill that under the law as it is here proposed, if a citizen of this country were merely to write a letter to an alien stating the advantages of this country he would thereby become liable to punishment. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] mentioned a case which, as he stated it, was a very aggravated one.

I have not had an opportunity to examine these phases of the bill. If it is susceptible of such a construction as that, it ought not to be enacted. If it is not susceptible of that construction, the fact ought to be known. So far as I am concerned, I am making these remarks now in order that if there is any Senator who has any further light to give us we may have it.

I want to prohibit contract labor being brought into this country, but I do not want to help pass a law that will result in the punishment of a man for merely stating the advantages of this country.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment, and I hope the amendment of the committee will not prevail.

The contract-labor law is very drastic now. The law as it was passed in 1907—and that was the law for some years, I believe—provides as follows:

That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: * * * persons hereinafter called contract laborers who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, expressed or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled.

I believe that provision is about as drastic as it ought to be. I believe the language used in the proposed amendment goes even further than the Senator from Missouri has stated. I believe it would be possible to construe it so that if some friend of a prospective immigrant should go to a bank and ask for a loan to assist his friend to purchase a ticket, that could be construed to be a violation of law.

I think it is wholly unnecessary to embody in the law a provision so drastic as this one is, and I ask for a roll call on the amendment because I shall vote against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, lines 4 and 5, after the word "solicit" and the comma, it is proposed to insert "or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the roll call begins, do I understand that the Senator from North Dakota has moved to strike out, and that a vote in the affirmative is a vote in favor of striking out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no. The Senator from North Dakota asks for the yeas and nays on the committee amendment. The question will be on agreeing to the committee amendment. Those who are in favor of the amendment will vote "yea"; those who are opposed to it will vote "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. O'GORMAN's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. RANSDELL's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] on public business.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. STONE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I do not see him present, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. DU PONT. I wish to inquire whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DU PONT. As I have a general pair with him, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I am informed by his colleague [Mr. LODGE] that if the junior Senator from Massachusetts were present he would vote as I shall vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] are engaged on business of the Senate at a hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is temporarily absent from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—45.

Chamberlain	Kern	Reed	Thomas
Chilton	Lane	Robinson	Thompson
Clapp	Lea, Tenn.	Root	Thornton

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 14, line 8, after the word "act," to insert: "and have been imported with the permission of the Secretary of Labor in accordance with said section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 15, line 5, after the word "solicit," to insert "or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 18, line 23, after the word "any," to strike out the words "mental or."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move, as a substitute for the committee amendment, to insert, after the word "mental," the words "defect other than those above specifically named," so that, if amended, the clause will read:

It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien afflicted with any mental defect other than those above specifically named, or physical defect of a nature—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On behalf of the committee, I accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 23, after the word "mental," it is proposed to insert the words "defect other than those above specifically named."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment will be disagreed to, then, without objection. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which proposes to insert, after the word "mental," the words "defect other than those above specifically named."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 19, line 5, after the word "such," to strike out the words "mental or."

Mr. LODGE. That is the same thing.

Mr. REED. The words "mental or" ought not to be stricken out there. They ought to remain in. The committee amendment simply ought to be withdrawn, in order to make it conform to the language previously used.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the subsequent amendment, after the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, would be simply accepting the Senate amendment striking out the words "mental or."

Mr. REED. No; you want "mental" here. We have provided for a "mental defect other than those above specifically mentioned," and therefore the word "mental" ought to remain in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well, Mr. President. I accept the amendment, and the committee recedes from its amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair understand the situation. Is the same language to be inserted on page 19 that was inserted at the foot of page 18?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; just leave out the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the committee amendments have been disposed of now save the amendment on page 2, which has been passed over to await the return of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a few days ago I raised a question as to the phrase "constitutional psychopathic inferiority." I afterwards withdrew any objection to it. I desire to have read, for the information of the Senate, a letter which discusses that somewhat peculiar phrase.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Missouri for a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the letter be read that I sent to the desk.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR MENTAL HYGIENE,
50 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK CITY, December 12, 1914.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: My attention has been called to the debate in the Senate—December 10, 1914—on the proposed amendment to the immigration law which adds "constitutional psychopathic inferiority" to the excludable conditions.

This is one of the amendments which was suggested by a number of officials dealing with insanity and mental deficiency in the different States and by bodies of alienists last winter. It has been urged by the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, the American Medico-Psychological Association, the New York Psychiatrical Society, the National Association for the Study of Epilepsy, the Mental Hygiene Committee of the New York State Charities' Aid Association, and by a number of State medical societies. It was also recommended by Mr. Spencer L. Dawes in his report to the governor of New York as special commissioner on the alien insane; by Dr. L. Vernon Briggs, representing the Massachusetts State Board of Insanity; by Dr. Frank Woodbury, representing the committee in lunacy of the Pennsylvania State Board of Charities; and by Dr. Hugh Young, representing the Maryland State Lunacy Commission.

It is felt by all who have devoted especial study to the matter that the elimination of any of the amendments proposed for the exclusion of insane and mentally defective immigrants would be a distinct loss, for all of them were suggested only after very careful study of the problem at ports of entry and in public institutions of the United States which bear the heavy burden of the care of insane and mentally defective aliens.

Respectfully, yours, THOMAS W. SALMON.

Mr. GALLINGER. Inclosed in that letter from Dr. Salmon, who is a very distinguished physician, is a memorandum entitled "Reasons for adding 'constitutional psychopathic inferiority' to the excludable classes named in the immigration law." This is a very interesting memorandum, which I think possibly the conference committee might want to examine if there is any controversy over this matter, and I ask that without reading it be printed in connection with the letter just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

REASONS FOR ADDING "CONSTITUTIONAL PSYCHOPATHIC INFERIORITY" TO THE EXCLUDABLE CLASSES NAMED IN THE IMMIGRATION LAW.

The Government medical officer who is examining immigrants must certify diseased conditions which he finds in the precise language of the immigration law. In no other way can the question of the admission or exclusion of the immigrant be brought before the boards of special inquiry which have the power of deciding the matter. For this reason it is absolutely necessary that medical terms in the immigration law should admit of only one interpretation. In order to do this such terms must be those in recognized use in medicine in this country at the present time. Thus, the term "tuberculosis," which has been in the immigration law since 1907, was used instead of "consumption," because it had a more precise meaning.

The amendments to the immigration bill now under consideration were urged upon Congress to afford this country better protection against the admission of insane or mentally defective immigrants and those likely to become insane than it has at the present time. If this purpose is to be accomplished, the law must name the conditions which it is desired to exclude by terms which will be incapable of misinterpretation by the examining medical officers upon whom the great responsibility of diagnosis rests.

If, as has happened in this case, a term unfamiliar to laymen and unfamiliar to some physicians not engaged in the special field of the alienist has to be used, it is an unfortunate but unavoidable necessity. The term "constitutional psychopathic inferiority" has a definite meaning in that branch of medical science which devotes itself to diseases of the mind.

Definitions are often less illuminating than descriptions, but this term can be defined with approximate correctness as a congenital defect in the emotional or volitional fields of mental activity which results in inability to make proper adjustments to the environment.

The present immigration law specifically mentions idiots, imbeciles, and feeble-minded persons as those whose exclusion is mandatory, and also mentions insane persons and those who have had former attacks of mental disease. Between those enumerated there is an important class which can best be described by the term "constitutional psychopathic inferiority." This condition, while not properly described as insanity or as mental deficiency, in which term we include idiocy, imbecility, and feeble-mindedness, is nevertheless the foundation for most of the types of mental disease. In many instances it is quite impossible, even with the most careful examination, to recognize the existence of constitutional psychopathic inferiority. The life history of the patient is often required for this purpose, but this is not a satisfactory reason for failing to make use of the term in an immigration law, for it is equally true that prostitutes, contract laborers, and persons belonging to many other excludable classes can not all be detected by an examination at the port of entry. It is true, however, that a competent medical examination can detect many cases of constitutional psychopathic inferiority, and that the present medical examination at Ellis Island and other ports of entry does detect such cases, but without avail, as there is no provision in the law for their exclusion.

It is necessary that persons with this condition should not be confounded from those who suffer from a purely intellectual defect. Many persons with marked evidence of constitutional psychopathic inferiority acquire knowledge with ease, and some graduate from college. Their inability to make use of acquired knowledge in governing their lives or meeting the various difficult situations which laws, social customs, and other environmental factors impose characterize the persons who possess constitutional psychopathic inferiority. Inability to make satisfactory adjustment to these factors often results in crime, and thus we find large numbers of persons in this class in the correctional institutions of this country. Those in whom constitutional psychopathic inferiority is shown, particularly in volitional fields, constitute a considerable proportion of habitual petty criminals, vagrants, tramps, and ne'er-do-wells, whose management is an important social problem. They yield readily to temptations of various kinds, and thus we find that a very large proportion of prostitutes, drug habitues, and alcoholics have constitutional psychopathic inferiority. The acquisition of information which would enable a normal person to support himself and his family and become a useful citizen is entirely wasted upon those who lack the power to make a proper choice in conduct or who lack the motive force to carry out any project requiring consecutive effort.

This term is in constant use as a classification of patients admitted to public hospitals for the insane. It means a very definite condition to those who are engaged in the special field of psychiatry. It has its place in textbooks on this subject, and a number of articles have appeared in current medical literature dealing with this condition.

The two following medical articles are general in their treatment of the subject and give very clear pictures of the condition which is described by this term:

"Constitutional inferiority and its psychoses," by Dr. C. P. Oberndorf, Journal of the American Medical Association, vol. 58, pp. 249–252. "Psychic constitutional inferiority—some fundamental conceptions," by Dr. Morris J. Karpas, New York Medical Journal, vol. 97, pp. 594–598.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The committee amendments having been completed, I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is one amendment which was not agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is understood. There is one amendment that went over.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 16, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 15, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for that mysterious providence which shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we may; for that wonderful patience and that love which suffereth long and is kind.

In our supremest moments Thou art with us; in our moments of defeat Thou dost wait upon us. When we stand on the mountain top of hope Thou art with us; when we are cast down into the valley of despair Thou dost wait upon us. When we are strong to resist temptation Thou art with us, and when we fall into sin Thou dost wait upon us. When our hearts are filled with the love of dear ones Thou art with us, and when they are taken from us Thou dost comfort and sustain us.

Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small;
Though with patience He stands waiting, with exactness grinds He all.

The end justifies the means, for in the dispensation of Thy providence Thou art working out for us a more exceeding weight of glory.

Help us to be true to ourselves, to others, and to Thee. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman sends up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 55.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn December 23, 1914, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Tuesday, December 29, 1914.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the House that I have consulted the majority leader of the Senate in reference to this resolution and have agreed with him to this time of adjournment. He states that the terms of the resolution will be satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it intended to take any adjournment over New Year's?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it is necessary to take any adjournment over New Year's by concurrent action of the two Houses. When we get to that day we can determine that matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that there may be some knowledge given to the Members of what the intention is, will the gentleman state just what it is?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I think if appropriation bills are ready and pushing when we reach New Year's Day we ought to go ahead with them. If they are not, why, as far as I am concerned, I shall be perfectly willing to adjourn over the day; but I think if there are appropriation bills here that require attention we ought to go on and dispose of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The purpose is not to adjourn for more than one or two days at the most?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; not at all.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Why not adjourn on Thursday preceding New Year's until the following Monday? The appropriation bills are getting along pretty fast, and I think we will get along faster with that understanding than we will without it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that when that time comes, as far as I am concerned, I shall be glad, as I always am, to follow the wishes of the House; but I find a very strong sentiment on this side of the House, among a large majority of the Members here, in favor of having a short Christmas holiday and disposing of the appropriation bills as rapidly as possible.

Mr. MANN. I suppose gentlemen on that side of the House may talk a little bit differently to the gentleman from Alabama than they do to me, and different gentlemen talk differently. I have had a great many protests from that side of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I have had a few, but I have found in talking to Members on this side of the House that a very large majority of them are anxious to dispose of the appropriation bills and be assured that we will get them through at an early date and have no cause for an extra session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why should anybody protest to the gentleman from Illinois? He is not running the House.

Mr. MANN. There are so many who think they are that they protest generally.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman considered adjourning early enough so as to give Members who live in the Middle West time to get to their homes before Christmas?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This adjournment on Wednesday evening will allow every man who lives this side of the Mississippi River to get home if he wants to, and Members who live on the other side of the Mississippi River do not usually go home for the Christmas holidays.

Mr. STAFFORD. If we are in session until late Wednesday night previous to Christmas, it will not permit men living this side of the Mississippi River to get home until Christmas Day, and that is not a very opportune time to begin the celebration of the Christmas holidays at home.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Wednesday is Calendar Wednesday, and, as a general rule, the attendance is not very full on that day. I have no doubt that the Members who have to get away on Wednesday afternoon can make arrangements so that they can get away.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood that a special rule was going to be brought in to take up the prohibition amendment on Tuesday and provide 10 hours' debate, which would run over into Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that one reason why I desire not to adjourn until Wednesday night is that I want to give an opportunity for the Rules Committee to bring out the rule for the consideration of the prohibition amendment on Tuesday. Personally I am opposed to the constitutional amendment, and when the time comes to vote on the amendment I intend to vote against it; but there are a large number of people in the United States who are demanding a vote on that question, and it has been the policy of the Democratic Party since it has been in control of this Government not to suppress votes on great questions when there are a large number of people demanding consideration, even if they are in the minority, as I think they will be on this question. I think that question ought to be disposed of, and it will be better to dispose of it before the Christmas holidays and have it out of the way before we settle down to the work of the session afterwards.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman intends to give them that for a Christmas present?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Although I intend to vote against the constitutional amendment, I will vote for the rule for its consideration, and I hope the Rules Committee may give an opportunity to take up the resolution and dispose of it on to-day week.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think that a week from Tuesday is an opportune time for Members to leave for home and escape voting on an important constitutional amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that probably some Members may not want to vote on that resolution. If they do not, they will find an excuse on any day in the year not to be here. But Members who want to go on record, I have no doubt, will all be here on Tuesday unless some unforeseen event keeps them away.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of Senators, $720,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We adjourned until 11 o'clock this morning, and I presume that a large share of the membership of the House may have failed to get the notice that the House was to meet at 11 o'clock. Why not pass over the mileage item until later in the day when Members will have come in?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we pass over the provision for mileage until about 12.30 o'clock to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me that it is the duty of Members to be here, and that this is an item in which all Members are interested. They will not be here until 12 o'clock unless we have a call of the House, and we will have to have a call of the House anyway. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. I do not think we would have to have a call of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well, then, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of no quorum, but if they are not in at that time, I shall renew the point.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that we pass over lines 4 to 11 until 12.30 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage of Representatives, Delegates, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $43,750.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that paragraph be passed over until it can be taken up in connection with the like provision that we have already passed over for mileage.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds: Chief engineer, $1,900; assistant engineers—3 at $1,300 each, 1 at $1,200; 24 elevator conductors, including 14 for service in the House Office Building, at $1,200 each, who shall be under the supervision and direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds; machinist, $1,300; electrician, $1,200; 3 laborers, at $800 each; in all, $40,700.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 14, line 1, strike out the word "three" at the beginning of the line and insert the word "four," and strike out in the same line the word and figures "one at $1,200," so that it will read "assistant engineers, 4 at $1,300 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 1, strike out the word "three" at the beginning of the line and insert the word "four." Strike out in the same line the figures "$1,200," so that the line will read "assistant engineers, 4 at $1,300 each."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to a point of order. I would like to make a statement to the committee as to why I offer the amendment. The man who now occupies the office as fourth assistant engineer has been in the service for about 29 years. He is a very competent man, and Congress, very kindly, a few years ago promoted him from fireman to assistant engineer, on the recommendation of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds. He is doing the same work as the other assistant engineers. I simply offer the amendment in the interest of justice and right between man and man. I feel that he is entitled to the same pay that the other three assistant engineers are receiving.

It only means an increase of a little over $8 a month, but that means a whole lot to this man. Aside from the question of dollars and cents, I feel that, inasmuch as he holds the same position, has the same responsibilities, and does the same work that the other assistant engineers do, he is entitled to the same pay. It is true that they use him sometimes as an elevator conductor. He never complained at any assignment that is made. Only recently, during this last session—and I am registering no complaint about it—he was designated to run the elevator on a usual shift, working the usual number of hours, and then notified that when his shift was up as conductor he should report at the heating and ventilating department and continue his work there as assistant engineer. He was not to draw any more money than the elevator man who would get off after his shift was up and go home. But this man does not complain and is not complaining. I feel it is a matter of right and justice that, inasmuch as he occupies the position of assistant engineer and does the work and is subject to call at any time, that he ought to have the same pay that the other engineers have. I submit it to the committee and appeal to their judgment to treat this man as they are treating the others.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. How long has he been occupying this position as assistant engineer?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think this is his second year as assistant engineer, but he has been in the department over 29 years. He used to shovel coal down there. He has given the best part of his life to this work, and I only ask for him equal treatment with the others.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we increased the salary of this particular man from $800 to $1,200 two years ago in the legislative bill, and, in view of the very generous action of the Committee on Appropriations in dealing with him, I think I must insist on the point of order at this time. We are not increasing any salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this salary fixed by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, every salary in this bill is the salary fixed by law under the provision of the last legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is clearly not subject to the point of order.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. Here is a proposition to increase the number of assistant engineers from three to four. The number is not fixed by law. It may be said by some that striking out the provision for an engineer at $1,200 and adding one to the $1,300 class is raising a man's salary; but that is a presumption indulged in by the man, and the chances are that he would not hold the job.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the law fix the number at three?

Mr. MANN. The law does not fix the number. Every appropriation bill has to be left so that the number of the ordinary employees can be increased. Take the Post Office bill, for example, which is soon to be considered in the House. We constantly increase the number of employees in one class and reduce the number of employees in another class, although some of them may thereby be promoted. A proposition to raise the salary of a man from $1,200 to $1,300 would be subject to the point of order, but an amendment to increase the number of employees at a particular salary, where the number is not fixed by law, is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has ruled, but I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the amendment in terms provides for the increase of the salary.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman explained that was the purpose of it. It increases the number receiving $1,300 by one and strikes out the provision for one at $1,200.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that one of these appropriation bills would not last 15 minutes if we could not increase the number of employees receiving certain salaries. That is done all through this bill. Does the gentleman want a point of order made every time we respond to the needs of the department and increase the number of employees in a certain class where the number is not fixed by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Three years ago the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] made a very pathetic appeal to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union requesting that the compensation of this particular man be increased from $800 to $1,200, and he stated that while he was classified as a fireman, yet in effect he was doing the work of an assistant engineer—that he was a man of long and faithful service; and it was stated then that the matter would be inquired into at the following session. I think it was at the following session that the matter was looked into carefully, and it was ascertained that the man had been employed for a number of years, had rendered faithful service, and was performing other duties than those strictly of an assistant engineer. Upon the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations the compensation was increased from $800 to $1,200 a year, and we have now a repetition of the old story. Let the camel get his nose under the tent and he will soon have his entire body under it, if he is once given the opportunity. It is urged here now that there are three assistant engineers who receive $1,300 a year each, and that this man's work is really similar to theirs, and that, therefore, he should get $1,300 a year. His work is not similar and the services rendered are not similar. He is paid fairly for the services that he renders. There is no request or recommendation that any further increase be granted to him, and I hope the committee will not agree to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, just one word. There is no criticism that I offer of the Appropriations Committee. They did raise the salary of this man, after we waited a year, from $800 to $1,200 on the statement, as just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that he was really doing the work of an assistant engineer and only drawing $800 a year. It was a tardy recognition of this poor fellow's services. There is no question in the world about that, but they ought to have made it $1,300 at that time. They did not do it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes the statement that this man is performing exactly the services of the other three men, although by the gentleman's former statement he is not. He is also put at other things, which would tend to show that they do not need four assistant engineers at this place.

Mr. HAMLIN. They do need him, and he takes his shift as an assistant engineer whenever they call upon him to do so. As I stated a while ago, when they need an extra elevator man and they do not need the services of this fourth assistant engineer they put him on the elevator, and they make him work the full time of an elevator man and then require him to report down at the other department and put in extra hours as an assistant engineer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, yes. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but that is correct. That has occurred within the last three or four months.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If we should increase this man's salary from $1,200 to $1,300 while he is performing the duties of an elevator man, would we not then be required to increase the salaries of the other elevator men from $1,200 to $1,300?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think not, but I am glad the gentleman has raised that question.

Mr. MANN. They would surely think so.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want this fully understood before the vote is had. I think not, because this man not only performs the work of an elevator man when he is assigned to an elevator—and he is not assigned to an elevator every day by any means, his work is primarily that of an assistant engineer—but when they need an extra man they assign him to do that work. They not only require him to do the work of an elevator man, but they tell him, "When you have finished your hours as an elevator man you can report back down to our department and we have work for you there." That has not only occurred once, but day after day where he has worked as an elevator man during the hours assigned to the elevator men and then has gone to work as an assistant engineer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the truth of the matter is——

Mr. HAMLIN. That is true, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The elevator men were permitted to go home in order to register, and arrangements were made that some other men employed in other positions be detailed to do their work.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know what I am talking about, because I had something to do with it. This man is a sort of general utility man——

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I know.

Mr. HAMLIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon also, and I know that he has done elevator work and he has been required to report down there and do other work after elevator hours were over when there was no registration on at no time near election time.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. Is this gentleman you refer to working more than eight hours a day?

Mr. HAMLIN. He sometimes works more than eight hours a day; but I am not making a point on that.

Mr. ADAIR. Then it is in violation of the law, is it not?

Mr. HAMLIN. He has done it, I am told.

Mr. LANGLEY. Under the present administration?

Mr. HAMLIN. Under the supervision of the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds. It is only in justice to this man I am pleading. I do not care—if the committee wants to turn it down, of course they have a right to do it—but I say it is only fair and just to this man that he should get $1,300, the same as the other assistant engineers.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just a word. We increased the salary of this man from $800 to $1,200 just a year or two ago. The superintendent has not asked for any increase. The Committee on Appropriations had no request to increase his salary, and no evidence on which to base such an increase, and I hope that the committee will not pile up this appropriation bill so that we will be criticized when it gets through the House.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks, messengers, and janitors to the following committees: Accounts—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; janitor, $1,000. Agriculture—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; janitor, $1,000. Appropriations—clerk, $4,000, and $1,000 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; assistant clerk and stenographer, $2,500; assistant clerks—1, $1,900; 1, $1,800; janitor, $1,000. Irrigation of Arid Lands—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. Invalid Pensions—clerk, $2,500; stenographer, $2,190; assistant clerk, $2,000; janitor, $1,000. Judiciary—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,600; janitor, $720. Labor—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. Library—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. Merchant Marine and Fisheries—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. Military Affairs—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,500; janitor, $1,000. Naval Affairs—clerk, $2,400; assistant clerk, $1,500; janitor, $1,000. Patents—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. Pensions—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,600; janitor, $720. Post Office and Post Roads—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,400; janitor, $1,000. Printing—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $1,000. Public Buildings and Grounds—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,200; janitor, $720. Public Lands—clerk, $2,000; assistant clerk, $1,200; janitor, $720. Revision of the Laws—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. Rivers and Harbors—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; janitor, $1,000. Roads—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. Rules—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. Territories—clerk, $2,000; janitor, $720. War Claims—clerk, $2,500; clerk to continue Digest of Claims under resolution of March 7, 1888, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,200; janitor, $720. Ways and Means—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk and stenographer, $2,000; assistant clerk, $1,900; janitors—1, $1,000; 1, $720. In all, $168,750.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following: "To pay the salary of the reviser of the United States Statutes for the Committee on Revision of the Laws from June 30, 1915, to June 30, 1916, as authorized and provided by House resolution No. 555, Sixty-third Congress, second session, agreed to on July 3, 1914, $4,000."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, on July 3, 1914, as reported by the Committee on Accounts, House resolution No. 555 was adopted. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to employ a competent person to assist the committee in codifying, revising, and compiling the statutes of the United States under the direction and supervision of the committee.

The resolution provided that until the compensation was otherwise provided for the compensation should be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and when the deficiency bill was up an effort was made to have this compensation provided for in that bill, because the contingent fund was running rather short, and this was the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when that question was under consideration:

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know what the resolution is that has been adopted. The practice has been that the compensation is paid out of the contingent fund, and if the position is continued after the time when the next legislative bill is under consideration, the position will be provided for in that bill.

And a little farther down he said:

If the place is to be continued beyond this session of Congress, provision will be made for it in the legislative bill.

Now, in pursuance of that statement, as chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, I appeared before the subcommittee having this matter in charge, the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and that subcommittee reported to the full committee in favor of placing $4,000, as provided for in this resolution 555, in the appropriation bill. The first report printed on this bill, which we now have under consideration, stated that that item had been allowed. The daily newspapers of the city of Washington yesterday reported the same thing, but on examining the bill I find that it is omitted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the necessity for this position, I will state that for two years the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, making every possible effort to proceed with that work, found obstacles in the way to such an extent it was impossible to proceed to codify and revise the laws as they were required to do under the law providing for that committee. At the last session of Congress the codification bill on the remainder of the judicial title was presented, which was quite a voluminous document and required a good deal of work and technical and expert knowledge to do the work, and at this session of Congress the Committee on Revision of the Laws have prepared and have ready, with the assistance of this reviser, the common-carrier code, which is one of the most complicated in our law. It can not be for a moment contended that the work of this reviser is not worth $4,000, because this work had cost under former systems from $15,000 to $20,000, and more frequently $20,000 a year. I do not think there is a member of the Committee on Appropriations who will oppose the allowance of this amount if he understands the work that is absolutely necessary to be done.

We are getting further and further behind all the time with our statutes. They are in such a confusion it is almost impossible to tell what the law is on any subject matter. At the last session of Congress there was a commission appointed for the purpose of revising the land laws of the United States. They are nothing like as voluminous, complicated, or intricate, nor do they require the technical knowledge that this revision work does, and that commission was allowed to spend $25,000 on that alone. We now present to the Congress a work of more value, the codification of the common carrier's code, which requires more work and more technical knowledge than that, and only costs a part of the $4,000 that has been allowed to this reviser.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will be glad, if there is any opposition to this allowance, to hear from those who are opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is no dispute about the facts. This man is provided for by a resolution of the House. He is now in the service of the committee, and is being paid out of the contingent fund. The subcommittee incorporated the provision in the bill, but the full committee, after discussing the matter, decided that it was not necessary to bring it into the legislative bill and provide a statutory salary, which might never cease, but that we would continue to allow this man to be employed under the resolution of the House and to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. He is not being deprived of the services of this clerk or reviser. It is only a question as to whether the House will continue to pay him out of the contingent fund or whether we will put him into the statutory salaries, which are so hard, once established, ever to abolish. And inasmuch as our genial friend from Louisiana has the help, I think it makes little difference to him whether the man is paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives or by the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COX. Is he getting his $4,000 a year now?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He is getting his $4,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not reserve time, but will be heard if he so desires.

Mr. WATKINS. This resolution provides for a permanent position. To take up this law by piecemeal and hash it up, and take a part one session and let the reviser work during that session and drop it there, would amount to nothing at all. We want to go ahead regularly with the work, and the resolution provides for a regular position. It does not provide for a temporary position. There is nothing temporary about it, except that the payment shall be made out of the contingent fund until it goes into a regular appropriation bill. If we should let the reviser wait now and not proceed with his work after the session of Congress and not proceed under the resolution, which is a permanent statute and creates a position, then we could make no headway whatever with the work. In other words, if we take it up by piecemeal, one part of a statute or subject matter at one session and another part at another session, and only work during sessions of Congress and take chances of his being paid out of the contingent fund, the work would not only be unsatisfactory but inefficient, and amount to nothing whatever. The resolution provides for a permanent position.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform the House whether the committee in the Senate has taken up for consideration in committee the codification bill that we passed?

Mr. WATKINS. They had quite a controversy in the Senate some time ago. It was referred to the Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and they have been proceeding as expeditiously as they could with the amount of work before them.

Mr. MANN. Have they had any hearings on it at all?

Mr. WATKINS. I do not know. A hearing on a bill like that amounts to nothing at all.

Mr. MANN. Have they taken any action in the committee at all?

Mr. WATKINS. I have been informed they are having it examined and going through it to see whether there are any changes to be made in the bill; and they have promised they will report back the bill as soon as they get through.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said they were having it examined. To whom do they send it for examination? I thought it was legislation. Do they send it to some clerk for examination?

Mr. WATKINS. I do not know what individual they have doing the work, but I know they have said they were going to report the bill back as soon as they get through.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is customary to send such things to the White House, but I assume the President does not have time to pass on bills of that character and tell the Senate whether he agrees to them or not.

Mr. WATKINS. It is a piece of work that the President is not encumbered with.

Mr. MANN. I was told by Senators that it was as dead as it could be.

Mr. WATKINS. The facts are that they have promised to proceed with the consideration of the bill and report it out just as soon as they can get through with the clerical work and get an opportunity to present it to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there is any chance of its being passed by the Senate during this session of Congress?

Mr. WATKINS. After they get through with the appropriations, if there is any time left they will take it up in the regular order.

Mr. MANN. If they do not take it up until after the appropriation bills, which will not be passed before half past 11 o'clock on March 4, there will not be much time.

Mr. WATKINS. If they do not get through with it, the work is there just the same.

Mr. MANN. In the next Congress the House will have to pass it over again.

Mr. WATKINS. With the gentleman from Illinois commending the work and every Member on both sides of the House having voted for it, I do not think it will take much time to go over it again.

Mr. MANN. I hope not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. One word, please, Mr. Chairman. I want to be fair to the House. I now understand under the resolution the reviser would go off the roll on the 4th of March. I was under the impression that he was permanent. I just want to make that statement, because I do not want to misstate any fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WATKINS. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 49.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. The Chair will count. All those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixteen Members have arisen, not a sufficient number.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. WATKINS. I withdraw the point, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point that there is no quorum present. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Doorkeeper: Doorkeeper, $5,000; hire of horses and wagons and repairs of same, $1,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary;

special employee, $1,500; superintendent of reporters' gallery, $1,400; janitor, $1,500; messengers—16 at $1,180 each, 14 on soldiers' roll at $1,200 each; laborers—15 at $720 each, 1 in the water-closet $720, 1 $680, 2 known as cloakroom men at $840 each, 8 known as cloak room men, 2 at $720 each and 6 at $600 each; female attendant in ladies' retiring room, $800; superintendent of folding room, $2,500; foreman, $1,800; 3 clerks, at $1,600 each; messenger, $1,200; janitor, $720; laborer, $720; 32 folders, at $900 each; 2 drivers, at $840 each; 2 chief pages, at $1,200 each; 2 messengers in charge of telephones, 1 for the minority, at $1,200 each; 46 pages during the session, including 2 riding pages, 4 telephone pages, press gallery page, and 10 pages for duty at the entrances to the Hall of the House, at $2.50 per day each, $23,920; superintendent of document room, $2,900; assistant superintendent, $2,100; clerk, $1,700; assistant clerk, $1,600; assistants—7 at $1,280 each, 1 $1,100; janitor, $920; messenger to press room, $1,000; in all, $157,220.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "entrances," on line 16 of page 17, be correctly spelled.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make the proper correction.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assistant department messenger authorized and named in the resolution of December 7, 1897, $2,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As to the assistant department messenger, would the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] have any objection to making that read, "For department messenger, $2,000"? There is not any messenger. Here is an assistant. I think under the resolution that has been changed. Why not make that read, "Department messenger, $2,000"?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The clerk of the committee informs me that the resolution has not been changed, and that the department messenger has been dropped out of the law, but that this man is holding as assistant under that resolution.

Mr. MANN. Why not change it now and make it read, "For department messenger, $2,000," instead of having an assistant to something that does not exist? That would make it in order hereafter.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Then they would name some other man. This particular man was legislated into office by this resolution, and if we changed the office they would change the officeholder.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so. This bill provides that the change of the officeholder be made by the House itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They would name an assistant and this man, too.

Mr. MANN. Is it the same man that has been holding the office all the time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think it is the same man—Col. C. W. Coombs.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to read, "For department messenger," instead of having an assistant. That would not change the man, because the House reserves the right to make a change in the law itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Law Library: Librarian, $3,000; assistants—2 at $1,400 each, 1 $960, 1 $540, 1 (evening service) $1,500; junior messenger, $420; in all, $9,220.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 12, at the end of the line, add the following: "To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to prepare such indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use, pursuant to the law approved June 30, 1906, $25.000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to continue the organization and work of the Legislative Reference Bureau in the Library of Congress. It will be an unpleasant surprise to Members of the House that the work of this bureau, so well begun, shall be so soon abandoned unless my amendment is adopted. My amendment merely reenacts the provision of last year and continues the work of the bureau. Why provision for the continuance of the bureau was not included in the bill we are unable to determine. There is no reason stated in the hearings and no indication given that the bureau was to be discontinued except the absence of the provision for its continuance. Members of the committee, when asked why such action was taken, say that an independent, comprehensive bill is necessary to organize and determine the work of the bureau. But when asked if the work already begun is not fairly satisfactory they admit that it is, and have no criticism to make of either the scope or progress of the work of the bureau.

It may be admitted that the language authorizing the appropriation last year was limited and inadequate. But that may be remedied without an abandonment of the work. As interpreted by the librarian, progress may be made and great benefit result from a continuance of the work under the authorization until further legislation can be secured.

The librarian, in the inauguration of this work, has exercised the utmost care in the selection of men to carry it on. This has necessarily resulted in some delay. But the work has been inaugurated. The force has been secured and is organized. Referring to this in the hearings, Mr. Putnam, the librarian, says:

We have been cautious, Mr. Chairman, in appointing to it for two reasons: First, we wanted to be sure to get the most effective people available; and, secondly, we wished to husband the appropriation, realizing that when Congress should convene the demands might be heavy and that we would have to add summarily to the force. There are now, however, already 15 people upon that roll, and before Congress adjourned, and in some cases since, and have had specific inquiries directed to that service. For instance, we have had calls for the compilation of foreign laws relating to coal lands and the royalties reserved by the State; we have had requests for digests or copies of the laws passed by the Southern States during the Civil War limiting cotton acreage. Incidentally, we were able to reproduce some of those statutes by the use of the photostat. We have had many requests for translations.

Again, Mr. Putnam says:

The demand upon this service will fluctuate and vary at different periods of the year. There will be always, however, during the intervals or during the recesses, work that will go on currently. For instance, the indexing of the Statutes at Large, which we are resuming work upon. We are bringing down the indexes to the general laws from 1907, where we left it, and we are beginning the work on the local and private acts, of which there are 18,000 pages to be treated. We are gathering together information of all the indexes, digests, and compilations that may be in process in the offices of bureaus and commissions. We are getting together systematic lists of sources that may be useful. There will be current work throughout the year in the preparation of information and material in anticipation of a demand for it. We have taken up, for instance, the preparation of material that relates to bills that have already passed one House and may come up at this session. We are subdividing among several people the committees of Congress with reference to the subject matter that they may be interested in. For instance, the question as to the control of water power may come up this year, and also the questions of marine subsidies and a budget.

They have commenced work, Mr. Chairman, and have made great progress. They have given special attention to subjects that are now vital and pending in Congress, such as immigration, merchant marine, ship subsidies, and many other subjects. I have before me a number of monographs prepared by the bureau containing much information with regard to the merchant marine and other subjects, which show that very careful attention has been given to the work. Much of this information has been furnished to Members who have asked for it.

At the request of the Committee on Appropriations Mr. Putnam prepared and presented a full statement of the work already accomplished and an outline of the work proposed. It will be of interest to the committee, I am sure:

The staff for this work has barely been organized. The appropriation became available July 1, but apart from one or two translators, stenographers, and research assistants appointed between August 1 and October 1 the appointments were deferred until the past few weeks. This appears from the dates of appointment set against the names in the above list.

No statement, therefore, at this date of "work accomplished" would be significant. The main work thus far has been that of preparation. This has consisted in—

(1) The organization of a corps of indexers to bring to date the Index to the Statutes at Large, previously completed through 1907, and to undertake the index to private and local acts not before treated.

(2) The selection and equipment of a room at the Capitol available for this corps of indexers and also conveniently accessible to Members of Congress desiring the aid of the division in any relation.

(3) The preparation for each foreign country of lists of its official publications which embody its statute law (example herewith, France, Exhibit B); completion of sets.

(4) The collection of whatever indexes, digests, and compilations of law (especially any that may relate to pending legislation) are already in print and available.

(5) An inquiry as to any such indexes, digests, or compilations in the possession of or in course of preparation in any department or bureau of the Government (and not yet printed).

(6) Probable subjects of legislation at the coming session: Anticipation of these—

(a) By special attention to subjects dealt with by bills that have passed one House and are pending in the other; and

(b) By similar preparation of material on subjects that from some other indication are likely to receive attention in Congress.

Examples of (a): Immigration, convict-made goods, railroad securities, etc.

Examples of (b): Merchant-marine subsidies and the budget. Upon these latter two exhibits herewith of compilations actually made.

(7) Assignment to certain members of the staff with special experience of the fields covered in general by committees in Congress—e. g., immigration, labor—with special duty on those officials to keep in touch with the projects before and intended by such committees and, so far as practicable, anticipation of their demands.

As to all of the above, a fuller statement, as invited by the chairman, is appended.

In the meantime some requests already dealt with may be illustrative, e. g.: For compilations or digests—one upon the State control of coal mines in the United States and the system of royalties reserved to the State; the laws passed by the Southern States during the Civil War limiting the acreage in cotton; for translations—the law of Denmark as to agricultural holdings; the law of France as to liquor licenses; a résumé of the Code of Geneva as to juvenile courts; and certain provisions of the constitution of Roumania.

As was emphasized above, however, the staff has just been organized. Its existence and facilities have not yet been called to the attention of Congress, and they did not effectively exist prior to adjournment. There has therefore been no test of the service. A partial test will be offered during the coming session, but owing to its brevity, no more than a partial one.

INDEX OF FEDERAL STATUTES.

Resumption of the work of indexing the Federal Statutes from the point reached four years ago when the appropriation for this purpose was discontinued was the most obvious thing to be undertaken under the new provision—indeed, the reference in the appropriation act to the statute which authorized and directed the preparation of such an index implied its continuation.

Previous work: Volume I (Scott and Beaman; published 1908) covered the permanent general law down to 1907, i. e., to the end of the Fifty-ninth Congress. The private and local acts had been indexed in the Revised Statutes and in only a few of the volumes of the Statutes at Large prior to this date. The cards had, however, been kept on file in the expectation that its continuation would ultimately be made possible.

Permanent general law, 1907 to date: Provision has accordingly been made for bringing the index of the permanent general law down to date with a view to preparing either a new edition of Scott and Beaman's index or a supplement to it, whichever may be considered the more desirable when the work is finished. It is estimated that this piece of work can be accomplished by one law indexer and an assistant in about a year.

Temporary consolidated index: For use in the meantime a temporary consolidated index for this period is being made by clipping and mounting in one alphabet the separate indexes of the session laws. If desired, this can be reproduced by photostat for the use of any committee which has need of it.

Private and local laws: The indexing of the private and local acts from the Revised Statutes to date has also been resumed, and the cards for the portion previously done have been checked up and arranged for continuation. An outline of instructions indicating the manner of indexing the various topics of local legislation (e. g., river and harbor improvements, bridges and dams, post roads, Indian tribes, land grants, lighthouses, judicial districts, etc.) has been prepared and tentatively adopted, subject to change as the result of criticism by the various committees and bureaus interested in these subjects, with whom we are conferring in order that the index, when completed, may meet their needs most effectively. As there are about 18,000 pages of local law to be treated, this section of the indexing will occupy between two and three years with the force at present allotted.

Legislative forms, etc.: A new feature has been added in the compilation of a classified collection of legislative forms, standard paragraphs, and clauses actually found in the statutes as they are read for indexing. It is hoped that Members will find this reference material useful in the preparation of bills.

Indexing force: The force already organized consists of chief indexer, in charge of the work (lawyer), general law indexer (lawyer), local law indexer (lawyer), private law indexer and file clerk, two clerical assistants (accurate and rapid typists), two messengers (for subclerical work).

As chief indexer we have the person who was in charge of the actual work of indexing the Federal Statutes four years ago and who has since been engaged in a similar undertaking at Albany for the laws of the State of New York. Two others from the former index force have also been reappointed. With this nucleus of workers familiar with the plan of indexing and its actual application, it has been possible to get the work into smooth running order with minimum delay.

Office location: The indexing of the Federal Statutes is being carried on in the new room in the Capitol assigned for legislative reference purposes and in an office in the law library, so that the results may be conveniently used by Members while the work is in progress.

RESEARCH ASSISTANTS AND TRANSLATORS.

For the work of preparing digests and compilations of law a corps of research assistants and translators with auxiliary stenographic and clerical help has been organized.

Cooperation with law and documents divisions: As the law division has the custody of American and foreign statutes, court reports, and other legal literature, and the documents division is responsible for the official publication containing data concerning the actual operation of laws, this section of the work must necessarily be carried on in close cooperation with these divisions. Desk space has accordingly been provided for research assistants and translators in the rooms occupied by these divisions in the main Library.

Representatives' reading room: One research assistant, however, has been assigned to a desk in the Representatives' reading room in order that the legislative reference division may be in touch with the service there and make the results of its work directly available for Members using that room. Vertical filing cases of appropriate design and finish to harmonize with the scheme of decoration and furnishing in the congressional reading rooms have been procured and will be used to accommodate legislative reference apparatus (other than books) relating to proposed legislation.

Survey of source materials: A systematic survey of texts of laws and other source material in the collections has been in progress throughout the summer and deficiencies have been reported to the divisions concerned with acquisition.

Index of existing digests and compilations: To facilitate searches and avoid waste of effort a subject index of digests and compilations of law and comparative legislation studies already available in print is being prepared.

Material available in Government bureaus: To avoid duplication and overlapping where the subject matter is within the field of any Government bureau, inquiries are being made to ascertain what indexes, digests, and compilations of law are at present available in manuscript or are in course of preparation in the various Government offices. For example, we find that the Bureau of Labor Statistics has completed compilations of the labor laws of Great Britain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Austria, and Germany, which it has not yet had an opportunity to publish, and also has partial compilations for France, Italy, Belgium, and the Netherlands in manuscript; the Children's Bureau has in press a compilation of child-labor laws; and so on.

Requests from Senators and Representatives: In addition to this preparatory work, which has occupied a considerable part of the time of several members of this force since their appointment, various requests for translation of foreign laws and compilations on special subjects have been received from Senators and Representatives and given immediate attention. The translations requested have included the law of Denmark relating to agricultural holdings and the size of landed estates, the law of France relating to liquor licenses, a résumé of the code establishing a system of juvenile courts in the Canton of Geneva, Switzerland, articles of Roumanian constitution, etc. These requests have not been restricted to translations of foreign law. For example, one of the House committees needed a translation of certain statistical information relating to prices of commodities and ocean freight rates, and various Members have requested assistance in interpreting letters in foreign languages received from constituents relating to relatives in difficulty in the war area in Europe, or other matters. We have considered that, a translating force being now available in the Library of Congress, its services might be legitimately used for any translation required by Members or committees of Congress in connection with their work.

Two compilations of laws which were furnished to Members may be noted, namely: (1) State laws in regard to the leasing of coal lands and the amount of royalty reserved by the State; (2) laws passed by the Southern States during the Civil War limiting acreage in cotton. The latter is an example of the use of the photostat as an auxiliary to the work of compilation, the actual texts of the laws being reproduced photographically direct from the volumes containing them.

Program of work: It is our aim to develop this work in such a way that we shall be able to respond to demands from Members and committees of Congress as promptly as possible. In order to accomplish this we plan to prepare material in anticipation of possible demands. Such material may be divided into three groups:

1. Digests and compilations likely to be serviceable in connection with the work of particular committees in general; for example, a digest showing the essential features of the preparation, ratification, and execution of the British budget has recently been completed in rough draft, which is likely to be of interest to the appropriations and revenue committees of both Houses; in fact, in previous years the Library has frequently received requests for information on this very topic. It is intended to utilize in this connection the service of members of the Library staff who are specially equipped to assist particular committees. For example, Dr. Borchard, law librarian, who has made a specialty of international law and has served as assistant solicitor in the Department of State, will give attention to the field covered by the Committees on Foreign Relations in both Houses; Dr. Harris, chief of the division of documents, formerly of the Bureau of Labor, will give attention to the needs of the Committees on Labor and Immigration, etc.

2. Digests and compilations on special subjects which party platforms or party leaders have indicated as matters on which bills will be presented for consideration and action by Congress; for example, President Wilson's letter to Representative UNDERWOOD shortly before the recent election indicated that the development of the merchant marine and conservation of natural resources, particularly water-power control, would be two important subjects on the program of the next session. We are accordingly preparing information as to foreign legislation on (a) merchant marine and (b) water power.

3. Digests and compilations on the subjects of bills on the calendar which have been favorably reported by a committee in either House of Congress or of bills on which hearings have been held indicating that some committee action is likely to be taken on them. This furnishes an indication of a number of subjects on which information will probably be called for by some Member or committee. As only a short session remains of the present Congress, we have given particular attention to the subject matter of bills which have already passed one House and are pending in the other.

General public bills which have passed the House and are now on the Senate calendar favorably reported, with or without amendments:

H. R. 6060, immigration; H. R. 14330, convict-made goods; H. R. 16586, railroad securities; H. R. 10735, bureau of labor safety; H. R. 11686, Federal aid in road making; H. R. 8428, publicity of campaign contributions.

General public bills which have passed the House and are now pending before Senate committees:

H. R. 16136, coal, phosphate, oil, etc., lands; H. R. 16673, water-power development; H. R. 18459, Philippine government.

OFFICE OF THE LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE DIVISION IN THE CAPITOL.

The Speaker has assigned to the Library for legislative reference purposes the only room in the Capitol Building at present available, viz., room 74, on the ground floor (west side, near the center of the building). In this room, as previously stated, the indexing of the permanent general laws is being carried on, and the results in card form, together with the printed indexes, will constitute parts of its equipment for the service of Members. We have also assembled here a small office collection of books for ready reference primarily on questions of law which may arise in connection with bills before Congress.

It includes the United States Statutes (annotated and compiled editions); Digest of United States Supreme Court Reports; Words and Phrases; the leading treaties on constitutional law, statutory construction, and subjects within the field of Federal legislation (e. g., interstate commerce, taxation, public officers, etc.); latest editions of special compilations of United States laws issued by the various departments and bureaus, including administrative rules, regulations, and decisions thereunder; Government document catalogues and other useful indexes; latest issues of statistical annuals and general reference manuals.

The last named are included for the purpose of answering inquiries which can be met at once by the facts and figures found in such books.

With this collection, supplemented by the index apparatus and a file of bibliographic lists, memoranda, briefs, etc., the lawyer in charge of this office may aid to answer such questions as the following:

(1) Where can a given law be found in the statutes?
(2) What is the existing Federal law on a given subject?
(3) How has a given law been construed by the courts or what rules, regulations, and decisions have been made under it by any executive department?
(4) What bills have been introduced during the present Congress on a given subject, and what is their status?
(5) What is the usual form for any bill, clause, or paragraph of common occurrence?
(6) What interpretation has been given by the Federal courts to words and phrases used in a particular bill?

(7) What existing laws would be affected by the enactment into law of a proposed bill, and what acts of Congress should be specifically mentioned in its repeal clause?
(8) Have recent changes in titles, salaries, powers, and duties, etc., been properly incorporated in a proposed bill and are the references to existing laws correctly given?
(9) Are the administrative features of a given bill conformable with existing departmental machinery?
(10) What constitutional questions are raised by a proposed bill, and what opinions of the Supreme Court have a direct bearing on them?

The purpose of this service at the Capitol will be to aid the Senator or Representative in his efforts to make the law what he desires it to be, not to indicate what the law should be. It will be primarily concerned with the legal side of the law, and not with the economic, social, or political policy involved. Inquiries relating to the latter received in this office will, however, be communicated immediately to the appropriate division of the library service for prompt attention; this attention consisting, as heretofore, in the indication of literature that may bear upon the subject and the actual supply of the books themselves.

(a) Instructions to indexers of the private and local acts.
(b) Finding list of texts of foreign laws, decrees, decisions, etc. (France).
(c) Digest relating to the British budget (six parts).
(d) Digest relating to foreign legislation on merchant marine (three parts, others in preparation).
(e) Members of the force employed under the lump-sum appropriation for legislative reference, with statements of their qualifications.

In view of this record of satisfactory accomplishment and the comprehensive program outlined for the future, which has not been adversely criticized by any Member, and which is exactly what the House said a year ago they desired, it is difficult to understand why at this time it is proposed to abandon the entire project. It has not been said, and can not be said, that there is not need for this bureau.

We need it to furnish us exact knowledge of existing conditions to which contemplated legislation is to apply.

We need it to inform us of State legislation on same or analogous matter, and of legislation in foreign countries and the effects of such legislation.

We need it to ascertain whether or not such contemplated legislation has been before the courts, and if so, how interpreted.

We need it to have references made available of discussion by publicists, jurists, and specialists in books, magazines, and reports, both domestic and foreign.

We need it to know the legal definition of words and phrases used in bills introduced, as given by authority and by the decisions of courts; we need it in a thousand ways to aid us in our work.

If it be said that this work is now to be abandoned from motives of economy, there are a score of appropriations in this bill that could better be dropped than this one. It will be a penny wise and pound foolish policy to drop this work. There is no other one thing that in the long run will save more from foolish, unwise, or useless expenditures than the continuance and development of the work of this bureau.

Not only will it prove a wise economy to continue this work, but it is the belief of its friends that its development will be an effective influence for good on the general character and trend of national legislation; that it will discourage hasty and illy considered measures; that it will furnish the advocates of worthy measures effective arguments in their favor; that it will furnish the opponents of dangerous and unwise bills facts and arguments to defeat them. It is the believe of those who favor the continuance and development of this work that really to enlighten the understanding is to make more certain the success of the desirable and meritorious, and the defeat of the unwise and vicious. I sincerely hope the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be a great mistake if the Congress, having once undertaken to provide a reference library and a corps of assistants to supplement the work of Members, to do a lot of the drudgery for them, to facilitate legislation and the quick comprehension of measures before Congress, and to furnish in convenient form data bearing on these questions, should abandon it at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. Chairman, in justice to the Committee on the Library I feel that I ought to say a few words in explanation of why no legislation along this line was brought into the House from that committee during the present Congress. We have had the question under consideration for a number of years, but there has been a strange fatality in connection with the members of the Committee on the Library. This year, for example, every member of that committee except myself will go out of Congress. Practically the committee has had to be reconstructed entirely each two years, and that has militated against the bringing into the House of such measures, for example, as that proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON], modified, of course, to meet the views of the committee. I believe that ultimately it will make for economy, and certainly will make for clarity of expression in the writing of the laws.

I have on my desk a number of articles, gathered from time to time from eminent jurists, from distinguished lawyers, and from great public writers, all declaring that the work done in Wisconsin, in California, and elsewhere, as reflected in the statutes, has been of great advantage to the people, and that this advantage is largely due to an efficient reference library corps and bill drafters. It has resulted in less litigation, in clearer and quicker decisions of the courts, and altogether in the interest of economy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it happened that last year, in an endeavor to save to the Congress and the country the services of a useful Member, I was absent for some time. During that time this measure was taken away from our committee and adopted by the Congress, by what vote I am not advised. I think if I had been here I should have resisted the effort to rob the Committee on the Library of its functions, but now the reference bureau is established, in embryo at least, and I think it would be a great mistake, a great legislative blunder, to abandon it, because I believe that from this beginning we can develop a system which will prove satisfactory to the Congress and ultimately prove of great economy in the transaction of the business of this legislative body. While I think the Committee on the Library ought to have been given time to prepare and bring in a more complete bill, possibly the way in which it was begun will result in some money saving. I quite agree with the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] that to abandon it now would be a waste of the appropriation already made and of the energies that have been exerted in the construction of this useful bureau, and that altogether it is an undesirable thing to do, and I hope that the House will permit the maintenance of this bureau until, as I believe will be the case, its usefulness shall be established to the entire satisfaction of the Members of this and of the other House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. I want to make a statement, though, before I do so.

The amendment that has just been offered refers to the law of 1906. That was simply an appropriation that authorized the indexing of the laws, and I have a copy of that work in my hand. It cost the Government $31,680.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Was there not an amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to the paragraph just ahead, the congressional reference library, and not the one below.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; this item was first placed in an appropriation bill and was carried for a number of years in language similar to the language that it is proposed to insert in the bill. This index, as I say, cost $31,680. It is so highly technical as to be useless. The Congressional Library itself is a reference library for Congress. It is the creature of Congress. In the beginning the books were assembled for the use of Congress. We now have in that library that is costing $630,000 a year a reference library with a small force costing about $5,000.

The Committee on Appropriations is not unfriendly to the suggestion embodied in this amendment, but the Committee on Appropriations is not a legislative committee. This question is before the Committee on the Library, presided over by my friend from Texas. We would be delighted if he would take the information he has gathered, bring in a proper bill, with appropriate limitations, to establish this reference library. But to appropriate a lump sum of money, with absolutely no limitation as to how it shall be spent, seems to the committee to be an unwise thing to do.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman will realize that Congress took it away from the committee and enacted the legislation without consulting us.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, gentlemen, how is this money to be spent? There is no limitation provided. Any Member of Congress can prefer a request to the Librarian of Congress and ask that several thousand dollars be spent in getting certain information that he may want, and yet no other man in Congress may care anything about it. We are not opposed to appropriating the money if the Committee on the Library will formulate a plan under which it is to be spent. This reference library force ought not to be put in operation except under a resolution passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Pending that, does not the gentleman think it would be wise for us to continue the work that the Librarian is doing rather than lose the results of the $25,000 that has already been used? And let me ask him a further question: Would it not be wise for us, in view of what we know he has already done—and I do not think the gentleman will criticize it—to continue it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will answer the gentleman's first question. If we were to make the lump-sum appropriation, then the Committee on the Library, or Congress, would never legislate. But we have dropped this appropriation, and that will call it sharply to the attention of people who want this kind of legislation, and you will get the legislation in shape. If I were in a conference on this question, and I had a carefully drawn bill by the Committee on the Library——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman would not agree that it might go into an appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina (continuing). I would be in a position to give it intelligent consideration. This is not a question that comes within our jurisdiction, and I have not studied it.

Mr. TOWNER. I think there is a great deal in the gentleman's point that we should have a more comprehensive form of legislation. But the proposition now is under the appropriation bill of last year and the organization of the work which the gentleman so well knows, and will approve of, because it is directly in line with the comprehensive form of legislation that is so necessary. Would it not be wise to continue this until we can secure the passage of a more comprehensive law? Ought we not to continue it, knowing that the money has not been improperly used?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think the Committee on the Library has had hearings, had bills before it, and that is the proper committee to consider this question and put it in proper shape.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit me for an instant, if the gentleman has given much attention to the hearings and to the bills he will realize that in each instance there was a comprehensive proposition and a proportionately expensive one. As chairman of the committee I hesitated to recommend or push legislation which would involve an initial annual expense of from $100,000 to $125,000 a year, because I doubted whether such a bill would pass. I believe it ought to be established, and I believe it would be useful and ultimately result in a saving to the people; but the gentleman knows as well as I do that in all human probability, notwithstanding we did not make the finest record for economy ever known—in all human probability no such measure could have been gotten through the House. I was doing my best to hold down all the expenses and refrain from recommending legislation that would involve any considerable appropriation.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Would it not be within the power of the Committee on the Library to draw a bill sufficiently comprehensive and yet not so very expensive as to accomplish the work?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Not a bill that would meet the view of gentlemen who have given the most attention to it. I will say that I shall endeavor to do so. It is a difficult thing to cut down to the limit fixed by Congress when they took control of the matter of appropriating sufficient to create an effective bureau.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TOWNER. I did not understand that the gentleman made the point of order. I understood he reserved it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I reserved it in order that my genial friend from Iowa might address the House, and after he addressed the House I made the point of order. Mr. Chairman, the hour has arrived at which by consent of the House we were to recur to the first section of the bill in relation to mileage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from Territories, and Resident Commissioners shall be entitled to receive in lieu of all other allowances for mileage or expenses for attending the sessions of Congress, mileage at the rate of only 5 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I also desire to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Ohio make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that some of the Members here are very much interested in the Library of Congress, I ask unanimous consent that we conclude the items relating to the Library of Congress before we return to this mileage proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; let us dispose of it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the items relating to the Library of Congress be disposed of before taking up the items concerning mileage. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Missouri desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HAMLIN. No; I do not desire to discuss the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will not reserve the point of order for discussion of the general question of mileage at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington makes the point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that portion of the bill just read, lines 4 to 10, inclusive, page 2.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if we can not agree upon some time to debate this amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, we have not yet reached the amendment. We are now discussing the point of order. The point of order I make against the paragraph is that it is new legislation, and it comes from a committee that has no jurisdiction over the subject matter. There can not be any question about the fact that it is new legislation, so the only other point that could be possibly urged making it in order would be that it comes within the terms of the Holman Rule. I think the reading of that rule will satisfy the Chair that it does not come within its provisions, which reads:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States—

It clearly does not do that—by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

It does not reduce the amount covered by the bill, so the only provision of the rule which it could be contended would cover this would be the words—

By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

If the Chair will recall, during the discussion of this proposition when it was up before, some of the gentlemen who have always been opposed to the present mileage cited a decision of the Court of Claims, which I do not have, to the effect that it was not compensation, so that if the Chair follows that judicial determination of the Court of Claims there is only one thing to do, and that is to sustain the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this question has been discussed frequently and has been determined often. The law fixing the compensation of Members provides that the compensation of Members of Congress should be at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile going to and returning from each session of Congress, by the nearest route. It has been repeatedly held that the mileage of Members of the two Houses of Congress is a part of their compensation. That being so, the provision is clearly within the rule of the House making legislation of this character in order upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Has the gentleman available the language of the statute changing the compensation of Members to $7,500 per annum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not; but there have been rulings to the effect that the effect of that statute merely increased the $5,000 to $7,500, and did not affect the fact that the mileage was additional to and a part of the compensation. I do not think that it is necessary to take up any time with extended discussion of this question. It has been repeatedly debated and ruled upon, and it has been held that this provision is in order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Would the gentleman contend that it would be in order upon this bill to offer an amendment to repeal section 31 of the act of July 2, 1909, which provides for taking an agricultural census?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sufficiently familiar with the act to answer that question.

Mr. GOOD. The same proposition of law is involved here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it would result in decreasing the expenditures in the bill, it would clearly be in order, and, in my opinion, it would be a good thing to do.

Mr. GOOD. Possibly; but I do not believe the Committee on Appropriations would have authority to report that kind of legislation, and yet it would obviate the necessity of making an appropriation of $2,286,000. Here the proposition is to change existing law, and the bill comes from a committee that does not have jurisdiction of that subject, and because it is followed by a reduction in that particular item, I think, as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has pointed out, it does not come within the provisions of the Holman rule any more than an amendment to amend the law striking out the provision that makes it necessary to take an agricultural census in 1915 would be in order and germane to this appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, section 17 of the act approved July 28, 1866, is as follows:

That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present session, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session.

That is the only provision for the payment of mileage to Members of Congress. Section 4 of the act of February 26, 1907, provides:

That on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice President of the United States, and the heads of executive departments who are Members of the President's Cabinet, shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each, and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories and the Resident Commissioner from Port Rico, shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each.

It has been held, the question having been raised in the House, that this section of the act of February 26, 1907, providing for the compensation of Members of Congress at the rate of $7,500 a year, did not repeal that portion of the act of 1866 which provided, in addition, the lump-sum mileage at a fixed rate. If it did repeal that portion of the act of 1866, then there is no authority in law for the payment of mileage to Members of Congress. The House, following repeated rulings, has held that that portion of the act of 1866 was not repealed, and that the compensation of Members of Congress is $7,500 per annum and, in addition thereto, the mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile. This provision in the bill provides for a reduction of the rate of mileage to be paid to the Members. It affects the compensation being paid out of the Treasury to officers of the Government of the United States and comes within the provisions of Rule XXI, known as the Holman rule, which was adopted for the express purpose of permitting the House to enact such legislation upon appropriation bills as would enable it to retrench in the expenditures of the Government. The various questions involved have been raised frequently since 1907 and the uniform rulings of the Chair have been, first, that compensation of Members of Congress is at the rate of $7,500 per annum and, in addition, mileage of 20 cents per mile, and that an amendment or legislative provision purporting to change the law, in so far as it reduces the amount of mileage to be paid Members of Congress, is in order within the rule.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has discussed the very point to which my point of order was directed, but I do not agree with his construction of the statute. The last legislative expression fixed the compensation of Members of Congress at $7,500 a year. Now, the gentleman from New York says it has been uniformly held we are entitled to more than that, but the gentleman did not cite the authorities and I have not seen them. It seems to me the very language of the statute itself fixing the compensation at $7,500 a year would end it. It repeals all prior legislation upon the subject. I would like to see the authorities where it has been held that it leaves that statute in force. The gentleman did not cite them. He said it has been so held repeatedly, and that is the very point I desired to urge for the consideration of the Chair, that when the Congress fixed the compensation of Members at $7,500 per annum that it repealed all other statutes upon the subject of compensation and mileage as part compensation of Members. That statute was repealed by the enactment of the statute of 1907. I think the plain language of the statute he has read to us would warrant that interpretation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] makes the point of order that this paragraph reducing the mileage of Senators and Representatives to 5 cents per mile is not in order under the Holman rule. The Chair thinks that counting mileage as part of the compensation of Senators and Representatives and a reduction under present law that it is in order and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can not agree upon a time for debate. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. GOOD. I would suggest we have 20 minutes on a side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph, page 2, beginning line 4 and ending line 10.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, we are trying to fix a time for debate upon this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 20 minutes on a side, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and 20 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment be fixed at 40 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by himself and 20 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. That is not on this amendment to the paragraph and all amendments thereto?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. On this amendment to the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I rose a while ago to offer an amendment, but the Chair recognized the gentleman from Washington, who raised the point of order. I will not object, provided I am given permission to offer my amendment and have five minutes in which to discuss it, or some such time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why does not the gentleman offer his amendment now?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not proper that amendments to perfect the paragraph should be offered before a motion to strike out is put?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then, the gentleman from Missouri has a right to offer his amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand that perfectly; but if we make an arrangement here for 40 minutes' debate I am to be shut out entirely.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman can protect himself, of course, and I hope he will.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman could not be deprived of offering his amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. And have five minutes in which to discuss it. I understand the gentleman from South Carolina says I can have time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will offer the following amendment, namely, in line 8, page 2, strike out the figure "5" and insert "10."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, in line 8, by striking out "5" and inserting "10."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the following reasons: During last session of Congress, when this proposition was up, I voted three times to reduce this mileage. While I believe that it was originally fixed as part of the compensation of Members of Congress I also know that it was fixed at a time when the mode of travel was very different from what it is now. We know it was fixed back in 1816, when there were no railroads in the country and when Members attending sessions of Congress were compelled to travel by stage or by water in a very roundabout way and at a very great expense, and I believe that this mileage was intended at that time to cover approximately the expense of Members attending Congress. I do not believe it costs Members 20 cents a mile at this time under our present mode of travel to attend sessions of Congress; that is, coming to and returning from a session of Congress. But I do believe that it ought to be intended, if it were not intended at the time, that Members should not only have enough to pay their own individual expenses in coming here and returning from the sessions of Congress, but they ought to have an allowance sufficient to permit them to bring their wives, at least, with them. Now, I do not believe that 5 cents a mile will cover that expense, will pay the railroad fare, the Pullman fare, and the dining-car fare. Therefore I believe that the rate fixed in the bill ought to be more than 5 cents; but I believe that 10 cents a mile for coming to and returning from the sessions of Congress will be sufficient, and I have therefore offered this amendment to strike out the 5 cents a mile and make it 10 cents a mile. I believe that 10 cents a mile will cover the expense of Members with their wives or some other member of their family, or perhaps two members of their family, in coming to and returning from sessions of Congress. That is all I believe Congress ever intended should be allowed as mileage, and I believe it is all we ought to ask in this instance.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that almost the universal mileage paid in the States to members of the legislature and officials who are required to travel is 10 cents a mile, and in very few cases is it as low as 5 cents a mile, and therefore the amendment of the gentleman would conform to the mileage rate that is allowed to officials who are required to travel in connection with their official duties.

Mr. HAMLIN. I thank the gentleman from South Dakota for making that suggestion, because I think he is entirely correct. I reach this basis, though, not on the idea suggested by the gentleman, but from my own experience and what I honestly believe would be a fair allowance for mileage in covering the expenses of Members in coming to and returning from sessions of Congress. I care nothing especially, so far as I am individually concerned, but I think in adjusting this matter we ought to reach a fair and just conclusion. I am quite convinced in my own mind that 10 cents a mile would be a fair adjustment of this mileage proposition, and I believe it ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will use some time now.

Mr. GOOD. May I ask if we are to vote on all these amendments at the end of the discussion or dispose of this amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when this matter came up, and he is unable to answer, but if there was no general agreement he would say that general debate should first be consumed.

Mr. GOOD. The parliamentary situation is that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] offered an amendment to strike out the paragraph, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] offered an amendment to perfect the paragraph. It seems to me a vote ought to be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri before there is a discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly under parliamentary law an amendment to perfect the text will first be voted on before the amendment to strike out, but what the Chair had reference to was that he understood that all votes were to be postponed until the 40 minutes' general debate was consumed.

Mr. GOOD. It is immaterial. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the motion to strike out the entire paragraph. I do not think there is anything in the argument made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] when he wishes to place it at 10 cents per mile on the theory that it will bring the families of the Members here. Ten cents will not be sufficient to bring the members of families from the Pacific coast. Now, I prefer to strike out the entire proposition. So far as I am individually concerned, I would rather be guilty of grand larceny than petty larceny, and if 20 cents is a graft, 5 cents is a graft. It will not cost 5 cents for any man to go to his home and return if he does not include his family. If he does include his family and he lives on the Pacific coast or in the far South, and there are three or four members in his family, it will not be sufficient. Now, the whole proposition of this mileage is a proposition by those who live near Washington to make a little cheap political capital at the expense of the Members who live far distant. I will at least not mix hypocrisy with the taking of the mileage. I have never yet stood upon the floor of this House and condemned it as graft, nor have I been one of the first Members at the wicket, after speaking against it, to get my portion of it. Many who oppose the mileage talk one thing upon the floor of the House and another in the cloakroom. Now, you might as well face this fact. You are not deceiving the people of this country. They know the cheap hypocrite that stands up here and wants to make a little political capital at the expense of some of the other Members. The proposition is squarely this: If this mileage is wrong, strike it out; and if you want to punish me because I live on the Pacific coast, have the courage and honesty to do it.

Now, another thing about it, if a man has only his wife, the mileage is sufficient compensation, coming from the Pacific coast, to cover the expense. You take the case of two of my colleagues, Mr. FALCONER and Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and the mileage is not sufficient in either case to pay them to bring their families here. Do you want them to leave their families at home, or do you want to penalize them for having a family?

You either want to penalize the Members of the House who have large families or you want to penalize them because they live far away from the Capital. Which is it? But if we are going to parade before the country our patriotism and our righteousness, then let us strike it all out. If it is a steal to take 20 cents, it is a meaner and more contemptible steal to take 5 cents. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to use any more of his time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No time is asked for on this side.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. I do not see him here just now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to offer an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] offers an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HARDY. I can reduce it to writing. I would like to amend the amendment by making the provision read so that each Member would be paid the actual expenses paid by him for bringing himself and the dependent members of his family to Washington.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the gentleman reduce his amendment to writing, so that we can have it properly before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I take issue with a part of the argument made by Members this morning, wherein the statement is made that mileage is a part of the compensation of Members of Congress; and I take issue with them upon that proposition because the Court of Claims has expressly decided that it is not a part of the compensation of Members of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman just hear the distinguished chairman of the committee in this House decide that it was a part of the compensation, and is not that latest authority or statement of the law?

Mr. COX. That might be a controversy between the distinguished gentleman and the Court of Claims; but the Court of Claims, as I recall reading the decision—and I read it last spring—expressly decided upon the proposition that mileage allowed to Members of Congress was not a part of their compensation; that it was originally designed and intended to reimburse the person for travel. That was not a side issue of the case, but a question squarely in issue, where the Delegate from New Mexico or Arizona—I am not sure which—brought a suit in the Court of Claims for his salary, and the Court of Claims expressly so held.

Now, I agree that you will never get this mileage made exactly equal between all Members of this House; but when you come to actually equalizing the law between man and man, the mortal mind of man has never yet been able to devise that kind of a law, and he will never be able to do it.

As the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] well said a moment ago, it is perfectly patent and absolutely plain as to what the original intention of the forefathers was when they fixed the rate of mileage at 20 cents a mile in 1789. Those times and those conditions and those modes of travel have long since come and gone.

Now, if the Court of Claims is right in holding that this is not a part of the compensation of Members of Congress, but is intended to reimburse the Members for money that they have actually paid out and expended for travel, the 5 cents a mile, in my judgment, comes nearest to being absolute and equal justice between all the Members of Congress, and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I have voted for the proposition of 5 cents and for the proposition for 10 cents, and I have voted for the proposition that Members be paid the actual traveling expenses of themselves and the members of their families. I have voted for it because it was a matter of indifference to me. But I am tired of this opera bouffe performance every time we reach the question of mileage. [Applause.] Men vote for it and pray that the Senate will not agree with their vote; and the Senate does not, and the Senate strikes it out. [Applause.]

Now, my vote upon this proposition does not affect me one way or the other. I believe that if I take the mileage allowed by law, fixed for over a hundred years, as a part of the compensation allowed by law for my services here, I am not guilty of "graft" or any other immoral or wrong thing, and I never was afraid to say so or to vote so. The people do not care what we do with reference to paying or accepting pay for ourselves as the law allows. The people can well measure up the men, if there be such, who, in order to gain a little cheap notoriety or to escape probable criticism from the press, vote differently from what they think with respect to things that concern themselves; the men who make profit of their great professions of economy by beginning with themselves and attempting to take something from themselves do so when they know that the attempt will be futile. [Applause.]

So far as I am concerned, I am going to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN], because I think that would be sufficient. But I do not vote for it because I believe that any man who does not vote as I do, or who votes to keep it as it is, is guilty of petty "graft" or anything of the sort, and the people do not think so. The people are not caring what we do with reference to being paid for our services as the law provides for it. What the people want us to do is to pass laws that will best administer this Government for them, and the men who think that by this cheap demagogy they can get something will, in my judgment, be disappointed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I am ready now to offer an amendment, as a substitute for the amendment and for the paragraph, the following:

That in lieu of all mileage each Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses for himself and the dependent members of his family in coming from and returning to his home at each session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is not an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is a substitute.

Mr. MANN. It is a substitute for the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute for the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. So that the vote on the Hamlin amendment would come before the vote on this substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that, as I understand and remember it, the substitute which I have offered is precisely the provision which was tendered by the committee at a former session of Congress, and if I can get the attention of the House I wish to say just exactly why I offer it and why I believe this substitute ought to be adopted.

In the first place, gentlemen, it is just. The salary of every Member of Congress was intended to be $7,500 per annum, and every Member's salary was intended to be equal to that of every other Member.

Mr. MANN. If it will not interfere with the gentleman, will he yield for a moment?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. You say at the end of each "term" of Congress, I suppose you mean at the end of each "session" of Congress.

Mr. HARDY. Yes. I meant each session.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to change his amendment in that respect.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to have it changed in that way, and ask that it be done by unanimous consent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no question that a 20-cent mileage rate for a Member who lives in Texas, and who comes here by himself, is a considerable addition to his salary as a Congressman over the salary of a Member who brings his family with him, expending as much as 20 cents a mile, and perhaps more, or one who lives near by and gets no mileage. When I first came to this Congress I had seven in my family—my wife and five children and myself—and I believed that in the interest of my people, as well as of myself, I ought to bring those members of my family with me, and I did so. It cost me just about the full amount of 20 cents to bring them and pay their traveling expenses, very little more or less, and considering the fact that I sometimes took trips that were not included in the mileage and yet were necessary; I think my necessary traveling expenses have been about what I have received. Now I have only five members in my family. Two of the seven members are not with me, do not come with me. Probably one of the present members will not come in the future. Now, I do not believe I ought to be paid for traveling expenses as much now as I was then, and as I ought to have been paid then. Gentlemen, if you want to have the pay of Members of Congress precisely $7,500 a year, then you should pay them the actual necessary and reasonable traveling expenses for them to come here and to bring with them the members of their families, if the good of the country is better served by a Member being here with his family than it is by his leaving them at home—and I know many Members of Congress who, if they are forced to bear the expense, will be strongly tempted to leave the members of their families at home. I do not believe that ought to be done. I believe this is a great Government. I do not think it is necessary for us to be petty in our expenditures, but I do think it is necessary for us to be just, and I should like every man to be put on an equal footing. It seems to me this is the only way to put them all on an equal footing.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, there are some honest differences of opinion between members of the subcommittee that reported this bill on the question of mileage. There is absolutely no difference of opinion on what this legislative bill will contain when it is signed by the President, so far as the mileage provision is concerned. We all know that this is mere boys' play.

Mr. BARNHART. Every year.

Mr. GOOD. It was only a few months ago that for days and weeks the House conferees were engaged with the Senate conferees in attempting to settle this question. Irrespective of what this House does, every Member of the House who knows anything about the subject knows that the Senate will write the provision with regard to mileage; and it ought to, until the day arrives when we are brave enough and honest enough with the country and ourselves to bring before this House a bill from a committee that has thoroughly investigated the subject and thoroughly digested it, fixing the mileage of Members. Why, we all know that when this bill is enacted into law the mileage will be 20 cents a mile, irrespective of what this House does to-day, and it seems to me that it is folly for which the Members of this House ought to be condemned, when session after session they bring up this question in this way, especially at a short session of Congress. Everybody, at least on this side of the House, wants to aid in expediting legislation through Congress in order that there may be no special session. To take up the time of the House with propositions of this kind is, it seems to me, inexcusable. I do not care, therefore, to take any more time of the committee discussing the subject. I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. How much time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for nine minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want only a minute. This is a short session of Congress, which will expire at 12 o'clock on March 4, except so far as the clock may be turned back. It is invariably the rule and practice in the short session of Congress to have a large number of conference reports come in at the very end of the session.

It has been stated in the newspapers—and I have heard gentlemen on the other side of the House state—that both the administration of the Government and the administration in the House desired not to have a special session of Congress. I have questioned that statement, and I question it now. The only way a special session of Congress can be avoided is by passing the appropriation bills and having them signed by the President; because if one of the supply bills fails, it will be necessary to have a special session of Congress in order that the Government may continue to run. Yet here is a proposition that was thrashed out last year, when we had time to burn, when we could remain in session as long as we pleased and make such fight as we pleased, so long as we had the backbone to do it, and we yielded then. Now it is interjected again. There can be but one purpose in interjecting propositions like this into appropriation bills at the short session of Congress, and that is in the hope that they may defeat the passage of an appropriation bill in the end, in order to have a special session. I am not sure whether it is being done because the President wants a special session of Congress, or whether it is being done because the President does not want a special session—whether it is to aid him or to embarrass him. It is one or the other; and it comes from the other side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have always been reluctant to discuss the question of mileage of Members of Congress. My reluctance comes from the fact that the mileage paid to me under the law amounts to $92. It is so small a sum that it makes little difference whether I receive it or not, while other Members receive substantial sums, which many of them believe essential. My expenses in coming to and returning from sessions of Congress are relatively all out of proportion to the expense of most Members of Congress, because I have seven children in my family, for six of whom I pay railroad fares, and with myself, wife, and one servant my expenses are proportionately much larger than those of the ordinary Member of Congress.

Of course nobody takes seriously the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. He is just entertaining himself and the House by his suggestion that the proposition to change the mileage is a deliberate attempt, a deep-seated plot on the part of some one to try to embarrass the administration by defeating an appropriation bill and thus forcing an extra session of Congress.

It is a matter of considerable regret that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] should become so unduly excited in discussing the matter that he should attribute to those who differ with him the aspersion of his motives and characterization of his action in a manner that could not properly be applied either to gentlemen or to honest men. No one charged anyone who differed as to the provisions in the bill with being grafters or thieves, or desiring to take money to which they were not entitled. The distinguished gentleman should not picture himself in any one of these categories when it is not charged against him.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman has heard the discussions heretofore, and all the adjectives that he has now mentioned were used against those who were in favor of the present law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not resurrect all the arguments, good and bad and indifferent, either by the gentleman from Washington or other gentlemen in the House, from the dead past every time a question is presented to the House. What is the situation about mileage paid to Members of Congress? We might as well be honest with ourselves. Whatever differences of opinion we may have as to whether 20 cents a mile each way at each session is a proper sum to cover the traveling expenses of Members of Congress, the truth is that a large part of the citizens of this country believe that it is an excessive sum and that it would not be fixed at that sum if it were not for the fact that those who fix the rate are the beneficiaries of the rate. In other words, that while officials of the Government in every other department are compelled to travel upon official business of the Government, the rate fixed to cover the travel of Members of Congress, which they themselves fix, is two and a half times larger than the largest rate fixed for any other official of the Government.

I know that gentlemen differ on this question, but these are the facts that appeal to the public; they do not believe that we are justified in fixing this rate to cover the traveling expenses of Members of Congress.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Why not fix it at the actual traveling expenses, the same as that of all other officials of the Government, at 10 cents a mile?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But they are not fixed that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York three minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have jotted down my traveling expenses as they would be under the proposition to pay the actual traveling expenses of the Members and of those depending upon him, and I would receive more than $92 to bring my family to Washington and return once each session under such a law. I do not believe that we should fix the mileage of Members of Congress by what a Member under unusual conditions would get, any more than I believe it is fair to charge that an unmarried man who had no dependent relatives with receiving an undue amount when he receives the fixed rate. What should be done is to fix a fair amount for the average Member of Congress.

There are differences of opinion upon this matter. Some believe 10 cents an adequate sum, some think 5 cents is an adequate sum, and others believe that the Member should receive the traveling expenses of himself and the members of his immediate family. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Congress of the United States, as a matter of self-respect, ought to pay some attention to the sentiment of the country and reduce the rate of mileage. During the 16 years I have been in the House the same controversy has taken place in every session. It is not creditable to the dignity of this body. The mere fact that another body has resisted the attempts to reduce the mileage does not, in my opinion, justify Members showing indifference to what the actual facts are, or to the sentiment of the country. We should do whatever is necessary to place the membership of this House upon such a plane that it would reflect the dignity and self-respect which become a body representative of 90,000,000 of free American citizens. For these reasons I shall vote for any proposition which will tend to remove from the minds of a large number of our citizens the conviction that the mileage is excessive and at the same time reduce mileage from an excessive rate.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware that a committee of this House has recently reported a bill to give certain officials of the Government, in lieu of actual expenses which they now receive, 20 cents a mile for traveling expenses going and coming?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was not aware of it, but I venture the prophecy that that bill has no more chance of being enacted into law by Congress than I have of being translated into heaven. If there is any one who believes otherwise, I should like him to rise and say so.

Mr. MANN. It has been reported by a very distinguished committee of this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They do not mean it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, all Members of the House have decided convictions on this question. We are making an honest effort to reduce the expenses of this Government. We are "cutting every department of the Government to the bone."

It will take better with the country if we show a disposition to practice some economy in our own expenditures. Let us have a vote.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word in reply to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], if I can have his attention for a moment. The gentleman, by telling about his own family, illustrates the inequalities of this mileage proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I am not complaining and I am not objecting to the reduction.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I said the statement of the gentleman illustrates the inequality of which I complain. If the gentleman lived in Seattle instead of in New York and brought his family with him it would cost him $500 more each session than he would receive in the way of mileage. The proposition is: Is it fair to punish a man or to take from his compensation in proportion to the distance he lives from the Capital?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A man with seven children living on the Pacific coast has not time to come to Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, the gentleman is very much mistaken in that. He is not the only man who has seven children. Two of my colleagues can equal him in that respect, and they bring their families here, too. New York is not the only prolific place in the United States. If we could have a proposition here which we could honestly and economically administer of paying the actual expenses of a Member in bringing his family I would favor it, because this other proposition does bear unequally. Some of us get mileage more than we are entitled to. I get more mileage than I expend, but, on the other hand, my colleagues do not, and we ought in some way, if we could, equalize the matter. In other words, what I am protesting against is that while you take from the gentleman from New York perhaps $40 you take from one of my colleagues $500. It costs the gentleman from New York $20 to bring a member of his family to Washington and return and it costs my colleague $200 to bring each member of his family to Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. There was so much confusion that I do not think Members generally understood. Do I understand that the vote has been taken upon my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee just voted on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri and rejected it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken over again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken over again on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment?

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Texas and Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington) there were—ayes 50, noes 76.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY, and the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. JOHNSON, to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 52.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage of Representatives, Delegates, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $43,750.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. It has been suggested to me that another amendment ought to be offered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HARDY. I withdraw the parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Librarian of Congress is authorized to appoint a disbursing clerk, who shall also act as assistant superintendent of the library building and grounds and perform the duties of disbursing clerk under the aforesaid act and the act approved July 19, 1897 (30 Stat. L., p. 136). The disbursing clerk shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine and shall receive a salary of $2,500 per annum.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 15, after the word "of," strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, as all Members of the House know, the late superintendent, Mr. Green, died a few weeks ago, and the Committee on Appropriations are confronted with the problem of determining how the office which he had occupied should hereafter be filled, and the compensation thereof. I think there is no doubt about the truth of the common impression that Mr. Green received a salary of $5,000, or $2,000 more than the salaries given to the division chiefs in the Library, partly because he had been associated with the construction of the building and had rendered long, valuable, and distinguished services. I think the suggestion of the committee of consolidating the control of the Library Building, of merging in the office of Librarian the duties of the superintendent, is a wise one. I think the committee is right in that, and I think it is right to take advantage of the occasion to make a saving; and although I appear to be offering an amendment to increase the appropriation, I invite the attention of the House to the fact that following my suggestion, in cooperation with the suggestions of the committee, there will be an important saving in the administration of the Library Building; but I am seriously afraid, as I know the Librarian is, that in the administration of the Library as proposed we will not find the same degree of satisfactory and efficient work that we have had. It is proposed to appoint an assistant superintendent, with a salary of $2,500 a year.

I inferred from conversations that I had with members of the committee that it was their impression that the man who was next in rank to Mr. Green during his long term of service as superintendent would be promoted to this place, and that the assistant superintendent, of course, would receive a very much smaller salary. Now, it happens that in the personnel of the Library there is really no one to whom the Librarian could turn to secure a satisfactory and efficient conduct of the affairs of that office. The assistant superintendent is also made the disbursing clerk of the Library. There are about 430 people, as I remember it, in the Library. Their accounts have all to be paid by his check. They must be audited; they must be carefully examined into. There are any number of other accounts also that require personal attention, and the time of one clerk while Mr. Green was superintendent was completely occupied in doing this work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; but I will have to obtain more time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman suggests that there is no one now connected with the office to perform the duties of disbursing clerk and assistant superintendent. I want to ask the gentleman whether the chief clerk at the present time, who is now drawing a salary of $2,000, can not perform those duties?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, it is not a pleasant thing to make these comparisons, but I will say to the gentleman that there is not, for the chief clerk was promoted to the position two years ago from the position of stenographer, and lacks the necessary technical education and experience. The Librarian is a busy man with large administrative duties and little time to give to the work that was done by the late Mr. Green. The assistant superintendent ought to possess to some degree the peculiar qualifications that Mr. Green had. He ought to be a man professionally trained along the lines of engineering and building, if such a person can be had for the salary provided.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, is it the gentleman's idea that in addition to the disbursing clerk and assistant superintendent we should continue the present chief clerk in the division?

Mr. SLAYDEN. As clerk; I do not believe we ought to have any chief clerk at all in the office of the superintendent.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, is it the gentleman's idea to increase the force of clerks beyond what it is now?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; but you reduce it very much below that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; we do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the present organization of the Library, I will say in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, consists of a superintendent to be appointed by the President, who also acts as disbursing officer, and who, under the law, has been receiving $5,000 a year, and one chief clerk in his office at $2,000 a year. Now, that chief clerk has been the man who has looked after these accounts and attended to that sort of thing, requiring, of course, Mr. Green's signature, which office it is proposed to abolish; and the Librarian himself says that he thinks that there is no occasion for keeping the title of chief clerk, but they do need a clerk. Then one captain of the watch, who receives $1,400, who, perhaps because of his experience and because of his training, is better suited to be promoted to the office of assistant superintendent than any other man in his office, but, it seems, is disqualified because of his age. Then there is a chief engineer at a salary of $1,500 and a chief electrician at $1,500 and 125 subordinate employees. Now the bill proposes to abolish the superintendent, which is proper. I quite agree to that, and then the chief clerk——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We make him disbursing clerk.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But you also make him assistant superintendent. Now, his time as disbursing officer in the supervision of accounts, in the making of computations and things of that sort, will be entirely occupied, and for that position a $2,000 salary is adequate, but a $2,500 salary is not adequate to obtain the services of the sort of man who should be assistant superintendent and on whom would practically devolve the major portion of the work done by the late Mr. Green.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. The language now is as you change it that the disbursing clerk shall receive $2,500 per annum?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Would you really mean that the disbursing clerk should receive only $2,000 per annum?

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will wait a moment, there are some other amendments to be offered. In this next line you will see under the Library Building, "Disbursing clerk and assistant superintendent." We are going to leave the title of disbursing clerk.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact. The language in the clause which the gentleman is now seeking to amend is legislative language; it is the language of the law——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understand it. The subsequent provision is merely for the appropriation. Now, it seems to me that the gentleman, if he desires to present the matter as it should be, would reduce this salary from $2,500 to $2,000 in his amendment and increase the salary of the assistant superintendent to $3,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman overlooks the fact that the committee proposing the legislation says it is not at all improper that the assistant superintendent shall also be the disbursing clerk. The assistant superintendent will need and should have a clerk to do this work of auditing, computation, and things of that kind, as has been the case heretofore. Mr. Green was the disbursing officer.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it the gentleman's idea that the $3,000 will pay the salary of the assistant superintendent and the disbursing clerk also?

Mr. SLAYDEN. They are to be the same person.

Mr. TOWNER. I know they are to be the same person. And you would not have any other officer?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; I think there ought to be a clerk also.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me state the question, if I understand it, and see if I am right, if the gentleman will pardon me. You believe the superintendent as such ought to receive a salary of $3,000?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The assistant superintendent.

Mr. TOWNER. The assistant superintendent; yes. And you also desire there shall be an officer, who shall be the disbursing clerk, at $2,000?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No, sir. The assistant superintendent is expressly made the disbursing clerk, but I would also give them a clerk, not the chief clerk, not the disbursing officer, but a clerk at $2,000 that will do the work of that man.

Mr. TOWNER. Then you propose to follow that up with another amendment?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Two other amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just a few words ought to satisfy the committee. Col. Green was provided for by law as superintendent of the Library of Congress before it was finished at a salary of $5,000 a year to complete the building. He rendered very notable service in connection with the construction of the Library, and we retained him in his place until the day of his death. It is not now necessary to have a great engineer like Col. Green as superintendent of that building. When it was first constructed it had a lighting plant and a heating plant, and it was part of the duties of the superintendent of the building to have charge of that heating plant and lighting plant. We now have a central power plant, and from that central power plant are supplied the heat and light for the Library of Congress. As superintendent of the building certain duties are no more arduous and responsible than are the duties of the superintendent of the Senate Office Building and the superintendent of the House Office Building, both of whom receive a salary of $2,400 a year. As the disbursing officer his duties are not arduous. The disbursing officer in the Navy Department——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is a person known as the superintendent of the House Office Building, is there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir; at a salary of $2,400 a year—an assistant superintendent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And he works generally under the direction of Mr. Elliott Woods, does he not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Who provides plans and gives orders and that sort of thing, and who generally supervises the work and directs it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I suppose the Librarian of Congress will have exactly the same control over his assistants that Supt. Woods has over his assistants.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit me, he realizes that in a building which has more cubic feet of area than this building has they are constantly employed in making little repairs and keeping things up. A good deal of those repairs may perhaps be done by contract. A great deal certainly was done by the force of the Library itself under the direction of Col. Green because he was a capable man to see to the execution of repairs. Perhaps you could not get so distinguished an engineer, and no one asks that; but for the salary I propose you could get a young man thoroughly well trained and technical, to some extent, who could do that and who could more than save the difference in the salary by making repairs without resorting to the more expensive system of contract.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I was going to state the duties, comparatively speaking, of the disbursing officer. The disbursing officer in the Navy Department has 603 people on his rolls. He disburses $861,890 and gets a salary of $2,250. The disbursing officer of the Post Office Department has 1,402 people, disburses $1,186,695, and receives a salary of $2,250. The Treasury has a roll of 1,392 persons, and the disbursing officer there disburses $1,837,608 and receives a salary of $3,000. The Library of Congress has only 491 persons on its rolls, and the total amount disbursed a year is $630,205. The committee, comparing the work of this new officer with the work that other men do in the public buildings in the District, thought that they were fair in fixing the salary of $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more. I want to ask him a few questions myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, by the courtesy of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], I am permitted to ask the chairman another question. Those disbursing officers in these other departments of the Government that you speak of have an abundance of clerical help, have they not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. So have we clerical help in the Library.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have read you a list of the officers in the Library.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There are a number of clerks there who were under Col. Green. I do not know what they are doing, but they are there.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This man who was known there as clerk—I do not think they called him chief clerk?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; they called him chief clerk, and he received $2,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. By the way, let me say, in passing, that there ought not to be another man of that kind, because there is a chief clerk of the Library—Mr. Boyd, I think his name is. But that aside, the Library is open all but two days in the year; it runs on a double shift, and the contention is that this man's time will be occupied almost entirely—we may say, completely—with the clerical duties pertaining to the office. Now, if he were made assistant superintendent, coupling the duties of the two places, and he is given general supervision of the building, and has to go about and watch all the laborers employed there and keep them up to the mark, and has to make little daily repairs without first putting the Government to the expense of letting contracts and going out and getting the work done, he would have his time well occupied. He would be bound to neglect his other duties here. The Librarian is strongly of the opinion that for a salary of $3,000 a high-class, thoroughly trained, and fairly technical young man can be secured. The gentlemen of the committee should not forget that we are endeavoring to cooperate with them in this saving, not to the extent that we think will impair efficiency but in order that a material saving in the appropriations for the Library may be made.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOULDEN. I notice on page 27, line 7, you provide that the Librarian of Congress is authorized to appoint a disbursing clerk who shall also act as assistant superintendent of the Library building and grounds, and then you go down to line 16 and say, under the head of "Library building and grounds," what is a repetition of that, as it seems to me, and you say, "Disbursing clerk and assistant superintendent, $2,500." How many disbursing clerks and assistant superintendents do you intend to have?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Only one. The first paragraph creates the office and the second one appropriates for it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Do you propose to give him two salaries of $2,500 each?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. The first paragraph fixes the salary and the second appropriates for it.

Mr. GOULDEN. I asked that question because on a casual reading of the bill it looked as if you were providing for two disbursing clerks and two assistant superintendents. With that explanation I am fully satisfied.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. The one, as I say, creates the office and the other appropriates for it.

Mr. GOULDEN. That clears up the situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I may say that Col. Green for a number of years had been in very feeble health, and this Library is as well provided for in the bill you have before you as it has been in the years that have passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty in my mind is that the combination of these two offices into one seems to me to be so incongruous that I do not see how it is possible for you to secure the proper kind of a man, especially for $2,500 a year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman will pardon me. He says it is "incongruous." I will state to the gentleman that the superintendent of the building was also the disbursing officer, so that we are doing nothing more in this than has been the rule heretofore.

Mr. TOWNER. I understand; but I also understand that, as a matter of fact, while that was true, the superintendent performed only the duties of superintendent, and that a man who had a salary as chief clerk did almost exclusively the duty of disbursing officer.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This disbursing officer and assistant superintendent has the clerical force that he can use.

Mr. TOWNER. That is the proposition at issue. It might be true that if the disbursing officer had a qualified clerk the work might be done. But it occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that now is the time when we ought to separate these offices. The consolidation of the disbursing clerk and the assistant superintendent of the building is certainly not a happy one, and it can result in no good. It would appear evident that an entire separation of these offices should be made. Under the old system the difficulty was met by the superintendent doing the work of superintendence, and by the chief clerk doing exclusively the work of disbursing officer. Here you combine the offices again, but you do not provide for the disbursing clerk.

It is said that the work will be done by subordinate officers. I do not know whether that is true or not. I presume gentlemen speak advisedly when they say so. But the disbursing officer is rather an important officer. While it is true, as suggested by the chairman of the committee, that it is not necessary that he should be paid a very large salary, yet it certainly seems to me that provision should be made for such an officer, and I judge that it would be unwise to give to an ordinary clerk, receiving a salary of $800 or $900 a year, the important duty of disbursing officer, even for the disbursement of $600,000 a year to about 500 employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Library building and grounds: Disbursing clerk and assistant superintendent, $2,500; clerks—1 $1,600, 1 $1,400, 1 $1,000; messenger; assistant messenger; telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; captain of watch, $1,400; lieutenant of watch, $1,000; 16 watchmen, at $900 each; carpenter, painter, and foreman of laborers, at $900 each; 14 laborers, at $540 each; 2 attendants in ladies' room, at $480 each; 4 check boys, at $360 each; mistress of charwomen, $425; assistant mistress of charwomen, $300; 58 charwomen; chief engineer, $1,500; assistant engineers—1 $1,200, 3 at $900 each; electrician, $1,500; machinists—1 $1,000; 1 $900; 2 wiremen, at $900 each; plumber, $900; 3 elevator conductors, and 10 skilled laborers, at $720 each; in all, $74,345.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he has gone into the matter of the watchmen at $900 each? You know they are obliged to wear uniforms bought at their own expense, the same as our Capitol police, and the latter receive $1,050. It seems to me that the same salary should prevail for these uniformed watchmen. I am asking for information of the chairman of the committee to ascertain if he has gone into the matter thoroughly and if he is satisfied that that $900 is a sufficient compensation for good, respectable men to receive?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, after a very hard fight during the last session of Congress we increased the salary of watchmen in the Library of Congress from $60 a month to $75, and they are happy.

Mr. GOULDEN. Well, if they are satisfied, then I am. My thought is that they, as well as the Capitol police, should receive $1,200 per annum to enable these men to live and maintain their families decently.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6686. An act to supplement an act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914; and

S. 6689. An act making appropriation for the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting the cotton-futures tax: The unexpended balance on June 30, 1915, of the appropriation of $50,000 provided by section 19 of the act approved August 18, 1914, entitled "An act to tax the privilege of dealing on exchanges, boards of trade, and similar places in contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, and for other purposes," is reappropriated and made available for like purposes during the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to inquire of my colleague from South Carolina with reference to this item of the unexpended balance on June 30, 1915, of the appropriation of $50,000 provided by section 19 of the act approved August 18, 1914, known as the cotton-exchange tax. I want to know what we have spent on it to date, and what for?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No part of it has been expended up to this time, Mr. Chairman. We simply reappropriate it in order that it may be made available; but not one dollar of it, I understand, has been expended so far.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman know whether it is probable that any of it will ever be expended or not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not answer that question.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me to suggest that we have had a great deal of discussion, some attempted legislation, and finally some legislation with reference to dealing in cotton futures. It was believed by some people, and stated in evidence before the committee which investigated the question, that this country could not get along without a cotton exchange, and as an evidence of that the low price of cotton prevailing from the time that the European war began down to a few weeks ago, when the cotton exchange in New York reopened, was cited in support of that argument. It was said that the price of cotton was low because there was no cotton exchange, and with a great blare of trumpets and some exultation on the part of newspapers the cotton exchange was reopened. The result was that the very first day or two after it was reopened, instead of aiding the price, cotton fell about $2.50 a bale.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Fell from what?

Mr. BARTLETT. The price at which cotton opened on the cotton exchange went down about $2.50 a bale.

Mr. MANN. I heard gentleman after gentleman on the floor of this House, from the South, say that cotton was selling for 6 cents a pound, for 4 cents a pound, for 2 cents a pound, and that people brought it into town and could get no bid on it and carried it back home.

Mr. BARTLETT. And I understand that was absolutely true.

Mr. MANN. That is not true now anywhere.

Mr. BARTLETT. What is not true?

Mr. MANN. That you can not sell cotton in the South.

Mr. BARTLETT. But very little of it is being sold.

Mr. MANN. That may be; but a man who has it and takes it to town can sell it, and he can find out what he can get for it from the price on the cotton exchange.

Mr. BARTLETT. He can get about 6¾ cents a pound for it. It costs about 8 cents a pound to raise it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is like saying it costs a dollar a bushel to raise corn. I used to raise it at 25 cents a bushel, and made money on it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is a very expert farmer.

Mr. MANN. I thought I was going into a better business, but the fellows who have continued to raise corn have gotten rich at it.

Mr. BARTLETT. My proposition is that the cotton exchange does not help the price of cotton.

Mr. MANN. I know; and that is the statement that I am challenging. I think it does help it. When the cotton exchange was closed you could not sell cotton, and now when it is open you can sell it.

Mr. BARTLETT. We are not selling much of it. There is no market for it.

Mr. MANN. You are not very hard up then.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to suggest to my colleague from Georgia that the day the cotton exchange opened spot cotton was 8 cents a pound in the city of Houston, my home town, and that it went down $2.30 a bale.

Mr. BARTLETT. I said $2.50 a bale.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say also that the day the cotton exchange closed the price of cotton went down 3 cents a pound. I do not think it is a case of cause and effect in either instance.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not assert that it is, but I do deny the proposition that because the cotton exchange was opened the price of cotton went up, or that the cotton exchange was any benefit to the farmer in fixing the price of cotton or keeping up the price. Now, this bill which taxes the business of carrying on the cotton exchange was passed some time in the last session. There are two reasons why we are not getting a higher price for cotton. One is because the markets are closed. Another is because we have raised more cotton than we have raised before in quite a number of years.

Mr. SISSON. Ever in the world.

Mr. GARNER. Ever in the history of the country.

Mr. BARTLETT. Almost as large as in the history of the country. The gentleman from Illinois refers to the fact, as stated on the floor of the House, that cotton could not be sold. The gentleman will acquit me of making any such assertion when that matter was up. As far as I am concerned, I am not engaged in any effort to have the Government buy any cotton from my people, and I was not back of any such proposition. The cotton farmer is not benefited by the cotton exchange, and I do not believe it is necessary to have this large sum of money appropriated for the purpose of enforcing the act known as the cotton-exchange act. And while I make no motion to strike it out, you will find that this $50,000 will finally be converted back into the Treasury and no use made of it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, during the time when we were being regaled daily in this House with the stories of hardship among the cotton producers of the South I bought a bale of cotton and paid 10 cents a pound for it, or $53 for the bale. I knew at the time that cotton sold in the market at not over 5 cents a pound, and my action was purely a matter of friendship and charity. I still have the bale of cotton, and if it were not for putting it on the market and thereby throwing an extra bale of cotton on the market I would sell it quickly at 7 cents a pound, which I could now get for it, which I could not have gotten at the time I bought it. We were told every day in the House that cotton could not be sold; that we must have the Government buy the cotton; that the States must buy the cotton if the Government did not.

Every day we had a filibuster carried on in the House. The cotton exchanges were closed and the wheat exchanges were open. While cotton could not be sold or find a purchaser, wheat was going up in price. Have we heard anything in the last few days about the necessity of the Government furnishing money to buy cotton? Has anything further been done in reference to the $125,000,000 or the $150,000,000 which the bankers were going to raise in order to furnish capital to the South? Since the Cotton Exchange opened all of these things have disappeared in the air. The man who has cotton to-day can sell the cotton. Of course, he can not sell it at 15 cents a pound. No sane man would expect him to sell it at 15 cents a pound under the circumstances. But if the cotton exchanges were not open he could not sell it for 5 cents a pound; not only could not sell it for 5 cents a pound, but every gentleman from the South would be begging and imploring for aid and shedding tears to show how necessary it was for the Government to furnish the money to buy the cotton.

Of course, I do not know which set of gentlemen is stating the facts. I decline to discriminate between those reputable gentlemen, and when one set says that cotton has been reduced in price 3 cents a pound and is now only 7 cents a pound, and the other says that they could not sell it to begin with at 7 or 6 cents a pound, I wonder which one knows the facts. One side is mistaken; that is the charitable construction of it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, cotton is now selling far below the cost of production. The South will not make any such crop as some of the gentlemen here say it will make. There will in all probability be a million bales that will not be gathered. Last year at this time cotton was a precious item, and farmers were bending every energy to gather the last boll, because cotton was then selling at 13 cents per pound. Now, the cotton remaining in the field, a great deal of it, will not be gathered because some of it has been damaged, and the low price obtaining will not justify the farmers in gathering it. Gentlemen from all sections of the country are beginning to realize how the farmer of the South is being oppressed on account of the low price of cotton. If he can not get the cost of production for this product, he is in a woeful fix, and that is the condition of the farmers of the South to-day. He needs relief to-day and he needed relief before we adjourned in October. The amount of money that the bankers sought to raise I understand has been secured and will soon be ready to loan to the farmer. I saw a statement in the Post this morning that $135,000,000 has been raised, and various committees to look after these loans in the South have gone south to take charge of the work. It is stated that this money will be ready to loan to the farmers by or before the 1st of January, 1915. This, of course, will do some good, but we ought to have had relief in September or October.

A billion-dollar product—and that is what this cotton would be—bought at a reasonable figure, will, if the present price obtains, sell for less than half that amount. Our farmers bought mules for $250 apiece from the western mule dealers, and many have sold them in my district for $125 to $135, and the agents buying them have been shipping them to Europe to be used in the war. The low price of cotton is responsible for this deplorable condition among the cotton farmers of the South. Let me inform gentlemen here that cotton acreage will be greatly reduced. There was more wheat shipped into my town within six weeks in the early fall than has come there before in the last seven years. We are going to be forced to raise grain to compete with other parts of the country. We were content to raise cotton and let our northern and western brethren raise grain.

Mr. Chairman, our people will live through this distressing period somehow. There is a great demand for wheat. Everything in the way of foodstuffs is in great demand in Europe, while all the countries of Europe that use American cotton have not taken our cotton as heretofore, and this has hurt us tremendously. I am glad to state, however, that the Secretary of State has arranged for the shipping of cotton to Germany and Austria. American cotton in Germany to-day is selling for about 18 or 20 cents a pound; but we have not been able to get our cotton there before this time. The price of cotton is 7 cents a pound here, and it costs 10 cents to produce it. Germany and Austria will take about 3,000,000 bales, and this will help the price of cotton here. Grain and foodstuffs of every kind are in great demand, and I repeat that the southern cotton producer is harder hit by the European war than any other section of the country. If this country could aid the producer in holding this cotton until it sold at a fair price it would be doing a great service to thirty-odd millions of patriotic American people.

I want to make a prediction here now, and that is that some of this very cotton crop will sell for 15 cents a pound. It will be in the hands of somebody, but I fear that the most of it will be out of the hands of those who produced it. The man who toiled in the heat of the day, the man who picked it in the cold of winter, will not get the benefit of that good price; but some of the cotton grown in the South in 1914 will sell for 15 cents or more. [Applause.]

Next year the crop will be greatly reduced, probably one-half, and in the next fall the spinners abroad will pay a greater price for it than they have ever paid. There were 146,000,000 spindles in operation in the world in 1914—4,000,000 more than ever were operated before.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman stated that some of this cotton would sell for 15 cents a pound, and said the most of it would be out of the hands of those who grew it. Is it not true that all of the cotton has passed out of the hands of those who grew it?

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no; a large portion, a great deal of it, is yet in the hands of the producer.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask purely as a matter of information, for I heard a gentleman say who had been traveling through the South recently that the planters who grew the cotton had disposed of it.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; a great many of those who produced it have had to sell because they could not hold it. In many instances they were forced to sell. But mark my prediction: Some of this cotton crop will bring 15 cents per pound. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Independent Treasury.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 57, line 15, by striking out the words "Independent Treasury."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman's reserving the point of order. No point of order lies against it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; it would lie if it should make an appropriation for something that was not authorized—by the striking out of these words.

Mr. MANN. But it would not make an appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not objecting to the gentleman talking.

Mr. MANN. Then let the gentleman withdraw his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I decline to do that.

Mr. MANN. Then I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUSSELL). The gentleman from New York makes the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the gentleman state his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I just make the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is to strike out simply the headline "Independent Treasury."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I make the point of order against the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any reason to state why the point of order should be sustained?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is so apparent that I do not want to take up time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The reason is that the gentleman is the very distinguished chairman of a very distinguished committee, and he thinks the House has not any right to dot the "i's" or cross the "t's" after the bill has been reported.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman from Illinois orders me to withdraw my point of order. I decline to do so, and I still make it.

Mr. MANN. Far be it from me to be put in the attitude of ordering the gentleman to do anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that my object in moving to strike out these two words is to call attention to the fact that the appropriations for subtreasuries, three pages and a half of them, are still carried in this bill, although we were informed when the Federal reserve act was passed that when the Federal reserve system got into working operation the subtreasuries would be abolished, and the money taken in by the collectors of customs and the collectors of internal revenue would be deposited in the Federal reserve banks where it ought to go. Here is a chance to save at one fell swoop about half a million dollars in salaries—$478,820—paid for utterly useless offices that are now continued which we were told would be abolished when the Federal reserve system was put into operation. The offices ought to be abolished. There are nine of these subtreasuries located in Boston, Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco. I suppose the Representatives from those various cities are opposed to the abolishment of these offices.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why?

Mr. PLATT. Because there are $479,000 worth of jobs there. That is the only reason I can see for keeping these offices still in commission.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is to be regretted that while we continue to create new offices, new boards, and commissions we never abolish any of the old offices nor dispense with the salaries. As has been pointed out here, about half a million dollars in salaries is contained in this bill for persons to do work that it was intended the reserve banks should perform. The chairman of the subcommittee is to be commended for attempting at least to bring about the abolishment of these useless offices, and the answer of the Treasury officials to the question of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] respecting what steps had been taken to abolish these offices is very illuminating. Mr. Malburn says:

No steps have been taken as yet, but the future policy of the Treasury Department toward the subtreasuries and the Federal reserve banks has been under consideration for some time. At the Secretary's request I have prepared for him a suggested plan of depositing the funds which are now in the Treasury and the subtreasuries, and which the Federal reserve act provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, deposit with the Federal reserve banks, with these banks. It contemplates the deposit of a considerable part of the free money in the Treasury with the reserve banks, retaining, however, a sort of emergency fund of, say, $25,000,000 in gold, which would be held in the Treasury in order to prevent an entire cessation of its activities in case the whole financial condition of the country should go to smash, and so that we would still have that much money in gold.

When the Federal reserve banking bill was before the House it was pointed out on this side of the House that the system was capable of too great inflation, and the ultimate results might be that it would go to the wall. Now, here comes a great official of the Treasury Department, and by his testimony says that we must always keep at least $25,000,000 in gold in the Treasury, because if it was deposited in the reserve banks they might go to smash, and therefore it would be better to retain this organization. Obviously this organization ought not to be continued. We are making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and it seems to me that long before that time will have been reached the subtreasuries should be abolished, and the work that is being performed by the independent treasuries of the United States should be performed by the Federal reserve banks of the country, as was in contemplation at the time that law was passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Iowa believe that the Committee on Appropriations should report a provision on a bill which repeals a law establishing an Independent Treasury system?

Mr. GOOD. In view of the fact that we have already passed a law creating Federal reserve banks that are to do the work of the independent treasuries, I do not believe the Committee on Appropriations ought to report out a bill carrying a half million dollars in salaries for the work that is to be performed by the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that is not the question I asked the gentleman. I am repeating a question that he asked me earlier in the day, and that is, does the gentleman believe that the Committee on Appropriations should report a legislative provision in an appropriation bill which repeals the law which created the Independent Treasury system, and in that way eliminate the appropriations contained in the bill?

Mr. GOOD. In the first place, that is not the question at all which I propounded to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman asked me if I thought the Committee on Appropriations should report a provision in the bill repealing an act requiring an agricultural census to be taken every five years, and thereby save an appropriation of over $2,000,000. The question I asked the gentleman from Iowa is exactly the same, except it substitutes the act creating the Independent Treasury system for the act creating an agricultural census to be taken every five years.

Mr. GOOD. Oh——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I desired to ascertain if what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and whether one rule should apply when I speak on a matter and another rule should apply when the gentleman from Iowa speaks.

Mr. GOOD. Then the gentleman from New York must agree with me that the Committee on Appropriations, in this case, ought to have refused to report out this appropriation of half a million dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. The gentleman from Iowa will recall that not until this session did the committee wait to inquire into this matter, but at the last session of Congress, about a year ago, the committee took up the question as to the necessity of continuing the Independent Treasury system and subtreasuries. It was then stated by officials of the Treasury Department that it had been impossible to determine the effect upon the Independent Treasury system of the operation of the Federal reserve act. I understand that no one lives who can tell just what effect the Federal reserve act will have upon the subtreasuries or the Independent Treasury system until it is in working order and those connected with it have an opportunity to determine what is to be done. I think it would be great foolhardiness to abolish the Independent Treasury system without making ample provision for the continuance of its functions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Iowa must agree that until it is possible to say definitely whether there is necessity to continue the subtreasuries or whether it is necessary to modify the law in some way, so as to fit in the independent treasury system with the new financial system resulting from the Federal reserve act, it would not be the part of wisdom to refuse to appropriate for the compensation of officials necessary to continue the fiscal operations of the Government so far as they are controlled by the Independent Treasury system. I have not hesitated to advocate the abolition of offices. I helped to abolish the Court of Commerce, to abolish certain officials in connection with the mints and assay offices——

A MEMBER. And the Tariff Commission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And to reorganize the customs service, to abolish pension agencies, and I could enumerate a long list of other officials who were abolished by a Democratic Congress which Republican Congresses for 16 years failed to abolish.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Not just now.

Mr. SISSON. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. GOOD. But I desire to answer the gentleman from New York first. I did not intend to say anything in criticism of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting out this provision. Possibly nothing else could be done in view of the estimates and in view of the urgent request of Treasury officials, as was shown by the hearings. What I did intend to do was to criticize a department of the Government having this matter in charge for not terminating these independent treasuries, so that it would be unnecessary to make appropriations for them for 1916.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GOOD. Not just yet. I certainly would not want to criticize the committee for reporting out a provision, in view of the fact that on page 59 there is an item of $171,660 for continuing the office in New York. Now, I assume, of course, my friend from New York has considerable patronage there——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I should be glad to see it abolished, because there is not a Democratic holding office in it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Amen.

Mr. GOOD. Let us abolish all of them, then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I favor retaining the office. So far as the personnel of the office is concerned——

Mr. MANN. They were supporters of Wilson, but not Democrats.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Any official who is necessary for the fiscal operations of the Government should be retained. I suppose we will have to continue to do the best we can with Republican officeholders instead of Democrats.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman realizes they are supporters of the President, but he says they are not Democrats. The gentleman makes a distinction that is not apparent to some of us.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not. That is another misfortune that these employees are neither Democrats nor supporters of the administration.

Mr. GOOD. What are they?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are of the same party as the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Illinois—Republicans.

Mr. MANN. Who is the subtreasurer at New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is one, I beg pardon, the assistant treasurer at New York.

Mr. MANN. He is a subtreasurer appointed by the present President?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He is.

Mr. MANN. But all the employees are not Tammanyites.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think he is a member of Tammany Hall, although I do not know. I am not a member myself, yet I am a good Democrat; but the assistant treasurer is an appointee of the President, and he receives $8,000 of the $171,000, and I think it is a safe statement to make that 99 per cent of the other employees are Republicans. If I had my way they would not continue in office, and there would be no necessity of abolishing the office to get rid of them.

Mr. MANN. And if these places were filled with Democrats the service would be so inefficient that they would have to abolish the office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; they would be the same kind of Democrats as myself. The gentleman from Illinois has so repeatedly complimented me on my efficiency that it is not necessary to compliment me on those I recommend for office.

Mr. SISSON. I tried to get an opportunity to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question, but he declined to yield. But I would like to ask him now if he recalls a provision in the new Federal reserve act which provides that the independent treasuries will be dispensed with as soon as the Federal Reserve Board is organized and ready to abolish them?

Mr. GOOD. No; I think the provision is not in those words. There is some provision in the Federal reserve act that I recall providing that the work of the Independent Treasury may be transferred to the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SISSON. Is it not true that the deposits are to be made in these 12 regional reserve banks, and that as soon as the Secretary of the Treasury ascertains that he can dispense with the independent treasuries under the old system he has the authority to abolish all of these systems now?

Mr. GOOD. I think that is true.

Mr. SISSON. Therefore the Committee on Appropriations, under the testimony as taken here, were not warranted in ruthlessly abolishing these various subtreasuries until the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury could take care of Government deposits and transact the business of the Government under the new system.

Mr. GOOD. How long is it to take the Government to do that?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The committee will be authorized, however, after a thorough investigation of this matter at the next session of Congress, in 1916, to determine for themselves whether or not this can be abolished; and if they determine it can be abolished regardless of the opinion of the Treasury Department they can do it.

Mr. SISSON. It can be done. I do not believe there is a Member of Congress, irrespective of what party is in power, who would assume the responsibility of abolishing these adjuncts of the old system, necessary as they were to the proper administration of the old system. I do not believe there is anyone who would take the responsibility of abolishing these subtreasuries until this new financial system was in working order and when they could do it without disturbing the finances of the country.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Federal reserve act provides that the general funds of the United States, the funds arising from the collection of customs and revenues, shall be deposited in the Federal reserve banks, but that the Secretary of the Treasury can also use the national banks. I do not think it gives him definite authority to abolish the subtreasuries.

Mr. SISSON. My recollection is that that bank act provides in so many words the plenary power to the Secretary of the Treasury and Federal Reserve Board to abolish these subtreasuries when they in their discretion see fit and proper.

Mr. PLATT. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. My colleague [Mr. WINGO] possibly can explain that.

Mr. SISSON. I can not say the extent of that power, because I looked for the act and could not find it. I want to say to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, when the next bill is before Congress, unless they make a showing as in these hearings, unless they make a strong showing as to the necessity of keeping them, unless they make a showing that it is absolutely essential, I shall be as strongly in favor of abolishing these propositions, irrespective of the Treasury, as the gentleman, because I think 12 months will give them ample time to take care of these funds.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is in error as to the act providing as he said. Section 15 of the act provides:

SEC. 15. The moneys held in the general fund of the Treasury, except the 5 per cent fund for the redemption of outstanding national-bank notes and the funds provided in this act for the redemption of Federal reserve notes, may, upon the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be deposited in Federal reserve banks, which banks, when required by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall act as fiscal agents of the United States; and the revenues of the Government or any part thereof may be deposited in such banks, and disbursements may be made by checks drawn against such deposits.

Mr. SISSON. Now, the gentleman is on that committee, and it is possible that I may have gotten it out of the debates, but during the time this bill was being discussed it was clearly stated that these subtreasuries would be dispensed with.

Mr. PLATT. It was clearly stated, and they ought to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. They ought to be dispensed with, but I am unwilling to take the responsibility of doing it at this time in view of the statement made from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The question of whether or not the Independent Treasury system should be abolished I do not think is a proper one to consider as a provision of an appropriation bill. The Committee on Appropriations could not do other than make the necessary provisions for the carrying on of these subtreasuries during the coming year. It should be borne in mind that the Federal reserve act gives three years time for the shifting of the reserves in the national banks to these regional reserve banks, and it certainly would not be the part of wisdom for the Government to undertake to abolish all these subtreasuries and depositories in 30 days after you put these banks into operation.

I do not think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] caught the drift of the testimony of Mr. Malburn. I do not think he did him justice, although I think he misinterpreted his testimony unintentionally. There was nothing in his testimony to the effect that he thought these banks would go to smash. He said, "In case the whole financial condition of the country should go to smash." It is nothing unusual for a man connected with the Treasury Department to take into consideration the fact that there might arise such a condition as has arisen two or three times in years past. In the latter part of this testimony I think he states the position of the Treasury Department very correctly, and I think it is the sound position for the Treasury Department to take. This is his statement before the committee:

Mr. MALBURN. No steps have been taken as yet, but the future policy of the Treasury Department toward the subtreasuries and the Federal reserve banks has been under consideration for some time. At the Secretary's request I have prepared for him a suggested plan of depositing the funds which are now in the Treasury and the subtreasuries, and which the Federal reserve act provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, deposit with the Federal reserve banks, with these banks. It contemplates the deposit of a considerable part of the free money in the Treasury with the reserve banks, retaining, however, a sort of emergency fund of, say, $25,000,000 in gold, which would be held in the Treasury in order to prevent an entire cessation of its activities in case the whole financial condition of the country should go to smash, and so that we would still have that much money in gold.

The plan which I have outlined and presented to the Secretary also includes the withdrawal of the funds now on deposit with the national banks which have been designated as depositories throughout the country to the extent, possibly of nine-tenths of those banks, and depositing that money in the Federal reserve banks. A number of the national-bank depositories in the country will have to be retained as depositories, and Government funds will have to be retained in those banks, for the reason that under the law collecting officers of the Government are required to deposit the moneys which they have actually received and are not permitted to convert them into drafts for the purpose of making remittances to a distant point. Consequently I have suggested or advised that where the deposits of collecting officers exceed a certain sum—of, say, three or four hundred thousand dollars per annum—the depositories shall be maintained in those cities, as otherwise the burden on the collecting officers of remitting to the reserve banks would be considerable in the way of transportation charges. So that it will be necessary to retain those depositories in certain cities for that purpose as well as for the purpose of providing funds to enable those depositories to cash the checks issued by the different disbursing officers of the Government.

Beyond that point of depositing the available Government funds with the reserve banks, no definite plan of dealing with the reserve banks has been worked out that I know of, although the Secretary may have something in his mind. I have felt that it would be necessary to await the opening of these reserve banks and to make an investigation of how they are succeeding and also an investigation of the question of whether they can handle this business after they do open up, without too much expense to themselves, before it would be advisable to work out any very complete plan of transferring all of the Government's business from the subtreasuries to these banks, if, indeed, it should be deemed desirable to transfer all of that business to those banks at all. It may be, as time passes by, that it will be demonstrated that the subtreasuries can not be done away with entirely.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do you think it well to make appropriations for them for the next fiscal year anyway?

Mr. MALBURN. I do not think that it would be possible for the Federal reserve banks to take over the duties of the subtreasuries to any consequential degree at all, so as to make any difference in their expenses prior to the close of the fiscal year 1916. At any rate, it is now too soon after the opening of the banks for me—or, I believe, for anybody else—to say that the subtreasury business will be reduced at all on account of the opening of the reserve banks before the end of that year.

Now, the question of whether or not the subtreasuries should be abolished should not be determined until the Federal reserve system is thoroughly tested. The Federal reserve banks have just been opened. The Treasury Department would certainly be unwise to undertake to do in 1 month's time with the Government funds what you have given the banks of the country 36 months' time in which to do with their reserves.

Mr. GOOD. It is true that Mr. Malburn states that $25,000,000 in gold should be held in the Treasury to prevent cessation of its activities in case the whole financial condition of the country should go to smash. Now, if that $25,000,000 in gold were not kept in the Treasury but were deposited in some place elsewhere, under the law it would have to be with the Federal reserve bank, would it not?

Mr. WINGO. Not necessarily.

Mr. GOOD. Where could it be deposited?

Mr. WINGO. At any of the Government depositories.

Mr. GOOD. It would naturally be deposited in the Federal reserve banks if they were the soundest.

Mr. WINGO. If the Secretary of the Treasury exercised the discretion vested in him under the law, he could put it there.

Mr. GOOD. If he had complete faith in the soundness of the Federal reserve system, why would he want to keep $25,000,000 in the Federal Treasury instead of depositing it in the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. WINGO. The $25,000,000 that the gentleman refers to is separate from the trust funds in the Treasury. The only fund that Mr. Malburn referred to was $25,000,000 in gold taken from the general fund and not from the trust funds. It would naturally appear, although it does not appear in the hearings, that it would be reasonable for the Secretary of the Treasury, under his discretion, to deposit all the Government funds, if he thought fit, in these banks, and to retain the sum of $25,000,000 in the Treasury. It is thought by those in favor of the Federal reserve banks that there will not be a recurrence of conditions that occurred heretofore under the old system, but it is proper to assume that that would not be absolutely sure, and if the Secretary of the Treasury thought that there would be danger, in spite of these reserve banks, of a financial crash, it might be the part of wisdom to keep $25,000,000 of the general funds in the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. Obviously Mr. Malburn had not in mind the 5 per cent required to be deposited in the Treasury—in the trust fund—but he had in mind the money that would naturally be deposited in the Federal reserve banks. A careful reading of that—and I have read it several times—will convince one that he had in mind only the Federal reserve banks when he spoke of "the financial institutions."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think it idle to expect a Democratic Congress to practice economy or to expect a Democratic administration to encourage economy.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] just stated that we gave three years to the banks to deposit their reserves in the Federal reserve banks, and said we ought to give as long a time to the Government. Why, the three years given to the banks is because the banks are loaning money. They have credits and debits. The Government has a little money in the subtreasuries, and it does not concern a single person on earth, so far as credits are concerned, whether the money is in the Subtreasury at Chicago or in the Federal reserve bank at Chicago——

Mr. MADDEN. Except that it would get into circulation if it went into the Federal reserve bank at Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Now, what are the facts? The Federal reserve banks were exploited with great expectations of what they were going to do. There is no one here who would know of their existence, for anything that they have done so far; but they did have the chance to do one thing. They had the chance to take the money of the Government, now in the vaults of the subtreasuries, and put it into the Federal reserve banks, acting as the fiscal agents of the Government, and have the Government checks paid by the Federal reserve banks instead of by the subtreasuries through the clearing house. That could be done with a saving of half a million dollars in salaries, because the expenses of the Federal reserve banks are not paid by the Government, while those of the subtreasuries are. Of course it could not be done in a moment.

Last year I raised this question in the House, but the Federal reserve banks were not then in operation. When the estimates were made the Federal reserve banks were not in operation, and no one was certain when they would be in operation. But now that the Federal reserve banks are in operation, why should we keep up a separate establishment of the Government, at the cost of half a million dollars, in order to retain possession of a few million dollars—and that is all there is to be retained possession of—in the subtreasuries instead of placing it in the Federal reserve banks or putting the gold reserve where it belongs, in the Federal Treasury here.

It is purely a matter of influence on the part of the men who hold the jobs. There is $31,500 to be disbursed in Baltimore, with a Democratic subtreasurer. There is $46,570 to be disbursed in Boston, and I presume with a Democratic subtreasurer. There is $71,420 to be disbursed in Chicago, with a Democratic subtreasurer, and so forth; and each dollar to be expended is a strong argument against abolishing the offices. Each subtreasurer is a strong argument in favor of the appropriation. But the business of the Government could better be handled by the Federal reserve banks, and the interests of the country would be better subserved by having the business handled by the Federal reserve banks.

Why do you, when all the country is wondering whether the Feredal reserve banks will make good, want to give them a black eye? Why do you want to show distrust of this creature that you claimed came through the President of the United States? Why are you not willing to show confidence in the Federal reserve banks? Why are you afraid to deposit the money in those banks? Are you afraid the banks can not make good?

Well, I can understand why some gentlemen are not particularly enthusiastic over this pet of the Secretary of the Treasury; but after all, in the interest of economy, you ought not to strike at the Government's interests simply because you do not like Mr. McAdoo. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am just as anxious that all useless governmental activities shall cease as anybody. When we were making up this bill, I asked the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury whether we might discontinue the appropriations for the Independent Treasury. The administration is not unmindful of the possibilities under the Federal reserve law. Assistant Secretary Malburn says that they have that question under consideration. But you must understand that the estimates for the fiscal year 1916 were made up before the Federal reserve banks were in operation, and when the representative of the Secretary of the Treasury came before the committee, he was asked what steps had been taken for the discontinuance of the Independent Treasury. He states in his testimony that the matter had been considered and is being considered, but that neither he nor any other man at this time can say just when we shall be able to transfer all the Government's fiscal business to the Federal reserve banks and abolish the Independent Treasury.

The Federal reserve banks have only been opened 30 days to-day. Now, in order to take care of this very situation I propose to offer an amendment to this bill that will authorize the Secretary of the Treasury at any time before the close of the fiscal year 1916, if it can be done, to discontinue any one or all the independent treasuries.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 13, noes 32.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall determine and report to Congress at its next session what, if any, necessity exists for a continuance of the Independent Treasury or any subtreasury thereof, and if in his judgment the same or any subtreasury can be discontinued before the close of the fiscal year 1916 he is authorized and directed to discontinue them and cover the appropriations therefor into the Treasury."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment is in order. It effects a reduction in the bill. It will affect the number of employees and their compensation.

Mr. MANN. I do not see why it is not just as much in order as the mileage proposition was.

Mr. WINGO. I do not think it is in order. It is an original proposition to abolish the Independent Treasury.

Mr. MANN. That is in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be in order to offer an amendment to abolish the whole Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. On what ground does the gentleman base his point of order?

Mr. WINGO. It is new legislation, which is not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the provision of Rule XXI, which makes in order legislation on an appropriation bill that reduces the number of officials or their compensation, or reduces the amount carried by the bill, this provision is in order. It may reduce the number of officials. It may reduce their compensation, and may affect the amount carried in the bill. It is in order under all three propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York if this amendment reduces the amount of money appropriated in the bill, or does it reduce the compensation paid to any official?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it has any effect at all, it will do all of those things. If it does not have any effect, it can not do any of them; but it is legislation which is designed to abolish certain existing offices for which provision is made in the bill. It is just as much in order as the provision abolishing the pension agencies in the pension appropriation bill. That is the manner in which they were abolished.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, in addition to that it puts new duties on the Secretary of the Treasury, and it does not reduce this appropriation bill a single dollar. There is a possibility that in the future it may cut down the expenses of the Government, but it does not reduce this appropriation. But it is subject to the further point of order that it is new legislation imposing new duties upon the Secretary of the Treasury and requiring him to investigate and make a report, which will entail expense and place another burden upon the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a matter of argument.

Mr. WINGO. There is no assurance that under the Federal reserve act, if the Secretary of the Treasury should transfer the general fund to the reserve banks, as he may do under the law, it would reduce the expenses of the Government. If you will remember how the expenses of the Federal Reserve Board are met, you will see that in the end the Federal Government must pay indirectly, it is true, some of the expenses of these Federal reserve banks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law the Government does not pay any of those expenses.

Mr. WINGO. You will see that in the end it does. I am talking about the ultimate effect. I am not talking about direct appropriations therefor.

Mr. MANN. You are guessing, instead of following the law.

Mr. WINGO. The whole thing is a guess as to what is going to be the effect of it. That is one reason why I oppose further action now. These banks opened 30 days ago, and before the system is fairly started you propose by an amendment hastily drawn and given no consideration by the proper committee to abolish the Treasury of the Government and place all these funds in the banks. The present law was carefully drawn, was fully considered, and it is unwise to make further change without consideration. Let us give the new system a trial first.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the question is free from difficulty at all. The provision of the Holman rule is:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States—

And so forth.

The rest is not applicable. That is the rule. The question is whether this amendment retrenches expenditures by a reduction in the number of offices. It does not affect the salaries of those offices unless the offices are abolished. Now, plainly the amendment would be in order if it provided that at the end of a year, or in the middle of the next fiscal year, these offices should be abolished, because that would be a reduction in the number of the offices. Now, what the amendment does is to give to the Secretary of the Treasury the power to abolish these offices, as I understand the amendment, in which case the amount appropriated shall be covered back into the Treasury. I do not recall when such a question came up before, though I would be inclined to think that giving the power to the Secretary of the Treasury to do a thing was no broader than doing it ourselves, and that where we could do it and be in order it would be in order for us, by an amendment, to give the authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to abolish the offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is problematical whether this amendment will reduce the number of offices or not in the course of the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made; that it may do it or may not do it, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct. So the Chair does not think it comes within the Holman rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, chief clerk, and cashier, $1,800.
For wages of workmen and other employees, $1,500.
For incidental and contingent expenses, $500.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 64, by striking out lines 18, 19, and 20 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:
"Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: Assayer in charge, who shall perform the duties of melter, $1,800; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $3,000. For wages of workmen or other employees, $2,000. For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000."

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered simply restores the provision for the maintenance of the Salt Lake office found in the existing law. I have consulted the hearings and I fail to find any explanation for discrimination which seems to have been provided for the support of the office. I have consulted the Book of Estimates, and I find that the Secretary of the Treasury has asked for the appropriation that I have enumerated, and has asked for an increase in the number of workmen and other employees of the office. I have confined my amendment simply to the restoration of the provisions of the current law, and I hope that the committee will consent to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the bill carries one assayer in charge, who shall be chief clerk and cashier, at $1,800. If the amendment of the gentleman from Utah is adopted, it will result in having two men—one at $1,800 and one at $1,200 to supervise the work of one workman, who draws $1,500.

Mr. HOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has asked for a sufficient fund, $2,400, for the employment of workmen needed there in the office?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is true that the Secretary of the Treasury did submit an estimate of $2,400 to provide for one workman at $1,500 and one at $900. The work of the office heretofore has been done by one man at $1,500, and I think that has been the case for two or three years. The committee saw no reason and had no facts before it which would justify it in increasing the force of workmen in the assay office at Salt Lake City.

In addition to that, the gentleman's amendment asks for a thousand dollars for incidental and contingent expenses, whereas there was expended in 1914 only the sum of $257.30. The committee thought it was giving an ample amount when it allowed $500. The gentlemen on the other side have talked economy this afternoon, and it seems to me that here is one place where they can show some real economy, and we ask them to join those on this side in voting down the amendment.

Mr. MANN. This happens to be a Republican State, and so you take a crack at it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a charge by the gentleman from Illinois which is not justified by anything in this bill. If the gentleman will look over this part of the bill relating to the assay offices, he will find that the committee has consistently made reductions in all of the States where the expenditures made heretofore showed that they were justified.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has given no facts to justify this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that the committee has taken a crack at this assay office because it is in a Republican State is due to pique at the people of that State for what they did to the Republican Party in the last campaign.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; we have no pique at the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Utah to the fact that his amendment ought to provide for striking out lines 21 and 22 also.

Mr. MANN. If the amendment prevails, a motion will be made to strike those out.

Mr. HOWELL. I will ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be modified so as to provide for striking out lines 21 and 22 also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Utah as modified.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOWELL) there were 6 yeas and 19 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the accounts and vouchers relating to the expenditure of the appropriations for government in the Territories shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior for administrative examination and by him passed to the Auditor for the Interior Department for settlement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the reason for changing the practice and policy of the Government as provided in this paragraph?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say that in regard to the items coming in from Alaska and Hawaii there was nobody who had supervision of them and nobody who could come before the Committee on Appropriations and give us any information. All the committee had in the world was the printed requests. We provided in the last legislative bill that the estimates from these outlying territories should come through and be submitted through the Department of the Interior. In order to make the whole thing uniform we have put a provision in this bill that their accounts and vouchers shall pass through the same channel.

Mr. MANN. Will not that result in creating in the Interior Department a department of accounts of Territories?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We will hesitate a long time before we give them any additional force for that small duty.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how small it may be; however, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Chief of Ordnance: Chief clerk, $2,250; chief of division, $2,000; principal clerk, $2,000; clerks—5 of class 4, 7 of class 3, 12 of class 2, 26 of class 1, 9 at $1,000 each, 4 at $900 each; two messengers; assistant messenger; messengers—1, $780; 1, $720; laborer; in all, $91,610.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few moments ago, during my unavoidable absence from the Chamber, an amendment was offered providing for a legislative reference corps and an appropriation of $25,000 therefor, and I ask that I may discuss that matter for five minutes out of order. The amendment went out on a point of order. I very much regret that this bill does not contain, and will not contain when it passes the House, an appropriation for this purpose. My understanding is that objection was made that we had no legislation on the subject, and that in the absence of legislation an appropriation would not only be out of order but it would be unwise to make an appropriation without legislative direction as to the work and the scope of the activities of the corps which the appropriation would provide for.

The last legislative bill provided an appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of organizing a legislative reference corps. A small corps was organized, and they now have offices in the Capitol. I am of opinion that it would be very difficult in advance of experience under a corps of this kind for any committee of the House to determine just what its duties should be or to provide legislation properly limiting its activities. I believe we can only develop that by actual practice, and that is why I regret the appropriation was not made in order that this corps might be continued. I do not believe that we should have a large corps engaged in this legislative reference work, but I do think that we ought to have a small, well-equipped, competent corps, such as has been organized for work of the character contemplated. Just what matters Members of Congress might desire to bring before them, just what matters it might be proper for them to become informed on, we can not well judge until we have had some experience in the matter. I know, as one Member of Congress, that I very frequently need information which such a corps as this could furnish—need it in the discharge of my public duties—and I believe that every Member frequently finds reason to call for or to seek the services of some one qualified to give information with regard to legislation already enacted, in its relation to legislation proposed, and also information touching and bearing upon the legislation before Congress. I think that it is true that at times in the past this matter of legislative reference bureaus has been overdone, but I believe that we could organize a corps which would be very useful and valuable to Members. I believe we have such a corps already organized, and it would be a most unfortunate thing, I think, if that corps were now disbanded, and I hope that when the bill becomes a law it will contain this item for the legislative reference corps.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenses, including stationery, furniture, telegraph and telephone service, and necessary printing and binding, $3,200, which sum, together with the foregoing amounts for salaries and rent, shall be paid from the permanent appropriation for militia under the provisions of section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, and no other or further sums shall be expended from said appropriation for or on account of said Division of Militia Affairs during the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 72, line 8, after the word "salaries," strike out the words "and rent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Of the foregoing amounts appropriated under "Public buildings and grounds," the sum of $35,275 shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How is the amount to be paid by the District of Columbia out of these items under the public-buildings provision arrived at?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It does not include the clerical force. It does include the watchmen in the parks.

Mr. MANN. What does it include? How do you get at it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It includes all of the people provided for beginning on line 3, page 74.

Mr. MANN. But I see the first item on page 74 is for foremen, gardeners, mechanics, and laborers employed in the public grounds, $31,200; and then there is an item for watchmen of $17,640, another item of $15,960, besides an item in advance of $16,140. Thirty-five thousand two hundred and seventy-five dollars is much less than these items.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is only half of it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the Committee on Appropriations in this bill is continuing the half-and-half proposition which the Committee on Appropriations yesterday abolished in the District bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are appropriating in accordance with existing law and not in accordance with what may be law.

Mr. MANN. That was not done in the District bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We did not have that bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the Committee on Appropriations supported the proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The House did that.

Mr. MANN. But that committee put it through the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union changed the District bill after it came from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. With the aid of the majority members of the Committee on Appropriations. Why did they not change it here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be changed before it is finished.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hydrographic Office: Hydrographic engineer, $3,000; assistants—1 $2,200, 1 $2,000; chief clerk, $1,800; nautical experts—1 $1,800, 1 $1,600, 1 $1,400, 3 at $1,200 each, 3 at $1,000 each; clerks—1 of class 2, 1 of class 1; custodian of archives, $1,200; copyists—3 at $900 each, 1 $840, 2 at $720 each; compiler, $1,400; editor of Notice to Mariners, $1,800; computer, $1,400; draftsmen—4 at $1,800 each, 4 at $1,600 each, 4 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each, 10 at $1,000 each, 1 $900; 3 apprentice draftsmen, at $700 each; engravers—chief $2,000, 2 at $1,800 each, 3 at $1,600 each, 1 $1,400, 6 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each, 1 $720; apprentice engravers—1 $800, 1 $700; plate printers—chief $1,400, 1 $1,200, 1 $1,000, 2 at $900 each, 1 $800; apprentice plate printers—1 $700, 1 $600; lithographers—chief $1,800; 2 at $1,000 each, apprentice $700; process photographer, $1,600; lithographic transferrer, $1,400; lithographic pressman, $1,400; photographic printer, $1,200; 2 negative cutters, at $1,000 each; 2 feeders, at $480 each; electrotyper and chart plate maker, $1,400; assistant messenger; 4 laborers; helpers—2 at $720 each, 2 at $660 each, 1 $600, 1 $500, 1 $480; in all, $123,660.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1916 and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask what about.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, it is an insertion of some letters in the RECORD relative to the method of sending out petitions of organizations throughout the country and inciting what I consider unnecessary and an unstatesmanlike alarm.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with the undertaking.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a speech delivered before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress by our colleague, Mr. TEN EYCK, of New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below.

S. 6686. An act to supplement an act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914; to the Committee on Ways and Means; and

S. 6689. An act making appropriation for the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease; to the Committee on Agriculture.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 6282. An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes.

OMNIBUS PENSION BILL.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, an order has been made for a special session this evening to take up for consideration an omnibus pension bill. In order to avoid calling the Members back I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] asks unanimous consent to set aside the unanimous-consent agreement by which we are to have a night session to-night. Is there objection to that?

Mr. MANN. Put it altogether and ask to consider the pension bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. And to consider the pension bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19545) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cox). The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been waiting action for eight months. I gave way on different occasions during the last session and on last Friday. This bill carries an aggregate increase over the present pensions of $37,980 in the whole bill. The average age of the beneficiaries of the bill is: Soldiers, 75 years; widows, 74 years—and there are 77 widows pensioned in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Frances Dewese, widow of Francis M. Dewese, late of Company D, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, on page 26 I move to strike out the lines 3 to 6, inclusive, the beneficiary, Frances Dewese, being dead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 26, by striking out lines 3, 4, 5, and 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of George W. Lavery, late of Company C, One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, on page 26 I move to strike out lines 19 to 22, inclusive, the beneficiary, George W. Lavery, being dead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 26, by striking out lines 19, 20, 21, and 22.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 16, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, at the beginning of a new legislative day we desire to record Thy name and to acknowledge our allegiance to Thee. Thou art the Supreme Ruler of the universe. We can not annul Thy commandments or stay Thy hand or thwart Thy purpose. Thou art the author of our liberty. Thou art the giver of every good and perfect gift. If we know not Thy way, we know not the path of progress. If we are not obedient to Thy will, we can not guide into the path of happiness. So we pray that with humble spirit we may walk in Thy way and do Thy commandments as Thou hast revealed them to us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certificate of the Governor of Arizona, certifying that on the 3d day of November, 1914, Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH was chosen by the electors of Arizona a Senator from that State for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1915, which was read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate the credentials of LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN, chosen by the electors of the State of Illinois a Senator from that State for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1915, which were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 19545) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (No. 55) providing for an adjournment of the two Houses of Congress from Wednesday, December 23, 1914, to Tuesday, December 29, 1914, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of Charles E. Peaslee, of Gonic; of the Prentice Bros., of Winchester; of the congregation of the First Free Baptist Church, of Laconia; of F. W. Jackson, superintendent of schools, of Whitefield; and of the congregation and the Sunday School of the Methodist Church of Chesterfield, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of Subordinate Lodge, No. 597, International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, of Escanaba, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to change the present method of inspection of locomotive boilers, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Port Huron, Mich., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THOMPSON presented petitions of members of the Friends' Sunday School of Haviland, the Christian Sunday School of Lyons, and the Baptist Sunday School of Belpre, all in the State of Kansas, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the appointment of a national marketing commission, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a memorial of Stereotypers and Electrotypers Local Union, No. 58, of Los Angeles, Cal., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Aerie No. 1076, Fraternal Order of Eagles, of Alameda, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a telegram in the form of a petition from Mrs. G. W. Hanna, secretary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Valley City, N. Dak., with reference to the prohibition amendment now pending before the Senate. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VALLEY CITY, N. DAK., December 14, 1914.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

At the request of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Valley City, the Protestant churches, both American and foreign speaking, took a vote on the question of national constitutional prohibition, which resulted 800 strong for the same.

Mrs. G. W. HANNA,
Secretary Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask to have three telegrams read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The telegrams were read, as follows:

YOAKUM, TEX., December 14, 1914.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD or RICHMOND HOBSON,
Washington, D. C.:

The Protestant Pastors' Association of Yoakum, Tex., urges the Texas Representatives in Congress to vote for the proposed amendment to the National Constitution providing for nation-wide prohibition.

C. P. CRAIG, Secretary.

BARTLETT, TEX., December 14, 1914.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.:

Three churches heartily indorse Sheppard-Hobson bill for national constitutional amendment now before Congress. A vast majority of another church in line. We commend you for the effort, and wish for victory.

HOME A. MCCARTY,
Pastor Central Christian Church.
J. B. BERRY,
Methodist Episcopal Church.
J. C. RHODES,
Baptist Church.
J. F. MCKENZIE,
Presbyterian Church.

DONNA, TEX., December 14, 1914.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.:

Each of the organized churches in Donna—Methodist, Christian, Presbyterian, and Baptist—voted unanimously yesterday urging on Congress the passage of the Sheppard-Hobson bill.

B. E. SHEPPARD.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States or of a State thereof or of the District of Columbia to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 841) thereon. I ask to have the amendments read, and I shall file a more complete report on the bill at a later day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendments proposed are as follows:

On page 2, line 4, after the word "States," insert the following: "or to charter vessels for such purposes and to make charters or leases of any vessel or vessels owned by such corporation to any other corporation, firm, or individual, to be used for such purposes: Provided, That the terms and conditions of such charter parties shall first be approved by the shipping board."

Page 4, line 14, after the comma and the word "islands," insert the words "the Hawaiian Islands."

Page 5, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "vessels purchased or constructed under the provisions of this act and."

Page 5, line 10, after the word "vessels," insert the words "belonging to the War Department, suitable for commercial uses and not required for military transports in time of peace, and vessels."

Page 5, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "or to any other corporation or corporations now or hereafter organized."

Mr. FLETCHER. I also ask for a reprint of the bill with the amendments indicated.

Mr. BURTON. On account of the confusion in this part of the Chamber I have been unable to hear the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for a reprint of the bill with the amendments reported by the committee to be indicated in the reprint.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the usual order, of course, of the Senate. It will be done.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16392) to better regulate the serving of licensed officers in the merchant marine of the United States and to promote safety at sea, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 840) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 6957) to establish the board of university regents of the District of Columbia, and defining its duties; to the Committee on the University of the United States.

By Mr. BURLEIGH:

A bill (S. 6971) granting an increase of pension to Addie M. Higgins; to the Committee on Pensions.

CENTRAL DISPENSARY AND EMERGENCY HOSPITAL.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 toward the construction of a new building for the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital erected on the site purchased and owned by the hospital, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 19422), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

GEN. ANSON MILLS, MEXICAN BOUNDARY COMMISSIONER.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, last March I took occasion to address the Senate on Senate joint resolution 117, in which I made some references to Gen. Anson Mills, then a member of the Mexican Boundary Commission. In July following a letter was read into the RECORD, at the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], from Gen. Mills, relating to that subject, to which I at the time made some response. A result of that episode has been some correspondence between Gen. Mills with the State Department and myself. I ask unanimous consent to have the correspondence printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 5, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I beg to refer to your remarks in the Senate on July 20, 1914, by way of rejoinder to my letter to Senator ROOT.

Your frank and fair statement, "If I shall have given or shall give utterance to anything that is offensive, I shall, if it proves to be incorrect or unwarranted, at all times be ready to make due reparation" (p. 13480), encourages me to hope that if I lay before you directly certain facts and suggestions in addition to those set forth in my letter to Senator ROOT you may see your way, after investigation, to withdraw the remarks contained in your speech in the Senate of last March, in so far as they reflect upon my personal honesty or official integrity.

You say that before making your speech of last March you "availed yourself of almost every known avenue of information." In view of this statement, I feel justified in again calling your attention to the fact that Dr. Boyd's charges, which you appear to have substantially adopted, have already been several times investigated by competent officers of the Department of State, and once by Chief Wilkie, of the Secret Service, and have uniformly been found to be wholly groundless and unworthy of credence. The reports of these officers, I have no doubt, are either on file with the State Department or the department could advise you where they are filed. I can not believe that you have examined them.

To this I may add that I was informed by Mr. Gaines, the present secretary of the International Boundary Commission, since the delivery of your original speech, that the Boyd charges have again been investigated by the present Solicitor of the Department of State, Mr. Cone Johnson, and that he, too, has made a report fully exonerating me in the premises.

Turning again to your rejoinder, you say:

"Mr. President, Gen. Mills does not contradict many of my facts; he confines himself to denying the justice of my conclusions, and particularly as they concern his own conduct" (p. 13479).

Of course, in so far as your statement of facts consisted in a reading from the official documents—as it did in large part—there was no possibility of an issue of fact between us. I closed my letter to Senator ROOT, however, with the following statement: "I assert the absolute honesty and integrity of each and every one of my official and personal acts, and stand ready at all times to vindicate my integrity before any competent tribunal" (p. 13426). By this I meant to challenge in the most sweeping and emphatic terms each and every allegation or inference in your speech which directly or by implication affected my personal honor or official integrity, irrespective of whether or not I was able to touch upon all these matters specifically in the course of a necessarily brief communication intended to appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Moreover, I did specifically challenge certain of your statements of fact, and I desire again to direct your attention to two of these issues of fact so joined—one because of its fundamental importance and the other because it has become important on account of the nature of your rejoinder.

The first and fundamental issue is raised by my unequivocal denial that I had anything to do with the treaty of 1906 or that I ever approved the construction of the Government dam at Engle. (See RECORD, p. 13425.) You do not notice this denial in your rejoinder, and yet, so far as I can see, your case against me appears to rest very largely upon inferences which you draw from my assumed inconsistency in favoring the Government dam at Engle, after having opposed the Boyd dam at Elephant Butte—an inconsistency which does not exist, since I did not favor either one in any way whatsoever.

Whatever you may have which you may consider in the nature of evidence—I do not mean argument based on inference—to support your charge of dishonest motives on my part, obviously I can not answer it, for I do not know what it is.

The second issue of fact to which I desire to call your attention was in its original form comparatively unimportant. Merely as an incident to your main attack upon me, you charged me in your March speech with "waste and prodigality" in the expenditure of the Chamizal appropriation, of which, according to your information, I had the disbursement and control. In my reply I denied that I had anything whatever to do with the disbursement or control of the Chamizal appropriation, to which you say in your rejoinder of July 20:

"Gen. Mills also declares that he had nothing to do with the expenditure of the appropriation of $50,000 for the Chamizal arbitration, which I criticized. That may be so. My information comes, however, from the State Department, and until I am satisfied of its incorrectness I shall insist that my statements are in accord with the facts" (p. 13479).

This rejoinder makes this matter, in my opinion, important. I am not mistaken, and I could hardly be honestly mistaken, as to whether or not I controlled or disbursed the $50,000 Chamizal appropriation in 1911. And yet the Department of State, which you invoke in support of your original statement, is presumably in a position to speak authoritatively in the premises.

I was in the West at the time of your remarks of July 20, but as soon as possible thereafter, namely, August 16, I wrote the Department of State, calling the department's attention to the issue between us with respect to the disbursement and control of the Chamizal appropriation and asking for an official statement, based on the records of the department, as to whether or not I disbursed or controlled said appropriation.

I inclose herewith copies of my somewhat protracted correspondence with the department. I believe that a perusal thereof will leave you in no doubt as to the real situation.

Toward the close of your rejoinder you offer to waive your constitutional immunity from suit for remarks spoken in the Senate and assume responsibility for your statements in all respects, as though you had been in a private capacity. I have consulted counsel as to this offer, and have been advised that it is, to say the least, very doubtful whether you can waive your constitutional privilege. Besides, I am not seeking to pursue a Senator, but to protect and defend in the most direct way my honor as an officer and a gentleman.

I therefore make the following counter proposition: I ask you to reread your speech of last March carefully in the light of this letter, to examine the official reports to which I have referred herein, and to consider each and every allegation which you made against me, even by implication or innuendo, which involves more than mere error of judgment on my part, and search your heart as to whether you still really believe them to be true. And where you can conscientiously do so I ask you to withdraw them and make the amends you so honorably propose. Should you, however, after this reconsideration, still find acts of mine which you deem unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, I ask that you state them clearly in an official communication to The Adjutant General of the Army, sending me a copy of this communication, to the end that I may request a court of inquiry, under article 115 of the Articles of War, a Federal court not inferior as a forum for the trial of questions of honor to any other authorized by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

I further request—something which I have no doubt your own sense of justice would suggest in any event—that in case you are unable fully to acquit me of all conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman and have occasion again to refer to this matter in the Senate, as you suggest you intend to do, you ask to have this letter and its inclosures printed in the RECORD to accompany your remarks.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
Late Mexican Boundary Commissioner.

DECEMBER 15, 1914.

Gen. ANSON MILLS, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant with inclosures and relating to some references to yourself in my speech of March last in support of Senate joint resolution No. 117. I have at spare intervals of time since your letter to Senator ROOT appeared in the RECORD reexamined some of my sources of information, that I might retest the accuracy of my statements.

With regard to the treaty of 1906, your statement that you had nothing to do with it is surprising in view of your negotiations and labors conjointly with Señor Osorno under the concurrent resolution of 1890, leading up to the framing of a proposed treaty for the construction of an international dam at El Paso, shortly previous to the ratification of the treaty of 1906 having reference to the same general subject matter. The terms of the treaty of 1906 are, of course, different, although quite as obnoxious to the interests of my State as that which you probably assisted in formulating; but if you did not negotiate nor approve of it, you are to be acquitted of responsibility for same.

With regard to the disbursement and control of the Chamizal appropriation of 1911, I did you an injustice, and take pleasure in retracting the statements I made in that connection concerning you. The explanation is that you were made, I think in December, 1893, the disbursing officer of the previous appropriation under the treaty of 1889. Under that treaty you were required in 1894 to consider, and did consider, the Chamizal case, but the commissioners, of which you were one, failed to agree. This necessitated the Chamizal treaty of 1911, under which the appropriation, some of whose terms of disbursement I criticized, was made.

I originally examined the contracts and vouchers representing the disbursements of these appropriations at the same time, and inasmuch as they related to the same subject I incorrectly assumed them to have been made by the same authority. I also assumed these documents to have belonged to the State instead of the Treasury Department. I should not have charged you with any responsibility for the disbursements of the Chamizal appropriations of 1911, and will read this letter into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in correction thereof.

Very respectfully, yours,

C. S. THOMAS.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GEN. MILLS AND THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

[Gen. Mills to the Secretary of State.]

EASTERN POINT, GLOUCESTER, MASS.,
August 16, 1914.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for March 27, 1914, containing (pp. 5984–6006) a speech of Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, delivered in the Senate March 23 and 24; a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 18, 1914, containing (pp. 13424–13426) a letter which I wrote to Senator ROOT, dated June 25, 1914, replying to Senator THOMAS, together with a statement of my military record, both of which were inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the request of Senator ROOT; and a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 20, 1914, containing (pp. 13479–13480) some remarks of Senator THOMAS, made in the Senate, July 20, by way of rejoinder to my letter to Senator ROOT.

The department will observe that Senator THOMAS attacks the entire course of the United States Government and the Department of State during the past quarter of a century with regard to the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, and that he is particularly severe in his animadversions upon my conduct in that connection as Mexican boundary commissioner and in other official capacities under the general direction of the Department of State.

The merits of Senator THOMAS's charges are sufficiently discussed in my letter to Senator ROOT. But I wish to call the department's attention to the fact that Senator THOMAS in his rejoinder invokes the Department of State as his authority for certain of his statements. In my letter to Senator ROOT I say:

"Toward the close of the Senator's speech (RECORD, p. 6002) he states that if he is 'correctly informed' I 'disbursed and controlled' the $50,000 appropriation for the Chamizal arbitration; and he thereupon proceeds to criticize (most unjustly, as I am advised) an item of expenditure out of this appropriation. The Senator has not been correctly informed. I neither disbursed nor controlled this appropriation nor a single penny thereof." (RECORD, July 18, p. 13425.)

To this Senator THOMAS made the following response in his remarks of July 20:

"Gen. Mills also declares that he had nothing to do with the expenditure of the appropriation of $50,000 for the Chamizal arbitration which I criticized. That may be so. My information comes, however, from the State Department, and until I am satisfied of its incorrectness I shall insist that my statements are in accord with the facts." (RECORD, July 20, p. 13479; italics mine.)

Here the Senator uses language which, when read in connection with its context, can only be interpreted as an assertion on his part that either the Department of State or some responsible official thereof had informed him that I had the disbursement and control of the $50,000 appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case. Inasmuch as the Senator's "information" is not only wholly erroneous, but is absolutely contradicted by the records of the department, I can only conclude that Senator THOMAS must be in some way mistaken as to its source.

It is absolutely immaterial, so far as I am concerned, whether Senator THOMAS's criticism of an item of expenditures of the Chamizal appropriation is well or ill founded. I was in no wise responsible for this expenditure. I am entitled to show this, and leave Senator THOMAS to debate the merits of his criticism thereof with those who may be interested in that subject. And I respectfully submit that I am entitled to show this by the best evidence and the only evidence which will be satisfactory to Senator THOMAS, namely, a statement from the Department of State itself as to what its records show in the premises.

In justice to me, therefore, and in view of the unquestionable facts as they appear on the records of the department, and in order that Senator THOMAS may be satisfied as to the incorrectness of his statement, and may therefore be enabled, if he so desires, to correct it, I respectfully request the department to write me a letter advising me of the fact that the records of the Department of State show that I neither disbursed nor controlled the disbursement of the $50,000 appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case or any part thereof. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
Late Mexican Boundary Commissioner.

[Assistant Secretary Osborne to Gen. Mills.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 28, 1914.

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
Eastern Point, Gloucester, Mass.

SIR: Your letter of the 16th instant was not brought to my attention until yesterday.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that since Mr. John Wesley Gaines, the present secretary of the International Boundary Commission (United States and Mexico), has by direction of the department recently had occasion to examine all of the papers on file in connection with the Chamizal case, it has been deemed advisable to have him furnish in detail the information you desire.

Mr. Gaines is at present out of the city, but immediately upon his return your request will be given prompt attention.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN E. OSBORNE,
Assistant Secretary.

[Gen. Mills to the Secretary of State.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 16, 1914.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to my letter of August 16 last, in which I inclosed to the department copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 27, July 18, and July 20, 1914, containing respectively a speech of Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, delivered in the United States Senate on March 23 and 24, 1914, in which he criticized the whole policy of the United States for the last quarter of a century with regard to the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, and particularly my official conduct in that connection; a letter which I wrote Senator ROOT, dated June 25, 1914, replying to Senator THOMAS; and a rejoinder by Senator THOMAS to my letter.

I called the department's attention more especially to the discussion between Senator THOMAS and myself in so far as it related to a criticism which he made in the course of his speech of an item of expenditure of the appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case. Senator THOMAS said in his original speech that if he was "correctly informed," I "disbursed and controlled" this appropriation. In my reply I denied having had anything to do with disbursing or controlling this appropriation or any part thereof, and Senator THOMAS in his rejoinder, while stating his readiness to make due reparation for any statement of his which should prove to be incorrect, asserted (mistakenly I must assume) that his "information" with respect to my conncetion with the Chamizal appropriation came from "the State Department," and said that until he was satisfied of "its incorrectness" he would insist that his statements were "in accordance with the facts."

In my letter to the department I pointed out that the Senator's information was not only wholly erroneous but absolutely contradicted by the records of the department, and in order that Senator THOMAS might be satisfied as to the actual facts by the best evidence and the only evidence which apparently he would be willing to accept, I respectfully requested the department to write me a letter "advising me of the fact that the records of the Department of State show that I neither disbursed nor controlled the disbursement of the $50,000 appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case or any part thereof."

My letter was acknowledged, under date of August 28, by the Assistant Secretary of the department, who informed me that my letter had only been brought to his attention the day before, and that inasmuch as Mr. Gaines, the present secretary of the International Boundary Commission (United States and Mexico), had recently had occasion to examine all the papers on file in connection with the Chamizal case, it had been deemed advisable to have Mr. Gaines furnish in detail the information which I desired. Mr. Osborne further stated that Mr. Gaines was at that time out of the city, but that upon his return my request would be given prompt attention.

Of course, it is peculiarly and absolutely within the discretion of the department to determine who shall verify by examination of the official records the statement which I have requested the department to make. Moreover, it is a matter of entire indifference to me who makes this examination, provided it is seasonably and accurately made and the result thereof is officially communicated to me by the department. Nevertheless, I deem it proper that I should point out that the information which I have requested pertains to a departmental matter, and in no wise concerns the accounts or business of the International Boundary Commission (United States and Mexico), of which commission Mr. Gaines is now the secretary for the United States. And as I am anxious to obtain the statement requested as soon as possible, I venture furthermore to suggest that if it is not convenient for Mr. Gaines to take the matter up at this time, the information necessary to verify the statement I have requested could be obtained from a very brief examination of the appropriate records by any of the officers or clerks of the department familiar with the general departmental accounting system.

I am sorry to trouble the department again in this matter, particularly at a time when I realize that there are so many important questions demanding its attention, but since Senator THOMAS's statement as it now stands appears to tax me on the alleged authority of the Department of State with a misstatement as to whether or not I disbursed or controlled the disbursement of a $50,000 appropriation—a matter as to which I could hardly be honestly mistaken—and inasmuch as Senator THOMAS has indicated his willingness to make reparation for his statement on being convinced that he is mistaken, I respectfully request that the department furnish me the statement which I have requested at the earliest practicable moment.

Very respectfully,

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
Late Mexican Boundary Commissioner.

[Assistant Secretary Osborne to Gen. Mills.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 20, 1914.

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
2 Dupont Circle, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring further to your letter of August 15, I beg to state that the papers on file in the department disclose the following facts:

1. That in the latter part of 1893 you were appointed the American commissioner of the International Boundary Commission (United States and Mexico), authorized by the treaty of March 1, 1889; and that on December 12, 1893, you were designated as special disbursing officer of the American section of that commission, and filled both offices until your resignation, June 30, 1914.

2. That in 1894 the "Chamizal case" arose and was referred to this commission, composed, under said treaty, of an American commissioner (Gen. Anson Mills) and a Mexican commissioner (F. Javier Osorno), and this commission failed to "agree" on the "differences" or questions involved.

3. The preamble of the treaty proclaimed January 25, 1911, between Mexico and the United States recites that "The United States of America and the United States of Mexico, desiring to terminate, in accordance with the various treaties and conventions now existing between the two countries, and in accordance with the principles of international law, the differences which have arisen between the two Governments as to the international title to the Chamizal tract, upon which the members of the International Boundary Commission have failed to agree, and having determined to refer these differences to the said commission, established by the convention of 1889, which for this case only shall be enlarged as hereinafter provided, have resolved to conclude a convention for that purpose," which provides:

"ART. 2. The difference as to the international title of the Chamizal tract shall be again referred to the International Boundary Commission, which shall be enlarged by the addition, for the purposes of the consideration and decision of the aforesaid difference only, of a third commissioner, who shall preside over the deliberations of the commission. This commissioner shall be a Canadian jurist and shall be selected by the two Governments by common accord."

Thus "enlarged," the International Boundary Commission again tried this Chamizal case in 1911, the commissioners then acting being Brig. Gen. Anson Mills, Señor Don Fernando Beltran Y. Puga, and E. J. Lafleur, the "third commissioner," added by article 2 just quoted.

By the Diplomatic and Consular act approved March 3, 1911, the Congress of the United States appropriated $50,000 to continue the work of the International Boundary Commission (United States and Mexico), authorized by the treaty of March 1, 1889, aforesaid, and also appropriated $50,000 "for the expenses of the arbitration of the international title to the Chamizal tract." Of the former $50,000 you were the special disbursing officer, but you were not the special disbursing officer of the latter $50,000 thus supplied; but another citizen was such officer, and you are so advised.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN E. OSBORNE,
Assistant Secretary of State.

[Gen. Mills to the Secretary of State.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 24, 1914.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the department's letter of October 20, 1914 (signed by the Assistant Secretary), with reference to certain information which I requested under date of August 16, last, in connection with an issue between Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, and myself as to whether or not I disbursed and controlled the $50,000 appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case.

After reciting various well-known antecedent facts as to which there is no dispute, the department says:

"By the Diplomatic and Consular act approved March 3, 1911, the Congress of the United States appropriated $50,000 to continue the work of the International Boundary Commission (United States and Mexico), authorized by the treaty of March 1, 1889, aforesaid, and also appropriated $50,000 'for the expenses of the arbitration of the international title to the Chamizal tract.' Of the former $50,000 you were the special disbursing officer, but you were not the special disbursing officer of the latter $50,000 thus supplied, but another citizen was such officer and you are so advised."

Of course no question had been raised with respect to the regular annual appropriation of $50,000 to continue the work of the International Boundary Commission, the issue between Senator THOMAS and myself as to this matter being, as I pointed out to the department in my former letters, simply whether or not I disbursed and controlled the $50,000 appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case, the Senator having criticized specifically an item of expenditure of that appropriation. Senator THOMAS correctly states the issue and my position upon it in his rejoinder, quoted in my letter to the department of August 16, when he says: "Gen. Mills declares that he had nothing to do with the expenditure of the appropriation of $50,000 for the Chamizal arbitration, which I criticized."

While I understand the delicacy of the department's position when called upon to give information with respect to a matter in controversy, I submit, with all deference to the department's judgment as to what fairness requires, that this mingling of unsought information with respect to matters not in dispute with the information requested tends unduly to destroy the usefulness of the department's letter in clearing up the very simple point with respect to which I have requested an authoritative statement based upon its records.

Moreover, while I recognize that the department's letter does contain a statement that the records show that I did not disburse the $50,000 appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case, it leaves unanswered the more important question at issue between Senator THOMAS and myself, as to which I also requested a statement from the department in my letters of August 16 and October 16, namely, whether I controlled the disbursement of this appropriation. I say more important because Senator THOMAS's criticism was apparently directed not so much at the mere clerical matter of disbursement as at the alleged "waste and prodigality" which he said characterized the disbursement, and for which, if they in fact existed, of course those who controlled the disbursement, and not the disbursing officer, were responsible.

I therefore again have the honor to request the department to advise me that the records of the department show that I did not control the disbursement of this appropriation.

And since, in order that the information furnished me by the department may be conveniently available for use, it is desirable that it should all be contained in one instrument, instead of being distributed through a considerable correspondence, I respectfully suggest that the department's compliance with my request take the form of a letter which shall comprise a statement of the fact that the records of the Department of State show that I neither disbursed nor controlled the disbursement of the $50,000 appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case (i. e., the appropriation carried by the Diplomatic and Consular act of March 3, 1911, "for the expenses of the arbitration of the international title to the Chamizal tract"), or any part thereof.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
Late Mexican Boundary Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 9, 1914.

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
2 Dupont Circle, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In answer to your letter of October 24 last, in which you ask to be advised that the records of the department show that you did not control the disbursement of the $50,000 appropriated by the diplomatic and consular act of March 3, 1911, for the expense of the arbitration of the international title to the Chamizal tract, you are advised that the record of the disbursement of this fund, so far as disbursed, shows that you were not the special disbursing officer of it, but that another citizen served as such officer, and you were so informed in the department's letter of October 20 last.

You are now further advised that the only papers on file in the department indicating the manner in which the money supplied by the above mentioned appropriation was expended, are the vouchers covering the several items of expenditure, which are signed by a disbursing officer other than yourself.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN E. OSBORNE,
Assistant Secretary of State.

[Gen. Mills to the Secretary of State.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 13, 1914.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I am in receipt of the Department's letter of November 9, signed by the Assistant Secretary, covering a statement of what the department's files show with respect to my controversy with Senator THOMAS, as to whether or not I disbursed or controlled the appropriation for the arbitration of the Chamizal case.

The department, in addition to repeating the assurance contained in its letter of October 20 last, that I was not the special disbursing officer of the appropriation in question—in other words, that I did not disburse the appropriation or any part thereof—makes the following statement in response to my repeated inquiry as to what the records show as to whether or not I controlled the disbursement of the appropriation or any part thereof:

"You are now further advised that the only papers on file in the department indicating the manner in which the money, supplied by the above-mentioned appropriation, was expended, are the vouchers covering the several items of expenditure, which are signed by a disbursing officer other than yourself."

I must confess my surprise at the statement that the departmental files show nothing except the vouchers covering the items of expenditure with reference to the control of the disbursement of an appropriation required by statute "to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State."

Moreover, I can not quite understand what seems to me to be the implication of the department's statement that the vouchers covering the appropriation in question are signed only by the disbursing officer as such (said officer being other than myself). From my acquaintance with governmental accounting during my many years of service, I supposed that each voucher would also bear on its face the name of the officer (also other than myself) under whose direction and control the particular expenditure in question was incurred; otherwise I hardly see how these vouchers were passed by the proper accounting officers.

I do not, however, desire to trouble the department for any further statement on this point at this time, since it appears to me that the negative statement contained in the department's letter is in the particular circumstances of this case ample for the immediate purpose I have in view, and I have no doubt Senator THOMAS will agree with me.

Senator THOMAS criticized an item of expenditure of the Chamizal appropriation, and said that, according to his "information," I had the disbursement and control of that appropriation. I thereupon denied having anything to do with the disbursement or control of that appropriation. The Senator replied that while I might be right he would maintain his position until he was convinced he was wrong, because his "information" came from the Department of State.

It now appears from the department's statement, in its letter of November 9, giving it the strictest possible interpretation, first, that its records show that I did not disburse the appropriation as alleged; second, that there is nothing in the department's records to indicate that I controlled the disbursement thereof.

Under these circumstances I believe that I am in a position to take the matter in question up with Senator THOMAS, taking advantage of his frank offer to make amends in case he was in error on any point, and call upon him to withdraw his statement that I disbursed the Chamizal appropriation, and to withdraw his statement that I controlled the disbursement thereof, unless, now that the department has failed him, he can produce some other evidence to contradict my unqualified statement made, of course, upon my personal knowledge, and easy to disprove if it were not true, that I did not control said disbursement.

I have felt compelled to assume that the Senator must have been in some way mistaken in thinking his information came from the department. But in view of his explicit statement on the floor of the Senate, and in view of the course which my correspondence with the department has taken, I feel that before taking this matter up with Senator THOMAS I ought to request the department to inform me whether or not the Senator has been misled in this matter by some inadvertent statement from the department or some responsible officer thereof If he has been so misled, I can not in justice blame him for relying on such high authority, and my attitude toward him as respects this issue must in fairness be modified accordingly.

I have no desire to make unnecessary trouble about an inadvertent error by whomsoever it may have been committed. I realize that such errors are constantly made by everyone. I merely desire to set myself straight on the record with respect to a matter as to which I have been most unjustly assailed.

I therefore appeal to the department as a matter of fairness to all parties—to the Senator, to the department, to myself, and even to the public, which has an interest in small as well as large matters relating to official conduct—to tell me frankly whether the Senator's attack upon me for alleged waste and prodigality in the expenditure of the Chamizal appropriation was based upon any inadvertent statement emanating from the department or any responsible officer thereof inconsistent with the official statement which the department has now given me, that I did not disburse this appropriation, and that there is nothing in the files of the department to show that I controlled the disbursement of any part thereof.

I should appreciate an early reply, as I desire to take this matter up promptly with Senator THOMAS.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
Late Mexican Boundary Commissioner.

[Gen. Mills to the Secretary of State.]

No. 2 DUPONT CIRCLE,
Washington, D. C., December 3, 1914.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I beg to refer to previous correspondence, and particularly to my letter of November 13 last.

Senator THOMAS, in the course of a speech in the Senate last March in connection with a serious attack upon my official integrity, charged me with waste and prodigality in the expenditure of the Chamizal appropriation, and said that he would in the near future "dissect the disbursement of these appropriations more extensively."

I denied, in a letter to Senator ROOT, having anything to do with the appropriation in question. Senator THOMAS replied that while this might be so his information came from the State Department, that he should maintain its correctness until satisfied he was wrong, and that he should later on "take up the Mills' letter in extenso."

In view of all this, I have through correspondence for nearly four months past, assiduously endeavored to obtain an official statement from your department that I neither disbursed nor controlled the Chamizal appropriation. And having obtained a statement that I did not disburse said appropriation, but failing to obtain more than a mere negative statement with respect to the control of the disbursement thereof, I then, in my letter of November 13, endeavored as a last resort to clear up the misunderstanding under which Senator THOMAS is evidently laboring, by ascertaining whether or not he could have been misled by any inadvertent statement from the department.

I have as yet received no answer to my letter of November 13, but inasmuch as Congress meets on next Monday, I deem it proper that I should on that date send Senator THOMAS copies of my correspondence with the Department of State to date, in order that when he recurs to this matter he may have before him such information as I have been able to obtain from the State Department in my lengthy correspondence.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
Late Mexican Boundary Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 9, 1914.

ANSON MILLS,
Brigadier General, United States Army (Retired),
2 Dupont Circle, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to your letters of November 13 and December 3, 1914, the department begs to advise you that it does not know the source of any information Senator THOMAS may have had as a basis for the alleged statement concerning your connection with the Chamizal appropriation. He will, no doubt, be pleased to furnish you, upon request, any information which you may desire on this subject.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN E. OSBORNE,
Assistant Secretary of State.

REPORT OF LINCOLN MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed Senate Document 965 (62d Cong., 3d sess.), which is the Lincoln Memorial Commission report. It has been printed once, but the copies are exhausted, and the chairman of the commission, ex-Senator Blackburn, says there is a great demand for it, and he would like to have it printed. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to call attention to the fact that if the request is granted then copies of the reprint of this document will be sent to all the libraries. I do not believe that is what the Senator from Virginia wishes. If he will modify his request by asking that 1,500 copies be printed for the use of the Senate they will then be for the use of those who desire them and will not be sent around to all the libraries again.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There should be some copies for the use of the commission.

Mr. SMOOT. The commission can get them very easily.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am satisfied that 1,500 copies will be an abundance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before this matter is disposed of I wish to ask the Senator from Utah if when a reprint is made other copies are sent to the libraries and to the departments, they having been once supplied? It seems to me that it is absurd to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. It is absurd, but, in fact, they are sent that way.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from Virginia will ask for a print as a Senate document that will cover it.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that 1,500 copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then they will go to the document room instead of to the folding room.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if they are printed for the use of the Senate, they will go to the document room. If they go to the folding room, then, of course, there will be only two copies for each Senator; but if printed for the use of the Senate, they go to the document room and as many as are desired can be obtained for the commission.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is perfectly agreeable to me to modify the request, and I ask that 1,500 copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. JONES. What is the document?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is the report of the Lincoln Memorial Commission.

Mr. JONES. If they go to the document room, then the first Senators who send there get the document.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not suppose any Senator will want a great supply of them. It is just to supply the requests he may have.

Mr. JONES. We have requests from all over the country for such a document. I have a great many requests for such documents, and often when I go to get them I find that the supply is exhausted.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. These requests come to the commission. Ex-Senator Blackburn, the chairman of the commission, has had a great many requests for copies, and they are unable to supply the demand. My object is simply to have the document printed. I do not suppose there will be any trouble as to the distribution. If they go to the document room, every Senator will get an abundant supply of them if 1,500 copies are printed.

Mr. JONES. I will not object at this time, but if I have the same experience with this document that I have had with other documents I shall probably object hereafter to such a proceeding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

SALE AND SHIPMENT OF COTTON.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I present in the form of a memorial a letter from the governor of Texas addressed to the Senators from Texas. I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Austin, Tex., December 12, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES A. CULBERSON,
Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have been discussing with Hon. F. C. Weinert, formerly State senator and until recently secretary of state, now general manager of the Permanent Warehouse System of Texas, conditions affecting the price of cotton. He has made a careful inquiry, and writes me the result of his investigations, as follows:

DECEMBER 12, 1914.

Hon. O. B. COLQUITT,
Governor of Texas, Capitol.

DEAR GOVERNOR: Since accepting the position of general manager of the Permanent Warehouse System and Cooperative Marketing Bureau, established by law, I have found conditions which I think have a direct bearing upon the constant decline in the price of cotton.

Some time ago the belligerent nations now at war with each other agreed with our Government that cotton should not be treated as a contraband of war. This news was received with great satisfaction throughout the South, for the reason that it was thought that a market would be established for the South's greatest product. The result of this agreement was that cotton advanced immediately and simultaneously with this news.

Since then, however, and especially recently, the price has again declined and continues to decline because shipments to the European Continent are hampered by an inadequate understanding between all foreign Governments and ours

According to reports only two cargoes of cotton have left American ports for the European Continent since this lamentable war began. Each of these cargoes left our shores under great difficulties. The last cargo, according to newspaper reports, left New York on yesterday, after an agreement with the shipowners that the ship should pass through the Straits of Dover on its way to Germany and be subjected to a thorough inspection for contraband of war. This is some concession, and if this course is pursued it would create a better market than at present.

The restrictions, however, that have been in force have necessarily increased rates of shipping and maritime insurance to that extent that exportation of cotton has become practically impossible, hence the market can not be supplied that is now open to the people of the South.

I understand that the cargo of cotton which left Galveston was sold to Germany at the delivered price of 18 cents a pound, while middling cotton is quoted at 6¾ cents in Texas; thus you will see that there is a margin of practically 12 cents difference between the price of cotton in Texas and the price at which it is delivered abroad. This great margin between the price established and the price at which it is delivered is sufficient for anyone to appreciate the difficulties that exist between the buyer and the seller of this product.

I respectfully suggest for your consideration that you, as governor of the State of Texas, appeal to the Federal Government for a more satisfactory understanding and method by which the South's greatest product may be exported.

It seems to me that the Federal Government could supervise the loading of cotton and see that the proper clearance certificates would be given to the departing ships, and, if required, an officer of the Federal Government accompany such cargo to its point of destination, and that such an arrangement with the Federal Government would practically insure all the belligerent nations that no contraband of war was carried in these cargoes.

This or a similar plan might be acceptable to the foreign nations in order to insure the good faith of those who are engaged in the shipping industry. At any rate, I think an attempt should be made to facilitate and improve the present methods, as they are now practically prohibitory.

I realize that you are fully aware of the distressing conditions that are now prevalent not only throughout the great State of Texas but throughout the entire South, and that you will give the matter such consideration as you think is to the best interests of our people. Believe me, to be

Sincerely, yours, F. C. WEINERT,
General Manager.

I am writing you both to suggest the importance of urging the immediate passage of laws by Congress which will insure a supply of ships to carry our cotton to the nations that are now so badly in need of it. Senator Weinert understands that cotton which can be shipped to Germany is now bringing 18 cents per pound in that country.

The price of cotton would be greatly increased, in my opinion, if Congress would enact laws for insuring the cargoes and for the securing of ships to carry the cotton to the nations of Europe, who are so much in need of it. Bills for this purpose were pending in the recent special session of Congress, and I urge the importance of definite action on them. I shall be glad to hear from you.

Yours, truly,

O. B. COLQUITT, Governor.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator from Missouri will withhold the motion for just a moment, I desire to say that I had announced that I would submit some remarks this morning on Senate resolution 398 and Senate joint resolution 163. The Senator from Missouri, however, is anxious to proceed with executive business in connection with the safety-at-sea convention, and I yield to him for that purpose. But I desire to give notice that I shall address the Senate to-morrow after the routine morning business or at some other convenient time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 2 hours and 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I presume that automatically, an executive session having intervened and been concluded, the unfinished business will now come before the Senate. However, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 2, line 18, after the name "United States," the Committee on Immigration reported to insert "except that with respect to an alien accompanied by his wife, child, or children said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child."

To the committee amendment Mr. O'GORMAN has moved as an amendment to strike out, in lines 18 and 19, the words "an alien accompanied by his," and to insert the word "the"; and after the word "child," in line 18, to insert the words "of an alien."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is also an amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota and referred to by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment as proposed to be amended, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina offers, in behalf of Mr. NELSON, the following amendment:

Provided, That children under 15 years of age who accompany their father or their mother shall not be subject to said tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. REED. One moment, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Several members of the committee have had the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota under consideration, and in their judgment it meets the requirements of the case and may offer a possible solution of the difficulty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Chair to understand that the Senator from South Carolina has temporarily withdrawn the committee amendment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have agreed to accept the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Minnesota as a substitute for the committee amendment; but, of course, the matter will have to be put to a vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GALLINGER. How will the text read if that amendment is agreed to? I ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. If amended as proposed, the text would read:

SEC. 2. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $6 for every alien, including alien seamen, regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States: Provided, That children under 16 years of age who accompany their father or their mother shall not be subject to said tax. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] offered an amendment touching this same section, and because he is absent, I take the liberty of reserving the right for further amendment in the Senate with reference to this matter. I do so simply in order to preserve the rights of the Senator from New York.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it is not necessary to comment any further on that matter, except to say that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota was exactly in line with the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York; but the committee thought that this was a clearer and better form in which to express it.

Mr. REED. I have no doubt that is correct, but I make the reservation out of abundance of caution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri, on behalf of the Senator from New York, reserves the right to move to amend the bill in the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 11, line 9, after the word "servants," it is proposed to insert "or farm machinists, mechanics, or farm laborers skilled in farm work, if employed in good faith by farmers."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that if he propose to insert his amendment after the word "employer," in line 9, it would be better. The language reads, "domestic servants accompanying their employer."

Mr. GRONNA. I accept that change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota is modified so as to come in after the word "employer," in line 9, instead of the word "servants." That change will be made.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not there will be any objection to this amendment. It will perhaps be charged that it is a discrimination, and to a certain extent that may be true, but I find that this bill in its various provisions is full of discriminations.

There is a certain provision to the effect that skilled labor, if it can not be found in this country, may be imported from foreign countries. I do not know of any work or any labor that requires more skill than that of the farm. We hear a great deal said about assisting the farmer and to the effect that agriculture is the basis of all wealth, and yet agriculture is the first industry to be discriminated against.

There is another clause in the bill, which reads:

Persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

Mr. President, that means that one who can afford to go to Europe or to go to some other foreign land and have a valet or a butler is permitted to import with him such domestic servants. In my State we are living right up against the Canadian border, and I again want to call the attention of the Senate to the case to which I referred the other day.

I was not exactly correct in my statement that the farmer who was prosecuted for a violation of the contract-labor law had only written a letter to some men across the line. There was more to it than that. I have since examined the case more thoroughly, and I find that this farmer, who was trying to find men to work in the harvest fields, took his team, drove across the Canadian line, and in the Province of Manitoba found five or six Austrians. He hired them, took them back home with him, and they worked for him in the harvest fields at least for a few days. After a short time, however, an immigration agent came to the farm and arrested the Austrians and the farmer. They were taken to jail and kept there until the December term of court. The case was tried before one of the most eminent judges in this country, a learned man, a man with broad ideas, and he practically nullified the law by his decision. He imposed only a nominal fine of $5 on the farmer; but the immigration agent was so outraged by this decision that he entered a civil suit against the farmer for $5,000, the maximum amount prescribed by law. Then he ordered the Austrians deported to Austria and not to the place whence they came.

I am not in favor of repealing the contract-labor law. I think we all agree that labor should be protected. We perhaps disagree only as to the methods which should be employed to protect labor Organized labor does not seek farm work; organized labor will never control farm labor. In the first place, they are not willing to work the number of hours that are required on the farm.

We have nearly 10,000,000 farmers now; more than a third of the entire population of this country live on the farm, and I am only asking by this amendment that the farmer shall be given the same opportunity that is given the rich man who can afford to go abroad and secure a valet or a butler. I am only asking for the farmer the same opportunity which is given to the manufacturer who wants to employ skilled labor in some other country.

But it may be said that farm labor is not skilled labor. With modern machinery, we need machinists, we need mechanics; and I repeat that there is no labor which requires more skill and science than that of the farm. I am fearful, of course, that those who come from that section of the country where organized labor is strong may fall under the misapprehension that this amendment is intended as an onslaught on the contract labor law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the last seven words in the Senator's amendment trouble me somewhat, and I will ask the Senator if he can suggest how the amendment, if it is agreed to, can be made operative. The last seven words of the amendment are "if employed in good faith by farmers." Immigrants may come to the port of Boston, or to the port of New York, and claim to be farm mechanics or farm machinists or farm laborers skilled in certain farm work. If the requirement is that they must be "employed in good faith by farmers," how can they be allowed to enter?

Mr. GRONNA. If this amendment should be adopted and should become the law, I presume they could enter just as certain other classes of laborers are permitted to enter.

Mr. GALLINGER. They can not be employed in good faith by farmers unless they are brought in under contract and they can show that they are under obligation to perform this labor. If they come individually, they can not show to the satisfaction of the officials that they are employed in good faith by farmers, because they are not employed in good faith by farmers. They may say that they are intending to engage in farm work or farm machinists' work or to act as mechanics on some farm in the great West, but it seems to me that under the terms of the amendment the officials would not allow them to enter. I may be wrong about it, but it strikes me so.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr, President, I think if this amendment were adopted the immigration officials would be obliged to permit farm laborers to enter, just as they are now required to permit skilled laborers to enter. Under the present law if anyone who has a factory can show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary of Labor or the immigration officials that the kind of labor he desires to import can not be had in this country, he can import under contract skilled laborers. For the reasons I have indicated I offer the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, answering the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I assume that this amendment would particularly apply to and affect laborers from Canada, and probably very few from any other country. I assume also that under the operation of this amendment there would be letters or other written evidence of employment before the immigrant would be admitted. I think there would be no difficulty whatever in securing the adoption by the department of the proper character of rules to safeguard against the improper importation of laborers, and also to secure what my colleague seeks to secure by the amendment.

I can not let the opportunity pass without saying another word in favor of this amendment. If Senators could have seen northwest Minnesota, all of North Dakota, and all of eastern Montana covered with shocks of grain in the early part of November on account of the impossibility of getting thrashing done because of the lack of laborers, they would realize the immense damage done to that section because of the law prohibiting us from getting labor from the Canadian side. A great snowstorm came on in the early part of November, when three-fifths of the grain was unthrashed. The snow covered the shocks and deteriorated the grain at least two to four grades, and it cost in thrashing three or four times as much the next spring, because of our inability to thrash in the fall, all due to our failure to obtain labor.

We need not be much afraid of immigrants coming in too great numbers to the farming sections. If I had the power in my own hands to shape the law, I would make it much broader even than as suggested by my colleague. I would provide that as to aliens who agreed to go to the agricultural sections of our country and do farm work only even a guaranty of employment would not be necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. I want to call attention to what my colleague has said about the effect of unionized labor upon farm employment in this country. The one great effect is that it has shortened the hours of labor so much in the cities that it is almost impossible to get any man to go out into the country to labor, as the hours of labor there are almost twice as long as the hours of labor in employments in the cities; otherwise, the farmer could not afford to employ labor at all. This is largely responsible for the tendency to stay in the cities if it is possible to get any kind of employment there. The shortening of the hours of labor and the higher prices which undoubtedly have been brought about by organized labor in the cities have made the employment of labor in the country almost prohibitive, and there ought to be some relief. If we have not people in the United States who can be hired to perform farm labor, then we ought to be entitled to get that labor elsewhere. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not as well informed on the details of our immigration laws as I might wish to be, but I will ask the Senator from North Dakota, who has just taken his seat, if farm laborers are not now at liberty to come into the United States from Canada without reference to the contract-labor law if they come as individuals to secure employment in the western wheat fields or corn fields?

Mr. GRONNA. They are allowed to come, of course, of their own volition, but we are not now permitted under our laws to advertise for them. Even under the amendment adopted last night I believe that if a farmer were simply to write a letter inviting a laborer to come to this country it would be a violation of the contract-labor law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly it would; and it would render him liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; it would render him liable to a penitentiary sentence and to pay a fine of $1,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it has seemed to me—I may be mistaken about it—that, as the State of North Dakota, for instance, is in juxtaposition with Canada, if there was a shortage of farm labor in that State and there was a surplus of it in the Dominion, laborers would be very apt to find their way across the border and seek employment without being advertised for. It strikes me in that way.

Mr. President, I am in sympathy with anything designed to turn the tide of immigration to the agricultural portions of our country; and if I had my way, and it could be done, I would have our immigration laws so changed that a certain proportion of those landing at the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and our other great seaports should be obligated not to settle in the great cities, but to go to the western fields, where they could secure agricultural employment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that those in Canada who might be willing to come here and perform farm labor are not very well acquainted with our laws, and it is generally understood by them that they are not entitled to come into this country to secure employment. They have seen their colaborers arrested on coming over; they do not know just what the law is, and they will be very careful not to come over the boundary unless they can be convinced that they are absolutely safe in doing so. There should be something in the law itself which would allay the fears of those who would naturally drift over the line, something which would let them know that it would be legal for them to accept employment on this side and that the penitentiary would not be staring them in the face if they did so. The Senator must remember that those who perform this kind of labor are not the most highly educated class, and yet they are able to do everything the farmer wants of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am in great sympathy with anything that will give relief to the great States where the people are largely engaged in agriculture, and if this amendment can be shown to be a wise one I certainly shall not oppose it; but it has seemed to me that the amendment strikes a pretty severe blow at the contract-labor law now on our statute books. I may be mistaken about it. I apprehend that under this provision, if it shall become a part of the law, it will not be only from the Dominion of Canada that these people will be seeking entrance into our country, but that from European countries as well they will come claiming that they are farm machinists, mechanics, or farm laborers. If they are admitted upon that representation, I think we may well reflect as to exactly what influence that will have upon the manufacturing States of our country; whether we may not get an influx of people from Europe, coming in under the provisions of this amendment, that we would not allow to come in under the provisions of existing law so far as the manufacturing sections of the country are concerned.

I wish some Senator who is better informed than I am in the matter of the contract-labor laws of our country and the operation of those laws will take the time, if any Senator is present who chooses to do so, to explain his view as to just what effect this amendment might have upon sections of the country where we are not engaged in agricultural pursuits. Perhaps the chairman of the committee will take the trouble to do that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator for that purpose or any other purpose.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state that this matter was brought before the committee and thoroughly discussed. There is not a Senator on this floor who does not recognize the necessity for ample labor on the farm; but a mere glance at the amendment, bearing in mind the provisions of the present contract-labor law, must convince every Senator that the moment such an amendment is adopted you might as well repeal the contract-labor law. For the reasons set forth by the Senator from North Dakota he has put the word "skilled" here; but everyone knows that when it comes to importing labor to handle the shocks of wheat and grain to which he referred in the fields of the West, almost any man is already skilled. His muscles may not be hardened to the work, but certainly he could perform that crude form of labor to the satisfaction of the farmer, and be a skilled laborer in that respect. You have opened the door for a little temporary employment, and then the host that have come over for that purpose are here to seek other employment until another grain crop is ready.

That is one objection. The next is this: Any farmer could import people who would not come alone from across the Canadian border, but in every port, and everyone else would have the same right. This committee or the Senate could not make the distinction here sought to be made without according the same right to every railroad and every corporation which might come before Congress and state that there was difficulty in securing certain kinds of labor.

The whole heart of the contract-labor law is involved in this amendment. It is one of those unfortunate cases that may occur from time to time; but the Senate, as I said a few days ago, is attempting to legislate on a general rule, and not to ruin the rule by fitting it to these peculiar cases. The committee almost unanimously rejected a similar provision when it was sought to be incorporated in the bill while it was pending before the committee. It needs no extended argument to show that if we are to have a contract-labor system, and you are going to make an exception such as this, where the most unskilled men can perform the work sought to be performed, you have opened the doors to flood this country with the very things that our contract-labor law has sought to obviate. I sincerely hope the Senate will not even seriously consider this amendment.

Besides that, I want to state before I conclude that I am a farmer myself. It is the only vocation I have aside from the duty I am now performing, and I myself would not come before the Senate and ask for the adoption of this amendment in order to permit me to gather my own cotton crop which to-day is open to the weather for the lack of proper hands to gather it. We know the conditions, and rather than open the door to what I believe is not a fair deal to the laborers already in this country I myself would not vote for any such proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will give the matter a little more serious consideration, and if his mental attitude is right on the subject, I think he can find some way to grant the relief desired without the danger he anticipates.

Let me say first to the Senator that although he may consider that all farm work requires no study and no skill we who are acquainted with the character of work in the Northwest are convinced that it requires as much skill and as much intelligence to run a modern binder and separator or to build a wheat stack that will shed rain and at the same time will not tip over as it does to drive a nail into a board. With the skill that is required, I do not think we need have a great deal of fear about all classes coming in any more than you would have that all classes would come in under the building trade.

Let me say further that you have made an exception in this bill, as stated by my colleague. Whenever one of your institutions or business interests requires labor and it can not get the skilled labor and so certifies, then it is allowed to introduce it into this country. Now, that skilled labor may be a man that lays a brick or a man that mixes mortar or a man that puts plaster upon a building or a man that lays paper upon the inside wall of a building. He is called a skilled laborer and receives skilled laborers' prices, and you can import him into the country if the business itself demands it and that character of labor can not be found in the country.

It so happens that we need the character of skilled labor that is described here, some one who is skilled in farming, because that is what it says. It does not say somebody who may become a skilled farmer, but some one who in the old country has obtained his skill in farming, and not the ordinary roustabout who never has done any work in the farming line. It is limited, as I say, to those particular persons.

If the Senator really believes we ought to have the extra help, I can see no reason why he can not modify this amendment, in conference or here, so that it will fit the case, without creating the disturbance that he thinks will be created if it is adopted. Suppose a provision were incorporated in the bill, either in the Senate or in conference, which would prohibit persons who came in under such employment from performing services in any other line of business except that for which they had been employed, and if they disobey that requirement make them subject to the same penalties to which they otherwise would be subjected.

I believe we can secure the good results that are intended by my colleague in this amendment without endangering the whole structure of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let me say in the beginning that the Senator from North Dakota invited us to give more attention to this subject. I have been working on this subject now for some 25 years, and I have tried to give attention to all these points. The committee has given especial attention to this point among others.

All skilled labor, no matter whether it is skilled labor for the farm or skilled labor for the factory, can be brought in under the proviso on page 10:

> That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

That is not confined to the building trades or to factories or to any other industry. It applies to any skilled labor. The skilled labor of the farm can be brought in under the law as it now exists—for that is the existing law—if labor of like kind, unemployed, can not be found. This is a proposal to take off that limitation, "if labor of like kind can not be found," and permit the introduction of farm machinists, mechanics, or farm laborers skilled in farm work, if employed in good faith by the farmer. Put in that form it opens the door to the complete overthrow of the contract-labor laws. Persons brought in under this amendment could go into any other industry for which they were fitted; and the result would be that the railroads, the factories, and all the industries of the country would suddenly find that they needed farm labor, and they would bring it in as mechanics and machinists. They would all come in.

The contract-labor laws antedated the immigration laws. They were passed in response to a widespread demand that labor should not be brought into this country under a contract made abroad—a contract which would result in bringing in a large body of laborers under an obligation to work for a period of years at lower wages than our own people work in similar employment. If we should open the doors—and this amendment opens them, for it can not possibly be confined—the result would be that the whole purpose of the contract-labor laws would be destroyed.

There are hardships, no doubt, in every employment, and difficulty of getting labor at certain times. It is impossible to meet all those individual cases by law; but I think it would be a very great misfortune to break down the contract-labor laws of this country, which have been long on the statute books. This amendment in my opinion, throws wide open the door for bringing in contract labor under contracts made in foreign countries at lower rates of wages, because the definitions are necessarily so vague that there is no method of controlling them.

I sincerely hope the contract-labor laws will not be impaired.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator's statement that he has given this matter a quarter of a century of careful consideration leads me to ask him a question concerning it, for information only. What method has been adopted by the department to ascertain whether or not skilled laborers can be found to fulfill any demand in the manufacturing sections of the country?

Mr. LODGE. Application has to be made to the Secretary of Labor—or the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, as it was before—and the applicant has to furnish proof that he can not get that labor in this country.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the character of the proof? That is really the gist of my question.

Mr. LODGE. It has to be very conclusive, for very little comes in. The only cases where persons have been brought in under that law are where new industries have been started, where it could be proved beyond a doubt that there was nobody in the country who understood how to run a given machine, for example, or how to do the work involved, and that we could not start the industry without importing some one. The number of people brought in in that way has been perfectly trifling, owing to the extreme difficulty of the proof. It would be very hard to prove that there was no like farm labor unemployed in this country.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has reached just the point I wanted to make, and in which I agree with him. I thought he was arguing, from what he stated a short time ago, that the farming sections had now about the same opportunity that the other industries have to obtain skilled farm labor.

Mr. LODGE. They have.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, upon the face of it that might appear to be true; but if the Senator should start any kind of a manufacturing business in his own State, whether it were the steel business or whether it were the manufacture of fabrics, he could easily put a little advertisement in the paper saying that he desired so many men of a certain character to do a certain kind of work and so many to do other kinds of work, and he could tell in a reasonably short time whether or not he would be able to secure those persons; and that and other efforts might satisfy the department that the labor could not be obtained. That condition, however, could not hold in a farming section.

Mr. LODGE. No; and it does not hold in the industrial sections. There is no such condition.

Mr. McCUMBER. There may be somebody in Massachusetts who is skilled in farming, but that would not help the man out in Montana about getting that help there. The man in Massachusetts would not know where to go; the great farming public would not know how to get word to him; and therefore, without some such provision as this, it would be impossible for the farming section to obtain that labor, even though they did not have a tenth of the labor that was necessary to perform what was required to make the farming a success.

Mr. LODGE. Practically, in the administration of the law, in any established industry no men are allowed to come in. It is not enough to show that the employers can not get them by advertising. They are not allowed to come in. As a matter of fact, none are brought in in that way. It is just as impossible for manufacturers to get them as it is for farmers to bring them in in that way, as the Senator says. It has only occurred, as I have said, in a very, very few cases, and that is where the industry did not exist in the country. Where the industry exists, as in the steel and textile industries, ever since these contract-labor laws were passed, any bringing in of contract labor has absolutely ceased. It can not be done. The department has been extremely strict in regard to the law, and almost no one comes in under it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Whatever may have been the effect of that exception upon contract labor in the manufactures, it is certain that no benefit could be obtained by the farming sections through that provision in the law. A case has been cited by my colleague where a farmer knew he could not get labor in the United States. He had tried it. He did not know it was wrong to go over to Canada, across the line, where there were some people ready to come and work for him, but he knew that there was not any labor in this country that could do his work. He went over the line. It cost him some few thousand dollars, I believe, for that attempt to save his crop. There ought to be some means devised in this bill by which he could get labor of that kind, for the little time he would need it, without opening the gate so wide that that labor may remain here for all time and go into any other employment.

Mr. LODGE. I know the case to which the Senator refers. The farmer could not get labor, and the situation was a hard one. He went across the border, and he contracted with nine men, as I remember the number. They happened to be Hindus, as I understand, that he brought in.

Mr. McCUMBER. These were Austrians.

Mr. LODGE. In the case I heard they were Hindus He brought them in, and it was a clear violation of the contract-labor law. The door is as wide open to the farmer for getting skilled labor under this clause as it is to anybody else, because it says, "skilled labor * * * may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country." This is a proposal to take off that limitation and let in the persons described in this amendment. It would result in bringing contract labor in ultimately to every industry.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not believe it would throw the gates wide open to labor. My amendment follows the provision on page 11.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I know that. It puts them under the excepted classes.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; under the provision which says that persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants, accompanying their employers, may be admitted.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Then my amendment follows.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that. It was put in there because there is no limitation.

Mr. GRONNA. That would not throw the gates wide open. These men would have to accompany an employer, just the same as they have to under the provision which is embodied in this bill. I can see no difference in that respect.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator propose to put it in after the word "servants"?

Mr. GRONNA. No; after the word "employer."

Mr. LODGE. Exactly. The amendment says after the word "servants."

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; but it was modified. At the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], it is inserted after the word "employer."

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if it is inserted after the word "employer," it takes off that limitation.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I will say to the Senator that it does. It has been modified.

Mr. LODGE. It takes off the limitation.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; it does.

Mr. LODGE. It opens the door wide.

Mr. GRONNA. Now, if we permit aliens to come into this country accompanying their employers, to be employed——

Mr. LODGE. But you have taken off that limitation by putting it where you have now placed it. Under this amendment the people do not have to accompany the employer—not that I think that makes it a good amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator would rather have the amendment come in after the word "servants," I should have no objection to that.

Mr. LODGE. No; I think that puts a limitation on it, of course, but I do not think it is a valuable limitation.

Mr. GRONNA. That was my impression, but it was suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. LODGE. There would be plenty of farmers to go abroad and make contracts and bring labor in here as farm labor that never had seen a farm.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not think so. My experience has been that a farmer is very anxious to hire men who know something about farming. The great trouble is that the farmer has to employ the labor that comes from the slums, men who never have learned to perform work, and he has to pay them the same wages that are paid to men who know something about the scientific methods of doing work on the farm.

There is no work to be done by labor anywhere that is more scientific than the work on the farm. I will make that statement. Of course there are certain specific things which can be done by almost anybody, but when it comes to the modern method of farming, with all the intricate machinery, with petrol power and with steam, it requires skilled labor to do the work.

I am simply asking that this industry be accorded the same treatment that is accorded to other industries as provided by this bill. We say that in other industries where this class of labor can not be found they shall be permitted to employ men in other countries. More than that, we provide on the next page, page 11, that persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants, accompanying their employers, may be admitted into this country. There are two exceptions; and yet you say you are afraid that if we insert this provision that will throw the gates wide open to foreign labor and it will be an onslaught upon the contract-labor law.

I am not here pleading especially for any industry unless I know that it is a matter of justice to it. Why should not a farmer who lives close to the border line be permitted to cross the line and get labor, when it can not be had in this country, just as well as we permit men engaged in the manufacturing industry to import that class of labor?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not believe that if this amendment were adopted the Canadian and Mexican borders would become the dumping ground for all kinds of immigrants, all kinds of persons seeking entrance into this country, and that you would make it possible for anyone seeking labor in other ways to send his agent across the border and bring it in under the guise of seeking farm labor? What would prevent it, and how would you discriminate?

Mr. GRONNA. In reply to the Senator's query I want to say that I know he is as familiar with the immigration laws of Canada as I am, but I will say to him that the immigration laws of Canada permit them to advertise as much as they please. They permit the people of Canada to send for as many people as they please, and I do not entertain any fear that the border will become a dumping ground any more than it is at the present time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator has strengthened my argument. For that very reason if Canada advertises at certain periods and brings in from all the foreign countries labor, then, if we allow this amendment to pass, when that labor is not employed one of the agents would come across the border to this country with the very persons we are seeking to keep from coming here in competition with the labor of this country.

I do not think it is worth while to take up the time of the Senate any further unless those who desire this amendment to pass have further arguments to advance. I want to state here and now that I believe the man who works on the farm for a wage is as much entitled to the protection of this Government from competition as the man who works in the machine shop or works at any other form of manual labor, corporation work, such as on railroads, in our great manufacturing establishments, and other kindred enterprises; but when there is a scarcity of labor we should put the muscle and the brain of our own country on the market, and by virtue of the law of supply and demand, demand a higher wage and receive it, as in the case of those we have already legislated for or whose condition brought about this form of legislation. I believe it would be an inducement for boys to go to the farm. I saw an advertisement the last harvest time——

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just one moment. Let me finish the sentence. I saw the last harvest time where they were offering splendid wages for young men to go out and engage in harvesting the crops, and boys went from college and engaged in the work and in that way helped pay their tuition and became better qualified for the exercise of citizenship in this country. The account of the per diem wages they received was amazing to some of us from the South.

Now, in order to cheapen that process this amendment is introduced to flood this country with immigrants from those who have come into Canada and deny the boys of this country the privilege of going out and earning money and acquiring health in the healthful exercise of harvesting the splendid crops grown in the Senator's part of the country.

I am unalterably opposed to this amendment being put into the bill. I believe the time has come for us to face resolutely against allowing the lower orders of a European or any other foreign country to be dumped here, and by virtue of their low scale of morals to make it distasteful to the young men of this country to engage in that kind of work. We have had that curse in the South. We have had that curse spread by virtue of our lax immigration laws all over the country. I would infinitely rather have higher wheat and higher manhood and morality than to have cheaper wheat and lower manhood and morality.

Mr. GRONNA. The first part of the Senator's statement is absolutely correct and shows exactly what the conditions are in my part of the country. It is true that the college boys were required in order to meet the demand for labor in the harvest field. It is also true that little children, boys and girls from 10 years up, had to perform farm labor, and not only that, but the American women had to go out into the harvest fields in order to save the crop.

I wish to ask the Senator if he has ever heard that there was any competition in labor so far as farm labor is concerned? In my section of the country it does not exist. It does not exist in the western country, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to say that I am glad that it does not exist. The Senator is seeking to bring it about now, and it is that that I want to avoid. I want to let the competition be among the boys and the girls and the women if necessary.

I wish to state further, Mr. President, and then I am through with this discussion, that of all occupations which induce to health and do not contribute in any way to the degradation of the morals of people, farm work is the one. I would dislike to see the Senator's part of the country invaded with that element which has been a blight on my section since I can remember and practically through the history of the development of the South. The very labor that ought to employ the hand and the brain of the young men of the South by virtue of the very racial contest has been preempted by the class of people we do not want to come in competition with. But it is there. We are entitled to the highest and the best, and for that reason we have a contract-labor law. As I stated the other day, we ought to build not from the top down, but from the bottom up.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I thoroughly sympathize with the statement the Senator makes, but let me ask the Senator does he consider the labor he referred to as skilled labor?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the word "skilled" is a relative term. I should think that there are occupations on the farm—and I have discussed it personally with the Senator—that are skilled. I do not believe that the ordinary labor as I know it can take care of the modern machinery that is necessary on the farm. I do not believe such labor can do it; and for that reason I believe in the provision of the bill which provides that where skilled labor can not be found in this country it can be contracted for abroad by applying to the Bureau of Immigration for their permission and setting forth the facts.

The term "skilled" is very elastic and comparative. I believe that under certain conditions some degree of relief could be gotten in the case described by the Senator, but I think that with the hosts of unemployed in America and the demand incident to the harvest time, with the proper inducement and the proper advertisement throughout the country, you could get all the labor you want to gather the crop.

Mr. GRONNA. We allow more than this skilled labor to come into this country under the provisions of the bill. The Senator knows that on page 11 it is provided that persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants, accompanying their employers, are to be admitted into the country. Will the Senator explain to me what that means? It may be that I do not understand it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it explains itself. An individual traveling abroad may, under the necessities of the case, employ a domestic servant, a maid or some individual to look after personal affairs in transit, and when he gets to this country, as he is already in the employment and has been brought here, he is allowed to come in. According to the testimony of the Commissioner of Immigration we ought not in any way to jeopardize the terms of the bill; and as that was such a matter of necessity, the servants being employed and coming along with their employers, we admitted those persons. I think just a glance at that provision explains it.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator thinks there is no danger of this provision being abused when persons may be employed in foreign countries as servants. Those immigrants will be brought in, of course, by rich men; it will not be done by farmers. It will be done by those who can afford to travel in foreign countries and take with them such persons as they like for their personal attendants.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it would be a pretty costly experiment, Mr. President, for an individual traveling abroad to bring in a sufficient number to abuse it to the extent that the Senator's provision would abuse it, where he wants sufficient to gather the wheat crop of the West. This merely applies to those who are accompanied by their personal servants.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not possible that farmers may take advantage of that provision and go abroad and bring back these servants and then employ them as farm laborers?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would suggest to the Senator to offer that as a remedy in place of his proposed amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. At any rate, it is a discrimination. I believe the Senator will admit that it is a discrimination.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any longer. I have offered this amendment in good faith and I am in hopes that it will be adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to correct two errors made by the Senator from South Carolina a few moments ago.

I do not know what the conditions in his own part of the country may be, but he speaks of farm laborers in this country. There is not any such thing as a farm laborer in the entire Northwest. There is no labor that may be designated properly as farm labor. The only labor that we are able to get at all is the overflow from the cities after employment in the cities has been exhausted. They are not farm laborers. They remain only a short time, until the crop is harvested or a little of the plowing done. It is almost impossible to get labor on a farm by the year, as we used to get it 20 or 30 years ago, or to get anyone who knows anything about farming in general. Every farmer in the Northwest will give you that as his experience.

Another error the Senator makes is in the supposition that there is such a thing as competition in farm labor. We can not get half the labor that we need. We could absorb all the farm labor we have now and we could multiply it by 2 and 3 and yet the demand would not be filled in the northwestern section of the country.

The Senator says that he wishes to protect the young men who want to go out and do labor upon the farm from competition that strikes down their wages. Mr. President, I believe in the Senator's own State, and I know in my State and in all the northwestern section of the country, the farmer pays all he is able to pay and considerably more than he ought to be required to pay. If you were to give those men the wages they earn in the city you would turn over the entire crop to them and you would have to give a mortgage upon your farm for the next year's crop in order to pay your hired help. There is no such condition as the Senator describes in any part of the United States that I know anything about.

Now, if the Senator is afraid of dumping the cheap labor of the old countries upon our farms, let me say that we are equally afraid of dumping the cheap products produced by the cheap labor of the old countries into this country. You throw down your bars of protection and you say that all the food products produced anywhere in the world may come into the United States free, but at the same time you say to the farmer who has to compete with the entire world in his produce, "We do not intend to let you get any labor to work your farm unless you pay the price that is paid by the protected manufacturer," and in that is the great injustice.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am just a bit amazed that the Senator, being the good protectionist he is, should declare to the Senate that he is in favor of protecting the product but not the producer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 9, lines 6 to 12, in lieu of the words—

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they emigrated from the country of which they were last permanent residents solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution—

Substitute the following words:

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the literacy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious or political persecution, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by discriminatory laws or regulations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the importance of this proposed amendment is manifest, but I am physically unable to present any views in support of it at this time. I have a letter from Hon. Louis Marshall, one of the very able lawyers of the New York bar and a member of one of its most eminent firms, bearing upon this subject. It is not very long, and I ask permission that the Secretary may read it to the Senate as the argument in support of the proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The differences between the two clauses are as follows:

(a) The Burnett bill limits the exemption to those who seek admission to the United States "solely" for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution. This limitation would deprive the provision of all possible value. No matter how severe the persecution may be, the refugees, who are usually stripped of their belongings or are deprived of the opportunity of earning a livelihood by reason of persecution, would naturally come to this country, not only for the purpose of seeking that asylum which we have always granted to the oppressed but incidentally and of necessity to earn a livelihood here. Hence it can not be truthfully said that they come here "solely" to avoid persecution. Naturally they also seek to save themselves from starvation, which, though frequently an incident to the persecution which they have suffered, would confront them in this country if they do not find an opportunity to earn a living by their labor.

As the exemption clause now reads, the only persons who would have the benefit of it would be those individuals who could show not only that they were persecuted but that they have sufficient means to make it unnecessary for them to labor or are willing to pursue a life of idleness. Surely the intention of the framers of this clause, who are actuated by the most humane of motives, must be to enable the victims of persecution not only to seek an asylum but also to become useful members of the community while here.

Those who have been strong in their advocacy of the illiteracy test admit that an exemption should be accorded to these victims of persecution. Messrs. Jenks and Lauck, in their recent work on The Immigration Problem, say at page 334:

"The chief objection raised at the present time against further restrictive measures has come from the Jews, who fear that any restrictive measure will tend to keep many of their people, especially those in Russia, under conditions of political and religious oppression. The answer to such an objection, of course, is found in the first principle laid down (in the commission's report) which makes it clear that, in the judgment of the commission, as well as of most other enlightened citizens, the United States should remain in the future, as in the past, a haven of refuge for the oppressed, whether such oppression be political or religious. Any restrictive measure should contain a provision making an exception of such cases."

(b) The clause in the Burnett bill merely exempts those who seek admission for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution. The substitute adds "political" persecution. As a matter of fact, the persecutions to which the Jews have been subjected in Russia and Roumania, while founded on religious intolerance and animosity, are in part also political, and, as Secretary Nagel pointed out, it is sometimes difficult to draw the exact line between religious and political persecution. The student of history knows that wherever there has been religious persecution it has been ordinarily commingled with political elements, and that, as a matter of fact, persecution is a dual monster, partaking both of a political and a religious character. In Russia and Roumania, it is difficult to say where religious persecution ends and political persecution begins. The two run into one another. It is one of the glories of our country, that it has during its existence as an independent power, opened its doors to those fleeing from political as well as from religious persecution.

The present Mexican situation does not affect the question, because it partakes of the nature of a civil war or rebellion and not of a political persecution.

(c) The clause in the Burnett bill contents itself with granting exemption to those who seek admission for the purpose of escaping "from religious persecution." There is no definition of that term in the act. The phrase is vague and indefinite, and for that reason is apt to receive an interpretation which would render it of but slight value. As a matter of fact, the religious persecution from which the Jews in Russia and Roumania are now suffering occurs principally through the operation of discriminatory laws and regulations. There are occasional outbursts, which are known as pogroms, where violence is used. But those are only symptoms of a disease which is much more insidious and fatal than these momentary physical phenomena. By these laws the Jews are prevented from receiving education. A people which, during the darkest of the Middle Ages, taught its children assiduously, so that education was a religious precept, has been restrained by law from sending them to the schools. Hence, the illiteracy which exists among the Jews in Russia and Roumania is directly due to the operation of discriminatory laws. There is a multitude of employments and activities in which they are not permitted to engage. They are restricted as to the territory in which they may reside. In fact, in Russia they may not live beyond the Pale of Settlement, and even within its boundaries they are confined to cities and towns. So that in reality they may not live or carry on business in 1999/2000 of the area of the Russian Empire. They are precluded from owning land, from living in the country, from carrying on agricultural pursuits, and from practicing professions, except to a very limited extent. In other words, they are in every way hounded and persecuted by methods more far-reaching and lasting in their effects than they would be if actual violence were inflicted.

This is clearly shown, so far as Russia is concerned, in the recent pamphlet of Lucien Wolf, entitled "The Legal Sufferings of the Jews in Russia," and the introduction thereto, by Prof. Dyce, of Oxford University; and as to Roumania, by the facts collated in the speech of Congressman CHANDLER delivered on October 10, 1913.

A clause, descriptive of the character of persecution which is to be the ground of exemption, embodied in the words, "whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by discriminatory laws or regulations," is therefore proposed. That clearly defines what undoubtedly is intended by those who recognize the necessity for an exemption. To decline to make such a definition is practically to give with one hand and to take away with the other.

This amendment imposes the burden of proof upon the imigrant and not upon the Government, and leaves the determination of the question as to whether there has been religious or political persecution of the character specified to the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor. The public interests are therefore fully safeguarded, and this clause merely becomes a safety valve for the purpose of protecting those whom it has been the policy of our country to take into its keeping ever since our Government began. It would be retrogression if this historic policy were now changed.

The reasonableness of this amendment is demonstrated by the fact that it is susceptible of absolute demonstration that the illiteracy of the Russian and Roumanian Jews is due entirely to the persecution which they have endured, and it would therefore be the very irony of fate if they were prevented from coming to this country because of the illiteracy thus conduced.

In a pamphlet by Mr. Max J. Kohler on "The Immigration Problem and the Right of Asylum for the Persecuted," it appears that the English aliens act contains an exemption clause similar in terms to that contained in the Burnett bill. He shows, however, that that clause has reference only to a provision excluding those who are "likely to become a public charge," and has no bearing on the illiteracy test. The leading members of Parliament were, however, of the opinion that the clause as framed was ineffective. But inasmuch as it was believed that there was no likelihood that the Jews who came to England from Russia by reason of religious persecution would be permitted by their English brethren to become public charges it was felt that, in that connection, the phraseology of the exemption clause was of comparatively small importance.

When one considers, however, that we now are dealing with the illiteracy test, and that the exemption clause is of importance, because an illiterate is not apt speedily to become literate, there is every reason for couching the exemption clause in such terms that it will carry out the benevolent purposes which it avows. Otherwise it would prove not only a snare and a delusion but the withdrawal of the last gleam of hope from those who are the victims of religious and political persecution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question not only about this last proposed amendment, but about the bill itself on that very subject. The amendment differs, I understand, from the original bill in that it includes political persecution as well as religious persecution. I read over that provision when the bill came from the House, and it seemed to be designed for only one purpose. Under this amendment there can be no question that all the Jews in Russia, if the statement just read is correct, and I assume it is, could immediately come into the United States. It opens the door for all those persons, whether they are illiterate or not, and you discriminate in favor of what you call the Jews and against the Christians, because in Russia, where perhaps nine-tenths of all our Jewish immigration now is coming from, there is no question that there has been both religious and political persecution. Therefore, we would open the gates wide to them.

So also with reference to the Armenians and the Turks. The Turks have persecuted the Armenians and the Armenians have persecuted the Turks, both religiously and politically. Under this provision there would be no difficulty whatever in all the Armenians and all the Turks getting into this country, because they had persecuted each other.

I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the particular wording on page 9. It is in reality just as broad as this language, for it provides that—

All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they emigrated from the country of which they were last permanent residents solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution.

All those can come in under the bill as it is now presented to the Senate. It seems as though the committee had adopted the word Jewish, for instance, in another instance as meaning a nationality, and not a religion. If I understand the proper phraseology and the definition of Jewish, it is a religion just as much as the Christian religion is a religion, and not a nationality.

If we use the word "Israelite" generally, then we would speak only of the nationality or of the particular race; but so long as the word "Jew" pertains to a religion and so long as this bill provides that if there is religious persecution—and the persecution mentioned here is toward the Jew because of his religion—in either instance, under the bill itself or under the amendment, it throws the door wide open for the entire Jewish religionists, which would permit the Israelitish race in Russia, and possibly in Poland, in Armenia, and in other Slavic countries, to come into this country, whether they are illiterate or not.

It seems to me to be hardly treating the Christian population of the Old World as fairly as we do the Jewish population. I have no objection to all of the Jews coming here from Russia or from any part of the Old World, if they are proper persons, but I want to see our coreligionists treated just as fairly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr President, the modifying word here, "solely," is the very word about which there has been most contention from those who have desired to have the fullest freedom given to the Russian Jews. The letter just read complains that the word "solely" would restrict them to prove the affirmative, would make it necessary for them to establish that that was the object of their coming.

Mr. McCUMBER. Could they not prove that by the Russian statutes themselves? Do not the Russian statutes provide that those of the Jewish faith—I am not now speaking of the Israelites, but those of the Jewish faith—can not hold land? Do they not also provide that those of the Jewish faith and religion can not live in certain places? Is not that discrimination a persecution of those of the Jewish faith? Therefore, does not this bill allow anyone of the Jewish faith from Russia, whether he be illiterate or otherwise, upon the presentation of the Russian statute, to come into this country?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That may be a discrimination, without persecution. I should think that our administrative officers in charge of the interpretation of this proposed statute would take just what the Senate committee meant or the House committee meant and the old law meant by inserting the word "solely." If the interpretation placed upon it by the Senator from North Dakota were correct, I presume those who would be the beneficiaries of it would call attention to it and ask that it be stricken from the bill. The committee was flooded with requests from all over the country, from those who were friendly toward the Russian Jew, to have this very word stricken out, because it seems to have been pretty well established that the persecution of the Jews was not on account of their religion; that it was racial antipathy, not religious antipathy. I think every student of conditions as they exist in Russia to-day will admit that, so far as the Russian officers and the Russian Government are concerned, they care nothing about the religion of the individual, but it is the racial antagonism. I do not think it is a question as to their religion, so far as I have been able to ascertain.

Mr. McCUMBER. What I wanted to direct the Senator's attention to was the fact that the Russian statutes are leveled against those of the Jewish faith and not against Israelites; not against the race, but against the religion. If the word "Jew" designates a religion and not a race, it must apply to the religion. Therefore it must be religious persecution, and the citation of the Russian statute would be all that would be necessary to admit such an immigrant.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think it is necessary to discuss just what would be the terminology necessary to define what is the particular faith of a member of a race and say that because he has a certain racial name that, therefore, that is the name of the faith that he holds. The point that we are making here is that the Jews of this country have protested against the insertion of the word "solely." If we remove that, the doors would be wide open to anyone claiming that he was religiously persecuted. We wanted to discriminate so as to give an asylum to those who really for the faith that was in them were being persecuted, and not as a race. The point which the Senator from North Dakota is making is that these Jews are being persecuted because of their faith. They are being discriminated against there because of their race and not because of their peculiar religious belief. I am not familiar with the Russian statute in its terminology, but I know that the Jews themselves have protested against this very word "solely," and the committee of the House, the committee of the Senate, and those charged with the formulation of this legislation were attempting to restrict it to those who were persecuted for their individual faith and not for their racial characteristics.

Mr. McCUMBER. Allow me to ask the Senator this question, so that we may not misunderstand each other: Suppose that one of those who belong to the Jewish faith should recant that faith and become a member of some Russian church, would the law of Russia then apply to his case?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not sufficiently familiar with the Russian statute to answer that question yes or no, but I can use an illustration. We have in our section of the country a race toward which there is a racial antipathy or a racial difference, such as to amount to a chasm across which we can not go. The mere fact that a negro in the South should become a Methodist or a Baptist, as a great many of them do, does not at all change the fact that he is a negro, nor does it lessen the racial antipathy. I should imagine that the same would be true in Russia.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would be true if the word "Jewish" referred to a race and not to a religion; but I have insisted—and I challenge that to be refuted—that the word "Jewish" refers to a religion and not to a race, and that if one recanted his Jewish faith and became an orthodox Christian of the Greek Church, he would no longer be a Jew and amenable to the Russian statutes to which I have referred. Therefore the statutes are directed not against the Israelite, but against a religion, and it is the persecution of the religionist. Under the terms of your bill, no matter if 90 per cent of them were illiterates, they could come in, because they are persecuted in Russia, while 90 per cent of certain portions of the population of Italy could not come in because they were illiterates and they were only Christians.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think that perhaps the Senator from North Dakota would find that in the practical administration of the law the interpretation which

I have attempted to give to it would be the one that would prevail, because those who have studied the matter most closely assert—and the argument presented by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] establishes that fact—that the Jews themselves are seeking an asylum for the race, as now outlined by the Senator, and this word "solely" excludes the possibility of that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no intention, as I before stated, of even attempting to discuss this important amendment. I am in hearty accord with those who are supporting and desire to secure the enactment of this bill into a law, but I have never sympathized with that narrower view concerning immigration which would exclude from our shores men and women who are the victims of either religious or of political persecution.

One of the proudest boasts of our country since its establishment has been the fact that it is a refuge for the victims of religious and political persecution from all countries. We believe that under our institutions it is a political duty to give them a haven where they can be free from the exactions of either or of both. If it be true that the word "Jew" is one which indicates a widely extended religious belief instead of a race of people, I would not for that reason limit the application of the rule in the slightest degree.

I think perhaps the suggestion may be true, in a general sense, that a man who is known as a Jew generally professes a religion which is peculiar to that people. If, therefore, the entire race of Hebrews in Russia or in any other country is the subject of religious or political persecution in the accepted sense of that term, I would make no limitation upon their right collectively any more than I would upon their right individually to seek the shores of America to the end that they might escape the further endurance of such intolerable conditions; and what I say of the Jew I would say equally as to any other form of religious belief or as to any other form of religious persecution or political persecution, always provided that the persecution exists in fact and not merely in imagination.

The word "solely" which appeared in the draft of this bill as it came from the House has unquestionably received the most serious and ample consideration; indeed, I presume that the so-called literacy test provided by that measure and the exceptions to it have been the subject of more consideration and more discussion than all the rest of the bill besides. Hence I am not prepared to say that there are not excellent reasons why it should be continued in the bill. Nevertheless, it is my conviction that it imposes a limitation which in effect will exclude or have a tendency to exclude many people from our shores who are the victims of an intolerable persecution carried on, perhaps, not with directness, but nevertheless so effectively as to be quite as intolerable as though it were direct.

The substitute which I propose goes very far. It not only eliminates the word "solely" but it adds the word "political," and by that means continues a policy of which we have boasted for a great many years.

I think the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], from what I have heard, is interested in this matter. I am sorry it became necessary to introduce it at a time when comparatively few Senators are in their seats, and when perhaps their interest and the interest of all of us has palled under the previous discussions to which the measure has been subjected. But I believe that this substitute, not perhaps in its entirety but in its substance, ought to be enacted into any immigration law which the Congress of the United States shall pass unless it be our purpose to alter our entire policy with reference to the subject to which this substitute relates.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether, in his opinion, any exception should be made in favor of those who are persecuted for racial reasons where, of course, the person is otherwise eligible to admission into our country as an immigrant?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my views upon that subject are somewhat positive. I have long believed that racial prejudices and differences were constitutional with mankind, and therefore ineradicable. I do not believe that races which are not likely to assimilate and merge themselves can endure with safety to a nation as component parts of it.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has just referred to the well-known racial prejudices and differences which exist between the black man and the white man in the South. We have had two or three apprehensions of difficulty with Asiatic countries, even since this administration began, consequent upon their presence in numbers sufficiently large on the Pacific coast to excite grave apprehension, and it is a matter of history that for many years American sentiment has been overwhelmingly against Chinese immigration to this country. Canada has had similar trouble with the inhabitants of the East Indies, who have sought to find an abiding place in the domain of that country, and the effort has resulted not only in vigorous opposition but in bloodshed.

I am not in favor of the immigration into this country of men differing racially in such wise as that it is practically impossible, and, of course, highly improbable, that they shall ever merge themselves into a composite nationality.

Now, if the Senator asks me to draw the line between those races with whom we can not assimilate and those races with whom we can assimilate, he asks me a very difficult question; but, broadly speaking, the fundamental constitutional differences, intellectual and physical, between the Asiatic races, the African races, and the Caucasian races are such that I wish we could by some means and at some time, without giving too great offense to other nations, limit all immigration into this country to members of the Caucasian race and exclude all others—or, perhaps I should say, to the white race—so as to distinguish it from the black and from the yellow races—not because I have any prejudice of a personal character that forbids me getting along with people of those races in a way, but because, nationally speaking, I believe that the intrusion of those races into America will constitute, if it does not already constitute, one of the gravest dangers that menace our future. Hence, so far as the racial question is concerned, I think it is fundamentally different from the religious or political question; and of course that makes it necessary that I should also limit my contention that this country should continue to be the refuge of those who flee from religious and political persecution by insisting that it should be the refuge of the white race, as distinguished from the Asiatic and the African races, who are the victims of such persecution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as it is probable that this will be the only time that the clause involving the question of the Russian Jew will come up, I wish to state that not only do the characteristics of the Hebrew race as we know them here—their thrift, their economy, and their general love of learning—appeal to us, but in looking over some tables I have here I think it becomes apparent that the proposed literacy test, even if Jewish immigrants are unable to establish that their coming is solely upon grounds of religious persecution, will not operate against them. The tables referred to show that they have a better chance than any other immigrants seeking admission to our shores, and constitute a splendid testimonial to the Jewish love for intellectual development.

The tables furnished by the Bureau of Immigration show that for the Austrian nation at large the per cent of illiteracy amongst those over 10 years of age is 22.6. Another table shows the per cent of illiteracy among the different races in that country, and I find that among the Hebrews in Austria the per cent of illiteracy is only 11.4. In Hungary the national illiteracy amongst those over 10 years of age is 40.9 per cent, while for the Hebrews of Hungary it is 3.5 per cent. That very marked difference runs all through, until I come to Russia; and I wish to call attention to the fact that even there, under all the adverse circumstances that surround them, or which are alleged to surround them, the Hebrew race compares very favorably with others as to intellectual development. For the Russian Empire, including Finland, the per cent of illiteracy is 70, while the per cent among the Hebrews is 40.

Mr. REED. From what figures is the Senator reading?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am reading from tables recently compiled and furnished to the committee by the Bureau of Immigration. They are brought up to date.

Therefore in this country there is no antipathy, racial, social, political, or otherwise, toward the Jew. I think the best specimen of manhood, from the standpoint of moral and mental integrity and every other standpoint, that I ever knew in my life was Altamont Moses, of Sumter, who was a colleague of mine in the legislature; a man who loved the right and lived it, and from whom it emanated—the highest type of American citizenship. Take the Hebrews as a class in this country, and in every department of industrial, social, and political life they will rank with any citizens we have. Therefore it can not be said that the committee has attempted in any way to restrict the immigration of the Jew. We have attempted to bring this bill in conformity with our treaties and conventions and at the same time, so far as possible, to preserve the integrity and the highest possible scale of citizenship here.

At the proper time, when we have proceeded further along, I propose to give the Senate the benefit of what research I have been able to make explanatory of the contested phases of this bill. In my opinion the measure is the result of as honest and as impartial work as was ever done in the execution of the duties of a committee. We have tried to restrict immigration because we thought the time had arrived when there should be some restriction.

I have before me a table—to which at another time I shall refer more particularly—which shows that from 1900 to 1910 the increase in population in this country, in round numbers, was 15,000,000. During that period there were 5,000,000 people who came to our shores as immigrants. The children of foreign-born parents were 3,000,000. The children of parents one of whom was foreign born were 2,000,000. So the native born were only 5,000,000. Two-thirds of the increase in a decade was either directly foreign by importation or born of parents born in foreign countries. Therefore we have now arrived at the point where every legitimate method of exclusion has to be exercised, or it will be a question not of our assimilating our immigration but of our immigration assimilating us. Already some of the States of this Union are face to face with the question whether they are American or foreign. Already the powerful influence of the foreigner is putting its hand upon the political thought and movement of this country. It is entering into the domain of our commercial life and influencing that.

As a nation of people we are proud of the fact that from northern Europe the spirit that has characterized America since it became distinctly America was inherited from those who resisted the encroachments upon the sovereignty of the individual and came here to set up a government according to their own ideals. I think we, the sons of those men, would be derelict in our duty if, after having achieved that for which our fathers fought and labored, we should swing wide open the door to those who by race, heredity, and their very mental and moral constitution can not have the ideals that we have, can not have the motives that actuate us, and, from a morbid sentiment or worse, jeopardize those who by blood and inheritance and association have built this country to what it is, and allow them to be submerged by an avalanche of those who, when they come, have preconceived notions, ideas, habits, and thoughts that may not be properly regulated.

Referring to the table from which I quoted a moment ago, 10,000,000 were either directly foreign born or had parents of foreign birth. Take the 5,000,000 immigrants that come in—they come here as adults, 80 per cent of them. As a matter of course, having arrived at maturity they begin or continue the increase of their families, while the 5,000,000 of native born have to go a period of years to maturity, an average, perhaps, of 20 or 21 years. So in the mere matter of natural increase your native-born citizen is handicapped by the time that must elapse from infancy to maturity, while your imported citizen is already a matured member of a family, the head of a family. Therefore the number of native-born Americans is measured exactly by the number of adults imported, and, referring to the matter of the natural increase you would not have two to one. The ratio in that respect would go pari passu. You would have, in the course of a few years, an absorption of the native-born American, preempting him in every field of endeavor, and modifying and influencing every institution of this country.

In place of the antagonism that seems to exist on this floor to certain tests that we have thought out and worked out in order to let in the best, if forsooth we must let in any, in place of having an antagonism to restricting the importation of immigrants, I think the committee has a right to appeal to the patriotism and moral and mental support of this entire body. There is something in this country that is of more value to us than rapid material advances and the bringing to wealth producing of our resources, and that is the maintenance of the standard of our citizenship.

Some Senator on this floor said the other day that after years of experience he believed that the progressive process has to come from the bottom up, and not from the top down. I think we have enough evidences of that for it to be axiomatic. We can not be charged with being inhuman; we would be unhuman if we did not seek to preserve the moral, intellectual, and political standard that characterizes this country. I have a right to protect my family against contact and association with those who I believe do not tend to perpetuate the ideals that have been inculcated in them and in their forebears.

We may have undeveloped mines and fields and forests. Better let them lie fallow and undeveloped, and await the natural increase of the natural Americans, than rush to individual and personal wealth at the jeopardy of our Government and her institutions.

It is along this line that the committee has worked. It is no argument to stand here and say that the fathers of us all were immigrants. Tables are before me here to show that the spirit that characterized those who laid the foundations of this Government is asserting itself even in this question of immigration. Since the flood tide started from southern Europe and the countries grouped in that political division, northern European immigration has shrunk to insignificance. The Norwegian, the Englishman, the Frenchman, the German is not going to come in contact and competition for a livelihood with those who, he knows by contact with them in his own country, are preempting the ground in America. So, in order to get the best immigrants, we have to prescribe the test that characterizes the best people. If education is not an essential for good citizenship, if it is not a test, we have been guilty, as the Senator from Oklahoma suggests, of a great deal of waste.

I took occasion to cite the condition of the Jew, so far as education is concerned, in the different countries from which he came. Even in Russia, under all the terrible conditions he has to suffer, in spite of the lurid pictures that have been painted, which perhaps are true, the national illiteracy is 70 per cent, the Jewish illiteracy 40 per cent. Even under those conditions he has struggled to a point where he has lowered the percentage of his illiteracy 30 per cent below that which characterizes the nation as a whole.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, does the national illiteracy in Russia include the Jews?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It includes the Jews; yes.

Mr. POMERENE. So, excluding the Jews, the percentage of illiteracy would be larger than 70 per cent?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, to be sure. The Jew lowers it to 70 per cent. In Hungary the national illiteracy is 40 per cent; the illiteracy of the Jews in that nation is 3.3 per cent.

I use that to show that where a nation is inspired, as every nation should be in this day of transportation and communication and elbow touch with the world, with an intimate knowledge, by hearsay if not by ability to read, of that which characterizes all which is best and highest and how obtained, under the most adverse circumstances the Jew has kept pace with the progress of the world in that essential particular. I do not believe this country is called upon to furnish a free-school system for the nations of the earth where they have the opportunity, with cheap printing and cheap travel, to better their own condition at home.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the illiteracy of the Jew in Russia is due entirely to the prohibitory processes of unfriendly Russian legislation and practices; and that the discrepancy which is shown by these tables between the intellectual progress of the Jew in Hungary and other countries and the Jew in Russia would long ago have disappeared, and in fact would never have existed if it had not been for the racial and religious persecution to which the Jew has been subjected in that despotic country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Judging from the logic of these tables, I think, as a matter of course, that conclusion is correct.

Mr. President, this bill has so appealed to the country at large, regardless of party affiliation, regardless of any question of party, that at its last introduction it passed the House and it passed the Senate. It was vetoed, and to the honor and credit of this patriotic body it was passed over that veto, and failed by only a few votes in the House. I predict that it will pass this body, as it has already passed the House, by an overwhelming majority. In view of all the startling figures that can be and will be read on this floor to prove that our civilization and our institutions are being jeopardized, I should hate to be the one who would dare deny the right of the American Congress to protect America in Americanism.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, a moment ago I asked the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] what his opinion is with respect to excepting from the operation of that provision of the bill now under consideration people who have been persecuted for racial reasons as well as excepting those who have been persecuted for religious or political reasons, and his answer was clear and lucid, as whatever the Senator says invariably is. I apprehend, however, from what he said, that he did not quite catch the full import of my question with its qualifications. What I asked was to know if any reason occurred to the mind of the Senator why an immigrant who had been persecuted for racial reasons should not be admitted equally with immigrants who had been persecuted for religious or political reasons, provided the immigrant was not otherwise subject to exclusion for special reasons outside and independent of the provisions of this bill. For example, Chinese are now excluded by virtue of our public policy, crystallized into law. A Chinaman might be persecuted for racial reasons, but he would be excluded as an immigrant to this country specifically because he is of the Chinese race. In like manner the people of any other particular race could be excluded from our citizenship by a direct enactment for that purpose, or any class of people could be specifically excluded for any reason we may care to act upon. But there is no intention on the part of any to exclude the Jews from emigrating to the United States because of their race. It never has been and is not now our policy to apply any test of that kind to the Hebrew people, the Jewish race. Now, with this qualification, I would like the opinion of the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] as to whether there is any greater or better reason for admitting immigrants, whether illiterate or not, if they are fleeing from religious or political persecutions than for admitting those who are fleeing from a purely racial persecution.

The Senator from South Carolina stated a moment ago, and he was very emphatic in his views, that the persecution of the Jews in at least one of the chief countries of Europe is because of racial prejudices and that it had nothing to do with the religious convictions or practices of those people. If that be the fact, and if they suffer humiliations and discriminations, and if they are denied rights that obtain generally among their fellow countrymen solely because they are Jews, in a racial and not in a religious sense, then a Jew could not avail himself of the exception in the text of the bill, which relates only to religious persecution. I will ask the chairman of the committee whether an illiterate Jew could be admitted under the exception in the bill as it now stands upon the ground that he was persecuted because of his religion when, in fact, he would only be able to show that he was persecuted solely because of his race? Manifestly he could not, if the position taken by the Senator from South Carolina is correct. If he is not persecuted solely because of his religion, then he can not invoke the protection of the exception as it now stands in the bill. So I again propound the question whether a man, otherwise qualified, ought not to come under the shelter of an exception like that now in the bill, if he is persecuted for the reason that he belongs to a particular race of human beings.

I think the word "racial" ought to be added to the pending amendment. We could at this time, even in this bill if we wish, escape the danger the Senator from Colorado apprehends with reference to the Asiatic races or any other undesirable people whom we do not wish to enter into our political life because of the race to which they belong by appropriate legislation to that end.

Mr. President, I hold a letter in my hand from Mr. Louis Marshall, of New York, an eminent lawyer of that city and one of the foremost Jews of this country, which I intended to have read; but the Senator from Colorado, seeing the letter, informs me that he has already had it read in the hearing of the Senate. If Senators paid attention to what Mr. Marshall says in this letter, they will agree that the reasons he urges for the amendment now pending are very strong, if not wholly convincing.

Mr. President, I came into the Senate while this particular matter was under discussion. I do not know, therefore, whether the Senator from South Carolina and his committee are opposed to the amendment now pending. The Senator now informs me in undertone that they do oppose it. Mr. President, I have great respect for this committee and for its chairman. The committee is composed of capable and conscientious men, and I have no doubt that they have endeavored to present a measure representing the best thought of which they are capable; but with all due respect, I can not see why a man who can not meet the literacy test should be permitted to come in because he has been made a victim of religious persecution in his native land, and yet in the case of another man who has perhaps been made the victim of even a harsher persecution for political reasons, should be excluded; nor can I understand, along the same line of reasoning, why one who has been persecuted solely because of the race he belongs to should be excluded.

Mr. President, there are numerous instances in history where men have arisen in some organized form and fought battles for the sake of liberty and for the enjoyment of larger rights and privileges, even imperiling their lives in the struggle. Such uprisings have been overcome by the organized power of Governments, and these men and even their children have been persecuted, many being compelled to flee for their lives. They have been stripped of their possessions, they have been ostracized, discriminated against, disfranchised, and even deprived of liberty. That is political persecution. Political persecution always obtains when men are denied the prerogatives that freemen and lovers of liberty have their hearts forever set upon. If a man, although an humble follower, has fought a battle of this kind, he fought for mankind against governmental tyranny, and when such a man comes to our shores seeking an asylum and higher and better opportunities and is denied entrance and our doors are shut in his face solely because he happens to be illiterate, I feel that this Nation of ours would by that act slap liberty and human hope in the face. What better reason has an illiterate who is persecuted because of his religious faith to enter our doors than such a man as I have described? That sort of thing does not appeal to me. A Jew may come and be able to show satisfactorily that he has been persecuted because he is a Jew, because he belongs to that race, and that he has been denied the right to engage in professions, denied the right to teach, that his children have been denied the right to enter the public schools of his country, that he has been despoiled of his property and, it may be, thrown into prison—all this because he is a Jew; not because of his religion, but because of his race, and he would be shut out. If only he could show that these persecutions were because of his religion, not of his race, he would be admitted. A distinction and a discrimination of that nature is beyond me.

Mr. President, I believe that is all I care to say on this subject at this time. I may have something further to say along the same line later on.

All that I have said is without reference to the literacy test itself in its general application. I have been addressing myself to the question of exceptions to that test. I desire later to submit my views upon the literacy test itself in its larger aspects. I would prefer, however, to do that on some other day that would be agreeable to the Senator from South Carolina, who is directing the bill upon the floor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We are not really on the discussion of the literacy test per se. It came up incidentally in this discussion. As the hour is getting late, I had thought of asking to have a day certain fixed for a vote, such time to be fixed as would give ample opportunity to Senators to discuss this or any other part of the bill that they may deem worthy of serious consideration.

Mr. STONE. I have been so occupied with other matters that I have not been present during the day while this measure has been under consideration, and if it has not been done I desire to offer an amendment to that particular part of the bill and address myself to it and have a vote upon it. Of course when that is acted upon my chief interest, so far as any exceptions to the bill go, will have been disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I assure the Senator that so far as the committee is concerned he will be given an ample opportunity to introduce that amendment. As the bill is now in Committee of the Whole, and it will be in the Senate before it is disposed of, he will have ample opportunity to introduce the amendment and to speak to it.

I had hoped this afternoon that we might be able to fix a day for voting, but under the new rule such an agreement would require the presence of a quorum. I want to give notice now that to-morrow, between the conclusion of the morning business and the time set aside for the memorial exercises, as already indicated on the calendar, I shall endeavor by unanimous consent to fix a day for the final disposition of the bill, for the reason that I think all Senators are practically acquainted with the vital features of the bill; and in fixing the time, I, of course, will have due regard to a full discussion of the vital points, one of which has been indicated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. As we have now come to what is the real heart of the measure—the proposed amendment to the literacy test—I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator makes that request, I want to give notice of an amendment that I propose to offer and have pending. Between the word "persecution," on line 12, page 9, and the semicolon following it I propose to insert the following:

Or for five years after the passage of this act, because of the military conquest of their country.

Cases are imaginable where a country without any act of its own has been dragged into war, invaded and overrun, its cities destroyed, its industries ruined, itself depopulated, its people fugitives, and where a man must either remain away or go back and take an oath of allegiance to a foreign power which has overrun the country without any cause of war, merely for military or strategical purposes. I think if there be such cases, and such cases are easily imaginable, the door of the United States ought to be thrown wide open to those persons, regardless of the literacy test. So I shall offer that amendment. I ask the Secretary to take it down. Between the word "persecution" and the semicolon, line 12, page 9, insert "or for five years after the passage of this act, because of the military conquest of their country."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will continue as the unfinished business to-morrow. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 19545. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (No. 55), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn December 23, 1914, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock m. on Tuesday, December 29, 1914.

Mr. KERN. I ask that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. If there is nothing more that is pressing in legislative session, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for a short session. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 17, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 16, 1914.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Edgar M. Harber, of Trenton, Mo., to be collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Missouri, in place of Charles G. Burton, resigned.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

John Hugh Kirkpatrick, of Homer, La., to be United States marshal for the western district of Louisiana, vice Ben Ingouf, whose term has expired.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Joseph T. Dickman, Second Cavalry, to be colonel from December 14, 1914, vice Col. Walter L. Finley, unassigned, who died December 13, 1914.

Maj. Robert E. L. Michie, Cavalry, unassigned, to be lieutenant colonel from December 14, 1914, vice Lieut. Col. Joseph T. Dickman, Second Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. John O'Shea, Fourth Cavalry, to be major from December 14, 1914, vice Maj. Sedgwick Rice, Third Cavalry, detached from his proper command.

First Lieut. Walter J. Scott, Sixth Cavalry, to be captain from December 14, 1914, vice Capt. John O'Shea, Fourth Cavalry, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 16, 1914.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

Charles Campbell, jr., to be secretary of the legation at Berne, Switzerland.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Herbert C. Comings to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 2.

PROMOTION IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

First Lieut. of Engineers Harry Lansdale Boyd to be senior engineer.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 16, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and ever-living God, Spirit of our spirits, Father of our souls, whose mercies are from everlasting to everlasting, the riches of whose blessings are above our comprehension, we praise and magnify Thy holy name, and especially do we thank Thee for those rich and varied endowments of mind and soul which enable us to contemplate the majesty of Thy glory and the beauty of holiness. Help us, we beseech Thee, to develop these endowments unto the perfected manhood, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in order to expedite the passage of the appropriation bills, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any possibility of having some understanding whereby unanimous-consent day—next Monday—can be put over until after the Christmas recess, so as to bring up the prohibition amendment for consideration on Monday, and thus permit Members living in the Mississippi Valley to get home in time to enjoy their Christmas Day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I think the Unanimous Consent Calendar is the calendar in which more Members of the House are interested than any other calendar in the House, and I would not like to ask unanimous consent to dispense with it or put it off until after Christmas. If it is agreeable to the House, I would be perfectly willing to have an order made to swap Monday for Tuesday and Tuesday for Monday. If that would be satisfactory to gentlemen on this side, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if it would be satisfactory to him?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that will be satisfactory to a great number of Members, some of whom live as far away as Texas.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not see how you can make anything by that swap.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why can not the unanimous-consent day be swapped for Saturday of this week or next Tuesday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it could be Saturday of this week, because we have appropriation bills to dispose of. But if there are no objections from other sources, I have no objection to swapping Monday for Tuesday or Tuesday for Monday.

Mr. ADAMSON. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object for the time being.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reference of the bill (S. 6689) making appropriations for the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease be changed from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on Appropriations. On its face it provides for a deficiency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that a change of reference be made of Senate bill 6689 from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on Appropriations, it being a deficiency appropriation. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this is the bill that proposes to make an appropriation for the foot-and-mouth disease?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; a larger sum of money is said to be needed than is carried in the current agricultural bill.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks the Senate, under his construction of the Constitution, has the right to initiate an appropriation of this kind?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate has not the right. A much larger sum is suggested as being needed than is now provided.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CARLIN. May I inquire, Mr. Speaker, how the bill found its way to the Committee on Agriculture?

The SPEAKER. The manner in which it found its way to the Committee on Agriculture is that the chairman of the committee asked me if it should go to the Committee on Appropriations or not, and I forgot it; and inasmuch as it seemed to be an agricultural bill, I referred it to the Committee on Agriculture, although it is clearly a deficiency bill. Is there objection to the request for a change of reference?

There was no objection.

MENTAL HYGIENE AND RURAL SANITATION.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday a report on the bill (H. R. 16637) to provide divisions of mental hygiene and rural sanitation in the United States Public Health Service (Rept. No. 1224), through inadvertence, was placed in the basket prematurely, the author having not quite completed what he intended to put in the report. I ask unanimous consent that a reprint be made of the report itself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks for a reprint of the report which he names. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRINTING AND BINDING, COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 677.

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts shall be, and is hereby, authorized, during the Sixty-third Congress, to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The New York Sun of yesterday, under big headlines, published the following, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Intimations that Congressmen fathering bills to stop all contraband exports are in reality agents of Germany acting under advice of German diplomats in this country were made yesterday by Maurice Leon, of 60 Wall Street. Mr. Leon in discussing the Sun's report of Representative BARTHOLDT'S advocacy of legislation forbidding all shipments to belligerents, declared that "such an unequivocal espousal of Germany's interests calls for immediate exposure, inasmuch as duplicity in such important matters affects the vital interests and even the permanent safety of the American people."

Mr. Leon gave his views of the activities of Congressmen of German descent, as follows:

"Representatives BARTHOLDT, LOBECK, and VOLLMER, when they speak of forcing an end to the war by cutting off all supplies from belligerents, know well that no supplies in any case can reach Germany. Therefore, by 'belligerents' they mean 'allies.'

"This is a characteristic German maneuver. I have no doubt but that these three Congressmen are carrying out the expressed wishes of Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador to this country, and Dr. Bernard Dernburg, the German publicist.

"In view of the activities of Representatives BARTHOLDT, LOBECK, and VOLLMER, it is important to consider whether the allegiance of these gentlemen is primarily to the United States or to Germany. Their silence is transparent. They are acting as agents of the German Government in Congress. What they do dovetails with the activities of the German ambassador.

"A true explanation of the whole matter is found in the principle laid down in the German imperial and state citizenship law, article 25, paragraph 2.

"This law sanctions the following practices: A German desiring to exercise the franchise of this country goes to the German consul, and from him obtains the written consent of the German authorities to retain his German citizenship, notwithstanding his naturalization.

"Having done that, he goes before a court in this country and takes an oath of allegiance which, according to our laws, requires him expressly to forswear allegiance to the German Empire. But that oath is not taken by him in good faith. He is not engaged in reality in becoming an American citizen, but in acquiring the right to use the American franchise although remaining a German subject.

"In this way the German Government connives at wholesale deception on the American Government, and does so with the sanction of a law duly adopted by the Reichstag and bearing the signature of the German Emperor.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, during my long service in this House I have heard read from the Clerk's desk many an accusation against Members of this body, but none more serious than the one just reported. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. VOLLMER], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK], and myself are practically charged with high treason against the Government of the United States by the unequivocal assertion that "we are acting as agents of the German Government in Congress." My colleagues will no doubt speak for themselves, though we all could probably well afford to leave the whole matter, without saying another word, to the judgment of the House and the country, considering the fact that the charge emanates from the New York spokesman of a foreign belligerent Government which, according to reports, would be at its rope's end but for the contraband supplies it receives from the United States. Certainly I shall not dignify the libel with an affirmation of loyalty to my country in a body of which I have had the honor of being a Member for 22 years and which knows my record, no matter how humble, to be an open book. It is true I am an American citizen of German birth, but this means, if I do not differ from all other American Germans, that I am a man who is loyal to the Stars and Stripes [applause] and who is for America against England, for America against Germany, for America against the world. [Applause.] Indeed, if the Star-Spangled Banner is not my flag, then I have no flag. But true to my bride I shall not be faithless to my mother, and you would have a right to despise me if I were. Therefore, as the United States is not an English dependency, I can reconcile it with my Americanism to give my sympathy to the Fatherland just as well as so many newspaper editors evidently reconcile their Americanism with the open espousal of the cause of the allies. But this sympathy has no more to do with the Government of Germany than with the Government of Siam. Lord Shaftesbury once said that the human heart can not possibly be neutral, that it constantly takes part one way or the other. However that may be, it is a man's private affair. In my capacity as a Representative I have never yet given utterance to an unneutral word, nor have I done an unneutral act.

When lies were published or misstatements were made I have, with the lights I had, endeavored to correct them, for as between truth and falsehood I can not be neutral, nor can you. What I have done in the present instance, referring to the introduction of a resolution to stop the sale of war materials to the belligerent nations of Europe, I have done with my full responsibility as a Member of the American Congress, not at the behest of the German or any other ambassador, but in response to a growing public sentiment as expressed in a number of mass meetings of good and loyal American citizens, some of which I have attended. And let me say, incidentally, that I have not seen the German ambassador for nearly a year except for a few minutes at an accidental meeting when I took breakfast at one of the local hotels, nor have I heard from him either directly or indirectly, in writing or otherwise. Knowing him to be one of the best informed and most high-minded diplomats, I should have greatly enjoyed his company, but I carefully avoided it just because I wished to guard against such infamous misrepresentations as are now made by enemies of his country, and to me as a Representative the German ambassador was and is no more than the diplomatic envoys of Russia, of France, or of England. As to Dr. Dernburg, I have not the pleasure of knowing him except by reputation.

So much for the personal side of the matter. But there is a more serious side, a graver accusation, involving an insult, not only to the millions of Germans who have acquired citizenship in this country, but also to the German Government. I refer to the assertion that there was a law on the statute books of Germany which makes it possible for a man to become naturalized in the United States and yet to retain his German citizenship, an assertion coupled with the insinuation, almost incredible in its mendacity, that the Germans are taking advantage of this situation, and when taking the oath of allegiance do not do it in good faith. This wholesale indictment is probably without a parallel in history, unless we compare it with the one hurled by France against England, which forever fastened the epithet "perfidious" to the name of Albion. It is an example of the fanatical hatred engendered by war, and a sample of the desperation of crooks who have been caught with the goods. [Applause.]

The facts are simply these: Germany, like every other country, has a law which makes it possible for those who are away from the fatherland to retain their citizenship by reporting within 10 years to a German consul, but when so reporting they must make oath that they have not acquired or taken steps to acquire citizenship in any other country. The period within which they must register used to be only 2 years, but was extended to 10 years when it was found that many persons had innocently forfeited their citizenship owing to the shortness of time. That is all. I hold that to charge a country which can justly boast of its aversion to duplicity and hypocrisy, of the incorruptibility of its judiciary and of the honor of its officials, with connivance at a common fraud, and to accuse of a like crime an element of our population whose unfaltering loyalty has been proven upon every battle field from Lexington to Appomattox, and whose civic virtues have made for it an honored name in our Republic, is in itself a criminal wrong, for which the guilty party should be called to account. [Applause.]

Yet, Mr. Speaker, Emerson said that our antagonists are our friends. It may prove so in this case, as their cowardly attack affords me an opportunity to say some things which otherwise I might not have been able to say, namely, in reference to the resolution which I have introduced and the motives which prompted it. It must be apparent by this time that the German Nation can not be conquered. Then why not stop the horrible slaughter that is going on from day to day? It is my deliberate judgment that the United States now has it in its power to stop it by withholding from the belligerent nations the sinews of war. Surely the advantages of hastening the time when the markets of the whole world will again be thrown open to our cotton and all other American products will outweigh a hundred times the temporary profits which a few manufacturers of war materials are now reaping, and, besides, we will give proof to the world of the sincerity of our desire for peace, a sincerity which can be justly questioned while we are merely praying for peace and at the same time manufacturing dumdum bullets to kill Germans and Austrians and to prolong the war. There is a hereafter, too; and is not, I ask you, the friendship of the 110,000,000 people who now constitute the population of Germany and Austria worth infinitely more than what we can make out of our one-sided bargains? At the behest of England, Japan has driven Germany from the Pacific, to clear the road, so to speak, for the action which will be taken on that ocean as soon as the Anglo-Japanese alliance is ready for business, and maybe the friendship of Germany will come in mighty handy when that time approaches. And another thing: The President in his neutrality proclamation said that "the United States must be neutral in fact as well as in name," and that we "should put a curb on every transaction that might be construed as a preference of one party to the struggle before another." Are not the manufacturers of war materials obliged, I ask you, to observe this injunction the same as all other citizens; and will anybody contend that selling to one party alone is not a transaction that will be construed as a preference of one party above the other? Therefore, in the name of peace, in the name of humanity, in the name of our material welfare, and in the name of the true spirit of neutrality, as proclaimed by both the President and the Secretary of State, we ask that a halt be called to the feeding of the belligerents with the sinews of war. And now I leave it to the judgment of the House to say whether these considerations, the real motives behind our action, are other than exclusively American and other than purely patriotic. I thank the House for the time and attention accorded to me. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLLMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VOLLMER. Mr. Speaker, the article that has just been read to the House not only reflects on my legislative conduct but it amounts to a charge of high treason against my distinguished colleagues, Messrs. BARTHOLDT and LOBECK, and myself, in the performance of our official duties.

Being such, I deem it a duty not only to myself but to my colleagues and this House to rise in my place and publicly reply to these infamous charges which have been given such wide notoriety by the great newspaper in which they appeared.

I am charged with being an agent of the German Government, and that acting as such I introduced a resolution against the export of contraband.

The statement is a lie, manufactured out of whole cloth. I am in no relation or connection whatsoever with the German Government. [Applause.]

That my resolution was inspired by the German ambassador and Dr. Dernburg is also a lie. I have never met either of these gentlemen. I have never met anyone acting for them in this connection. I have never had any communication with either of them, directly or indirectly, in regard to my resolution. The only person with whom I conferred on the subject was my esteemed colleague, Dr. BARTHOLDT, when we agreed that he as a Republican and I as a Democrat would introduce resolutions on the subject on the opening day of this session.

That I am a naturalized citizen, who, with the connivance of the German Government, took the oath of citizenship in this country with a "purpose of evasion and mental reservation" is another unmitigated, conscienceless, soul-damning lie. Every word of the statement is false. [Applause.]

I was born in this country, in the good old State of Iowa, to which I will soon return to stay. I am not given to boasting about my American patriotism, but I will back it against that of any dirty, purchasable penny-a-liner who ever tore to tatters the reputation of honest men. [Applause.]

I have looked it up, and there is no such law in Germany, or anything like it, providing for retention of German citizenship after taking the oath of allegiance in another country.

This dishonest charge is a slur on the loyalty and honesty of all of our naturalized citizens of German birth. Has not the German name been a synonym for good faith and square dealing and absolute honesty between men since the days of the Roman Tacitus? [Applause.]

One-third of the American people have German blood in their veins.

They need no defense at my hands. Their record in this country speaks for itself. They have done their full share in the wonderful development of this splendid land. In all the walks of peace they have done their duty, and when war came the statistics show that they invariably furnished more than their numerical proportion of men for the defense of the flag. [Applause.] That is their record in the past, and, from an intimate knowledge of them and their innermost ideas and habits of thought, I tell you that this will continue to be their attitude here in future, no matter with what country we may chance to become embroiled, even if it should be—which God forbid!—with the country which has always been the friend of the United States—Germany. [Applause.] Fortunately, there is not the slightest probability of such a thing, but if it should come, though it would tear their very heartstrings, I say to you that they would stand like a solid wall for America against Kaiser and Fatherland and kin across the sea; for this people have had the idea of duty—das Pflicht—bewustsein—the "categorical imperative," deeply implanted in their natures by centuries of religious and philosophical teaching at the hands of the profound masters of thought, and if such a terrible crisis should come, you would find them rallying to a man about Old Glory, the most beautiful flag that floats. [Applause.]

I introduced the resolution in question as an American Representative, knowing my duty as such, and trying to fulfill it in both letter and spirit.

In that resolution I voice America's highest moral obligation as I see it—to observe absolute, genuine, and not merely sham, neutrality in the spirit of the good old American sporting maxim of fair play.

I do not want my native land to stand as the arch hypocrite among the nations of the earth, praying for peace in response to a presidential proclamation and then furnishing the instruments of murder to one side only of a contest in which we pretend that all the contestants are our friends, thus—a national Pecksniff—assisting part of our dear friends to kill others of our dear friends. [Applause.]

I have been taught that the morality of a people is its highest interest, but in this case the economic interest of this country is also opposed to the practice.

A few may make money out of the sale of contraband, whose effect is only to prolong this wicked war; but as a whole people and in the long run it is to our overwhelming interest to have it brought to a speedy close.

No nation can hope to escape its share of the disastrous consequences sure to flow from this world-wide destruction of wealth and human beings.

In the ultimate analysis the peoples of this earth all share in a common fund. We can not hope to thrive if our customers are killed or impoverished. [Applause.]

And hence it is money in our pockets, ultimately, to stop this war by stopping this infamous trade, because that would stop it.

But I did not rise to make an argument for my resolution. I rose merely to throw back into the teeth of the scoundrel who concocted it this miserable falsehood aimed at my two distinguished colleagues and myself in particular and the American citizens of German birth or descent in general. [Applause.]

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, when I came on this floor to-day I had no intention to speak on this subject; but after consultation with my colleagues, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. VOLLMER], it was thought fitting that I should say a few words.

I am an American citizen, born in the State of Illinois, my father of German parentage, my mother of Swedish parentage, and I can truly say for them they were genuinely American in their views. Born in that great State, I breathed the air of Illinois, later in Iowa and Nebraska, and I believe I know something about the free air of America and American patriotism; and I believe in the superiority of the American flag—what it stands for—to any flag on earth. [Applause.] I suppose the reason this newspaper in New York has published the charge that I am working together with the German ambassador, in the interest of Germany against the allies and against this Government, is because on the second day of the meeting of this session I introduced a bill for the prevention of the exportation of war materials to warring nations.

I believe in peace. I have understood that there is a dove that has been fluttering around in this country for a number of years in the interest of peace. Well, now, I am willing to assist that dove by stopping the exportation of munitions of war to the countries that are engaged in war. If I am to pray for peace, I believe in doing something to stop war. I believe that if I am to pray for a hungry man or woman, the best thing to do is to follow up that prayer with a loaf of bread. [Applause.] If we believe in peace in this country, let us follow it up by stopping the men who want to make some money out of war—that there may be widows across the sea; that there may be orphans across the sea; that there may be misery across the sea. Let us stop the opportunity that causes these orphans and these widows and this misery.

Mr. Speaker, I am a pretty fair American citizen. It is more than probable that the man who ascribes to me the position of being a traitor to this country is not himself an American citizen. The chances are that if Uncle Sam called us to follow the flag he would be the first one to duck into the Atlantic Ocean and get away. [Applause.]

I was a little boy when the Civil War broke out in this country, but I can remember that very few of the German-Americans and Swedish-Americans in Illinois at that time were born in this country, but they went to fight for the flag to preserve the Union, and they fought bravely side by side with their comrades, regardless of birth or nationality. The German-American citizen is good enough to help defend this country and to do his share toward upbuilding this country, and he has done it. I am proud of the German-American. I know his loyalty to this country. I am proud of every man who comes across the sea and then takes his oath of allegiance to support our flag, because in my experience of a lifetime passed in their companionship I have found them to be worthy citizens in every line of human activity.

So far as this resolution is concerned, my own people at home asked me to introduce it. Why? I was elected on a peace platform. I told my people at home that I was for peace. I am for peace now, and the only way to secure it is to do our part in preventing shipments of munitions of war to warring nations. I have noticed in the papers this morning that we in this country have the privilege of shipping food supplies to neutral countries provided it is done under the supervision of the British consul. It is about time that America took notice, as she did 100 years ago, and if I mistake not the American people will take notice now. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a telegram bearing upon this same subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a telegram on this same subject. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., December 15, 1914.

Hon. GEORGE R. SMITH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

In the name of Christianity, humanity, and the spirit of neutrality we beg your support for BARTHOLDT's bill aiming to stop munitions of war from America reaching Europe.

GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE OF MINNEAPOLIS,
OTTO HUEBNER, President.
HUGO YETTER, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

TERMS OF COURT AT STEUBENVILLE, OHIO.

The Clerk called the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 5849 on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

The bill H. R. 5849, to amend section 100 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 100 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 100. The State of Ohio is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Ohio. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Ashland, Ashtabula, Cuyahoga, Carroll, Columbiana, Crawford, Geauga, Holmes, Lake, Lorain, Medina, Mahoning, Portage, Richland, Summit, Stark, Tuscarawas, Trumbull, and Wayne, which shall constitute the eastern division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Auglaize, Allen, Defiance, Erie, Fulton, Henry, Hancock, Hardin, Huron, Lucas, Mercer, Marion, Ottawa, Paulding, Putnam, Seneca, Sandusky, Van Wert, Williams, Wood, and Wyandot, which shall constitute the western division of said district. Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Cleveland on the first Tuesdays in February, April, and October, and at Youngstown on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in March; and for the western division, at Toledo on the last Tuesdays in April and October. Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court to be held at Cleveland may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term then being held or authorized to be held at Youngstown. Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Cleveland or at Youngstown, as the court may direct. Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Youngstown. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Adams, Brown, Butler Champaign, Clark, Clermont, Clinton, Darke, Greene, Hamilton, Highland, Lawrence, Miami, Montgomery, Preble, Scioto, Shelby, and Warren, which shall constitute the western division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Athens, Belmont, Coshocton, Delaware, Fairfield, Fayette, Franklin, Gallia, Guernsey, Harrison, Hocking, Jackson, Jefferson, Knox, Licking, Logan, Madison, Meigs, Monroe, Morgan, Morrow, Muskingum, Noble, Perry, Pickaway, Pike, Ross, Union, Vinton, and Washington, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the western division shall be held at Cincinnati on the first Tuesdays in February, April, and October; and for the eastern division at Columbus on the first Tuesdays in June and December, and at Steubenville on the first Tuesdays of March and October: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Steubenville shall be furnished free of expense to the Government until the completion of the Federal building: And provided further, That terms of the district court for the southern district shall be held at Dayton on the first Mondays in May and November. Prosecutions for crimes and offenses committed in any part of said district shall also be cognizable at the terms held at Dayton. All suits which may be brought within the southern district, or either division thereof, may be instituted, tried, and determined at the terms held at Dayton."

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

On page 3, line 15, strike out the colon after the word "October" and insert in lieu thereof a period and the following:

"Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court being held at Columbus may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term being held or authorized to be held at Steubenville. Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Columbus, or at Steubenville, as the court may direct. Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Steubenville."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is a Union Calendar bill and improperly on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. What reason does the gentleman from Illinois give for that?

Mr. MANN. It provides a charge on the Treasury in providing an additional place for holding court. Another thing, it provides that the jurors summoned shall be directed to serve at a term being held at Steubenville, which directly involves a charge on the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's point is well taken. The House, under the rule, will automatically resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. COX in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5849.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD].

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code, so as to provide for an additional court at Steubenville in the eastern division of the southern district of Ohio. Ohio is divided into two judicial districts, the northern and southern, each subdivided into an eastern and western division. The northern district includes 40 counties, 21 in the western division, where United States courts are held exclusively, at Toledo, and 19 in the eastern division, where courts are held both at Cleveland and Youngstown. In the southern district there are 48 counties, 18 being in the western division, where courts are held in Cincinnati and Dayton, and 30 in the eastern division, which includes such large counties as Jefferson and Belmont, in the eastern section of the division, and Franklin, near the western boundary; the only place for holding United States courts being at Columbus, in Franklin County, 150 miles westward from the Ohio River, which forms the eastern boundary of this division.

Centering at Steubenville are large railroad, manufacturing, mining, and other commercial interests owned largely by foreign and interstate corporations, and it is therefore an initial point for much necessary litigation which reaches the Federal courts, either by removal from the State courts or by original commencement in the court at Columbus, and the increased burden thus put on the litigants in having to travel 150 miles with their lawyers and witnesses amounts in many instances, especially to parties of limited means, to a practical denial of justice.

Now, Steubenville is situated in the extreme eastern part of the eastern division of the southern district of Ohio. Your committee after carefully considering the case has arrived at the conclusion that the establishment of a court at Steubenville was necessary not only in the interest of litigants but in the interest of economy, as far as the Government is concerned. It is nearly 150 miles from Columbus to Steubenville, and the topography of the country is such that Steubenville is much more accessible from a number of large counties lying along the Ohio River than is Columbus.

The only change that we propose to make in the statute commences on line 16, where we amend by adding the following words:

And at Steubenville on the first Tuesdays of March and October. Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court being held at Columbus may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term being held or authorized to be held at Steubenville. Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Columbus or at Steubenville, as the court may direct. Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Steubenville: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Steubenville shall be furnished free of expense to the Government until the completion of the Federal building.

This language that I have just read constitutes the only change made. It simply provides for holding an additional term of court at the time designated at Steubenville in the eastern division of the southern district of Ohio. We think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman state whether a public building has been authorized at Steubenville?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. It has.

Mr. FOSTER. For a court; and has the building been built?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I do not think it provides for a court building. It has not been constructed. But that is a question with which we have nothing to do.

Mr. FOSTER. If a court is to be held at Steubenville it would be necessary that a building should be provided in which to hold it.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. The Judiciary Committee considers only the necessity of establishing the term of court, and has nothing to do with providing buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. I am aware of that. They now hold a term of court at Columbus and what other place?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. They only hold a court at Columbus in the eastern division of the southern district. They hold court at Cincinnati and Dayton, in the western division of the southern district. The courts at Dayton and Cincinnati have no jurisdiction over the eastern division. This is the proposition. Now there is only one court held in the eastern division; it is held at Columbus, and it is 150 miles from Columbus to Steubenville.

Mr. FOSTER. How far is Steubenville from the line?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. It is close to the State line, but the topography of the country is such that the railroads running through a number of the counties strike Steubenville, and you have to go quite a circuitous route to get to Columbus.

The evidence before our committee was that in marshals' fees and witness fees it would actually be an economy to the Government to have a division of the court held there. That is the conclusion we reached from the hearings before the committee. It is not only in the interest of the convenience of litigants, but at this long distance of travel—150 miles and farther from some of those lower counties along the Ohio River, which are that distance from Steubenville—its establishment would be in the interest of economy. There are a number of instances where the railroads run up to Steubenville and across to Columbus, and we arrived at the conclusion that these eastern counties actually need this court, and, having much litigation, it would be actually an advantage to the Government from an economic standpoint to save these fees; and it will be of no expense to the Government, unless some future Congress should provide a Federal building there.

Mr. FOSTER. How much business is there in the Federal district in Columbus?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I had some data upon that subject, but I mislaid it during the recess. I am sorry that I can not give it to the gentleman. Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS] may be able to do that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me to permit me to give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] some information?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I will just read a letter which was written to Mr. FRANCIS by one of the judges presiding over one of the courts.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was the judge? What is his name?

Mr. MADDEN. Sater. This letter appears in the RECORD, on page 6599, of April 6, 1914, when this bill was under consideration before. The letter reads:

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO,
JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
Columbus, March 9, 1914.

Hon. W. B. FRANCIS, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of March 3 was on my desk on my return from Cincinnati, where I have been holding court. The clerk also handed me your letter to him in reference to the bill now pending in Congress entitled H. R. 5849, relative to the establishment of a Federal court at Steubenville, Ohio.

It is a judge's duty to perform his allotted task and if additional court centers are created I shall endeavor to meet requirements imposed. Your letters call for an expression of my views and I shall therefore give them after having, with the aid of the clerk, gathered the information sought by you.

I am just about to close 7 years of service on the bench, in which 14 terms of court have been held at Columbus. In those 14 terms there have appeared on the civil trial dockets as originating in Jefferson, Belmont, Monroe, and Harrison Counties but 35 cases. Of that number 27 were settled without a trial. Only 8 were tried. This gives an average of 2½ a term; the number actually tried is slightly over 1 a year. In addition to those which were formally placed upon the trial docket there were 3 injunction cases that were tried and disposed of soon after the filing of the bills. Two of these were strike cases and one involved an oil lease. This brings the total number of cases actually tried in 7 years up to 11. In the same 7 years 26 indictments have appeared on the criminal docket. Of this number only 6 cases went to trial. In all of the others there was either a plea of guilty or for some other reason the cases fell by the wayside without coming to trial. The net result of trials, therefore, in 7 years from the above-named counties is 17. There have been a few cases brought—usually personal-injury cases—which have been settled before they were placed upon the trial docket.

The above indicates the small amount of business coming to the Federal court from the four mentioned counties, and that if a court were established at Steubenville it would involve great expense to the Government and little benefit to litigants or others concerned.

I appreciate that the distance from Steubenville to Columbus is considerable, and that at times it involves some hardship to the parties, their counsel, and witnesses to try a case in the Federal court at Columbus. On the other hand, to construct a court room with other suitable conveniences necessary to the operation of a court—such as offices for the clerk, marshal, and district attorney; chambers for the judge, grand and petit jury rooms and witness rooms—means a large expenditure for the Government. The mere opening of a term of court also involves quite an expenditure. Almost all of those connected with the court are allowed, and properly so, their traveling expenses and some of them a per diem for living expenses. Their compensation is such that they could not be induced to accept a position which requires much traveling about if they were to pay out of their own funds on the several trips their railroad fare and living expenses. Jurors are allowed a mileage and $3 per day. To say nothing of the interest on the investment for proper quarters for the conduct of the business of a court, the operating expense is great.

The question therefore is, Shall the United States bear the burden incident to the cost of such quarters and to the maintenance of a court which, if history repeats itself, will have so little to do? If it be conceded that there will be some increase in business resulting from the establishment of a court, I dare say it will not be seriously contended that it will come from either Monroe or Harrison County, for the reason that the employment of the people of such counties is not of the character which brings litigation to any appreciable extent into the Federal courts.

The history of the effort to maintain a court at Dayton ought to be helpful. That is a much larger city than Steubenville and, reckoning such city and the country tributary, the population is much greater from which business may be drawn than that of the four counties named in your letter. Personally I have endeavored to satisfy those who do or would do business in the Federal court at Dayton. It is fair to them to say that some of the cases originating in Dayton or adjoining territory have been tried at Cincinnati, but they have been pressed by counsel for trial at that place instead of Dayton. This in itself is a significant fact. The largest number of cases ever tried at Dayton at one term was three. There were but four cases on the docket at that term. There have been terms at which there were none for trial. On one occasion I did all the business that was offered or could be done within 20 minutes, adjourned the term of court, and took the next train home. As a jury had been brought in and was entitled to its mileage and per diem, the court officers to their costs, and the Government employees to their mileage and maintenance, those 20 minutes were quite expensive. I finally last fall declined to allow a jury to be called when there was but one case on the docket for trial. This was on account of the abnormal expense which would be incurred in the trial of that one case. It was subsequently placed on the Cincinnati February docket for trial and soon after the opening of the term was settled. In the course of time, on account of the importance and continued growth of Dayton, Springfield, Xenia, and minor towns in the vicinity of Dayton, with their large manufacturing interests, there will be an increased business, but it will be a long time, in my judgment, before it will assume importance.

I am of the opinion that the business in the four counties named in your letter, to wit, Jefferson, Belmont, Monroe, and Harrison, is insufficient to warrant the establishment of a court at Steubenville, and that the locating of a court there will be a costly and disappointing experiment.

If a court should be established there, there should be no October term. There are now seven terms of court to be met by the judges in this district, and frequently both of them are working at the same time on the docket. There are terms in February, April, May, June, October, November, and December. The February term usually laps well into March. Last month my juries were working just about 20 full days, and we got rid, in one way or another, of 29 cases. There is practically a full month's work yet on that Cincinnati term, but I was compelled to suspend temporarily on account of work here and in the circuit court of appeals, while Judge Hollister is going on with equity work. He will take the April term at Cincinnati, which usually runs until about the 1st of July, while I take the May term at Dayton, which this year will have a few cases, and the June term here, the jury work of which has sometimes run quite well into July, but is usually finished late in June. The equity work is ordinarily cleared up in the summer months. The October term at Cincinnati is the big term of the year. Usually one judge works the law side and the other the equity side. The November term at Dayton has sometimes fallen down entirely, but more frequently has had one or two, but never more than three cases for trial. The December term here more frequently runs into January than otherwise. The business in this eastern division has grown in volume and importance greatly since the location of a judge at this point most of the year. If there is to be a court at Steubenville, the terms should be in March and September, and even then there is danger of a conflict as regards the March term and the February term at Cincinnati.

I can not quite understand why you should want in your bill the last two sentences. I can not believe that you appreciate their significance. They were embodied verbatim or in substance in the original bill establishing a court at Dayton, and it was the subject of careful consideration by my late associate, Judge Thompson, and myself. Under those clauses your clients in Steubenville, Bridgeport, Bellaire, or elsewhere along the Ohio River, if the act is to be literally construed, can be dragged all the way to Dayton to try their cases—can be forced to pass through Columbus, where a court is in session the greater part of the year, and be forced into trials at the still more remote point of Dayton. Citizens of Ironton, Portsmouth, Lancaster, Newark, and Cincinnati may be compelled to go to Dayton to have their cases tried, even though in so doing they are compelled to pass through other points in the district which are much nearer and at which courts are sitting almost continuously. Your clients, thus called upon to try cases at Dayton have no protection, except such as a trial judge may in the exercise of a possible discretion afford. Instead of giving the litigants the opportunity of trying their cases at the nearest point to their homes, they may be taken in many instances the greatest distance possible within the district. Instead of perpetuating such an anomalous situation, would it not be well entirely to eliminate it from the law?

In the foregoing I have made no mention of bankruptcy matters, for the reason that it is only occasionally a contest arises in a bankruptcy proceeding which calls for a hearing before a district judge. The referee in bankruptcy works out successfully almost all cases.

Yours, very truly,

So that it seems to me, in the face of the facts set forth by one of the judges of the Federal court in Ohio, there is no real necessity for the establishment of a term of court at Steubenville, and that to establish it would be but a small species of reckless and extravagant waste of the public money.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I will state that Dayton is in the western division of the southern district of Ohio. Dayton is only 40 miles from Cincinnati, so that his argument in regard to the court at Dayton and the effect of it there has no relevancy to this situation. Here is a map of the southern district. Dayton and Cincinnati are shown here, and here is Columbus, and it is 150 miles from Steubenville. With all of those counties tributary to Steubenville, the people have to go very long distances, and that is the complaint. They complain of the expense of litigation involved in carrying their cases to Columbus. Perhaps the presiding judge does not want that additional burden put upon him; but the people of the entire eastern division of the southern district of Ohio, who are representative men, who appeared before the committee, have made to the satisfaction of your committee a case against the contention of the judge. It will inconvenience the judge, no doubt, to go those 150 miles; but rather than inconvenience the litigants, the people of those populous counties, with mining and railroad interests, and suits pending, we think it is more equitable to give those people a court at Steubenville.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS], who represents that district and who is more familiar with the details than I.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman yields, how many counties do I understand are in this district? This judge speaks of four counties that furnished very little business.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. He was talking of the court over at Dayton, which is only 40 miles from Cincinnati, and in the vicinity of Cincinnati, but that is no answer to this argument that these people are 150 miles away.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Ohio is divided into two judicial districts, the northern and the southern, each of which is divided into an eastern and a western division. The northern district includes 40 counties, 21 in the western division—the United States court being held at Toledo—and 19 in the eastern division, where court is held at Cleveland and Youngstown. In the southern district there are 48 counties, 18 being in the western division, where court is held at Cincinnati and at Dayton, and 30 in the eastern division, with only one court at Columbus. There are only 18 counties in the western division and 30 in the eastern division.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not a fact that sometimes judges get the idea that they do not like to travel any distance to hold court, and usually encourage business to come to the place where they happen to be located? That might account for a lot of this business not being taken to these different divisions.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. They could not hold the court at Steubenville until we establish a court there.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand; but take, for instance, Dayton.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not believe litigants should be compelled to travel a long distance, because many times I think that prevents people getting justice.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I think it often does. It often prevents the bringing of proper suits in the proper court, and people are therefore denied their rights on account of those conditions.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS].

Mr. FRANCIS. Mr. Chairman, in the course of my remarks I shall make answer to the letter which the gentleman from Illinois has just read to the committee. The State of Ohio has very few sittings of the United States district court. I am told that the little State of West Virginia, less than half the size of Ohio, has 11 places where United States courts are held. The northern district of the State of Ohio is very well and conveniently provided with sittings of the district court—one at the city of Youngstown, a populous manufacturing center, and one at Cleveland, and one at Toledo; the southern district, in the western division, having a sitting at Dayton and one at Cincinnati. The eastern division has its sitting far removed from the eastern center, it being at Columbus, Ohio, being 150 miles from the populous district in which I reside, and from those counties which have been referred to here. The counties of Belmont, Harrison, Jefferson, and Monroe, and I might say a part of Washington, would be tributary to a district court at Steubenville. These represent a population of about 250,000 people, who would have a district court within 60 miles, while now they have to go all the way to Columbus, Ohio, and take their witnesses there, and in effect it amounts to a denial of justice on the part of the litigants because of the great expense entailed by reason of witness fees and traveling expenses.

In a case taken up to Columbus from Steubenville the fee of a single witness will cost $15. The man of moderate means can not take his witnesses to Columbus. It is impossible for him to do so; so that in a class of cases where the maximum amount for which he can sue and prevent removal to the United States district court is $3,000, largely personal injury cases or cases against foreign corporations or where persons resident in different States are concerned, he is denied the opportunity of going in that court and must go into our common-pleas court and there submit to its jurisdiction of $3,000. So that, as I have said, it denies a man a right which he should have under the Constitution. It has been said here by Mr. MADDEN, the gentleman from Illinois—who, by the way, refers to this case as having formerly been up before the House, and it was up, as a matter of fact, by unanimous consent, and was objected to by the gentleman from Illinois and went out on his objection; and I might add that in the Sixty-first Congress a similar bill was introduced here by my predecessor, which passed this House, and provided for the establishing of a court at Steubenville, and I am not quite sure but what the gentleman on that side was one of the men who voted for it—now, the letter which he has read from Judge Sater states that in seven years on the bench there have been 11 cases in that court. I wanted to say here that I have not the biggest practice in eastern Ohio, but I have had in that court myself, evidently, 4 of those cases within that time from my home town of Martins Ferry and 2 bankruptcy proceedings. I have here a letter which I received from the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Steubenville, Ohio, and he investigated the court docket for civil cases alone there, in answer to my letter to him after I was informed that this letter had been entered on record, and he says—this is under date of April 24, 1914:

MY DEAR MR. FRANCIS: I beg to advise that I have made a search of the records of the United States court at Columbus, Ohio, for the southern district of Ohio, eastern division, and I find that since January, 1911, there has been filed in this court a total of 22 cases. Of this number 18 were from Jefferson County and 4 from Belmont County.

Now, here from two counties alone there are 22 civil cases, to say nothing about the criminal business and to say nothing of the cases taken there under the insolvency law, business which ought to be done there at home in the city of Steubenville. As has been said on account of the topography of that country and on account of the railroads leading to Steubenville it makes it a most desirable point at which a sitting of the court ought to be held. This bill entails no new expense upon the Government, no additional expense for judges, no additional expense for rooms or anything of the kind, but it does entail a greater inconvenience to a judge to travel to and from there and to sit at that court, and I want to say, and give it as my opinion, that the most likely reason which prompted Judge Sater's letter is that he does not like to move out of his quarters at Columbus to come all the way to Steubenville to hold court.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield there for just one question?

Mr. FRANCIS. I will.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the distance from Steubenville to Columbus?

Mr. FRANCIS. The distance is 150 miles.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit one more question, and that is, What is the population of Steubenville? I have been there and know the town very well, but I do not know in reference to the population.

Mr. FRANCIS. In 1900 it was nearly 23,000, and since that time with the building of the La Belle Iron Works and the Pope Tin Works it is estimated they have about 32,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. I know it is a very enterprising city, because I have been there frequently in times gone by.

Mr. FRANCIS. And just below the city of Steubenville is another large city of probably between 3,000 and 5,000, Mingo Junction, in which is located the great Carnegie mill. North of it at Toronto are the great clay works, a town of between 3,000 and 5,000 people. My home town of Martins Ferry, together with Bridgeport and Bellaire, which are within 20 miles of Steubenville, represent a population of 35,000 people, and as I have said this court sitting there would be at a place where it would accommodate a population of over 200,000 people. I think this bill is a very deserving measure, and I hope that it may pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there are now two districts in Ohio, the northern and the southern. The northern district has two divisions, the western and the eastern. They have court held at two or three places in one division; I believe at Toledo in the western division. In the southern division there is a western division and an eastern division. The western includes Cincinnati, where court is held. I do not know whether court is still held at Dayton, Ohio, in the western division, or not, and I will ask the gentleman from Ohio whether it is.

Mr. GARD. It is.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is one good feature about this bill, because this bill would abolish the court at Dayton. That is an inadvertency not known to the Judiciary Committee probably, but that would be the case. I suppose the Dayton court was probably created after the passage of the original act, and probably was an amendment to it.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I will state to the gentleman it is not the intention of the committee to abolish the court at Dayton. Whether the gentleman is correct in his statement I do not know. I will investigate the question and ascertain whether or not the criticism is correct.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the committee, without having called to its attention the fact that the law had been amended, I presume, to hold court at Dayton, provided in this bill where court shall be held in the western division in the southern district of Ohio, and they only provided for court being held at Cincinnati. So that would abolish the court at Dayton. That is the only good feature of the bill.

The report on this bill is very illuminating. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] a few moments ago called the attention of the House to a statement that gentlemen appeared before the Judiciary Committee and refuted the contentions of the district judge, which my colleague read; but the committee had reported this bill long before the district judge had considered it at all, though I take it it would have been somewhat difficult to have refuted the contentions of the judge months before the judge had any contentions to make.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. If the gentleman will yield, I wish to say that I did not intend to make that statement. They gave a statement of facts which was contrary to those contained in the letter.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what state of facts was presented to the committee, but the report of the committee, referring, I suppose, to all the facts presented by the committee, is:

> The committee report the same back with the recommendation that it be amended as follows, and that, as amended, the bill do pass.

That is all the information that is contained in the report, and I question very much whether the committee had any hearings upon the bill, unless the gentleman says they did have hearings. Of course I would not question the statement made by the gentleman. It has been quite customary when any Member of Congress asked for the holding of a court in a new place to authorize it. A good many Members of Congress are lawyers, and the rest of the Members are somewhat disposed to make it a little easier for a lawyer who is a Member of the House to go into court a little nearer home—a little more convenient for the lawyer—and the expense to the Government does not make much difference. That is paid out of the Federal Treasury, while the expense to the lawyer is paid out of his own pocket. Now, my friend from Arkansas says it was not the design to accomplish the meritorious feature of the bill—to abolish the holding of court at Dayton.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Will the gentleman permit me right there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. In looking that up, I find in the bill the language that occurs in the original statute in a proviso on line 4, page 4, that—

> Provided further, That the terms of the district court for the southern district shall be held at Dayton on the first Mondays in May and November.

That is the language of the original statute.

Mr. MANN. I was incorrect. That good feature which I thought was in the bill is not in the bill. Let us see if the gentleman can explain this, then: It is now provided that there be a session of court at Cincinnati on the first Tuesday in October. This bill provides that there shall be a session at Steubenville on the first Tuesday in October. Oh, I suppose judges can be omnipresent, though it is sometimes difficult.

However, I arose mainly to reiterate some of the things that were called to the attention of the House by my colleague [Mr. MADDEN]. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS], the author of the bill, did what the committee did not do apparently, attempted to obtain some information about the bill and wrote to the clerk of the court and the judge of the court as to what, in their judgment, were the merits of the bill. Judge Sater in a letter to Mr. FRANCIS, which was inserted in the RECORD by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] in April last when the bill was on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, said:

> It is the judge's duty to perform his allotted task, and if additional court centers are created I shall endeavor to meet requirements imposed. Your letters call for an expression of my views, and I shall therefore give them after having, with the aid of the clerk, gathered the information sought by you.

And I presume he was the only person who endeavored to gather the information. It makes no difference to the judge particularly, but he was asked to furnish information to the gentleman from Ohio for the benefit of Congress. And after other matter—I shall not quote the letter in full, as it is too long—he says:

> The above indicates the small amount of business coming to the Federal court from the four mentioned counties, and that if a court were established at Steubenville it would involve great expense to the Government and little benefit to litigants or others concerned.

I know it is almost idle to talk economy in this House, except for the mere purpose of talking, but here is the deliberate expression of the judge after giving facts which the committee never obtained, even if it sought them, that this would involve great expense to the Government and little benefit to litigants. The judge goes on:

> The mere opening of a term of court also involves quite an expenditure. Almost all of those connected with the court are allowed, and properly so, their traveling expenses and some of them a per diem for living expenses.

The judge that goes to this court is allowed his traveling expenses—$10 per day—in addition to his salary, while he is holding court at this new place.

Then the judge recites some of the history. We provided for a court at Dayton, each one of these requests for the convenience probably of some Member of Congress. We had no such information presented to the House at that time as we have now in reference to that court. Here is what the judge says about holding the court at Dayton—the judge who holds the court:

> The largest number of cases ever tried at Dayton at one term was three. There were but four cases on the docket at that term. There have been terms at which there were none for trial. On one occasion I did all the business that was offered or could be done within 20 minutes, adjourned the term of court, and took the next train home. As a jury had been brought in and was entitled to its mileage and per diem, the court officers to their costs, and the Government employees to their mileage and maintenance, those 20 minutes were quite expensive.

And he goes on to say, in effect, that there is as much or more business to be done at Dayton than there is or would be at Steubenville. He disposed of the business in 20 minutes at Dayton on one occasion, at a considerable expense to the Government; the highest number of cases ever tried at a session of court at Dayton was three. Now, what is the object or the necessity of creating the expense of holding court at Steubenville because four counties find it might be a little more convenient? Why, it would be more convenient to the lawyers of the litigants if you would have the court travel around and go to the witnesses instead of bringing the witnesses to the court, but it would also be a great deal more expensive.

Mr. FRANCIS. Will the gentleman indulge a question?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly; or a statement, if the gentleman wishes to make one.

Mr. FRANCIS. Our appellate court in Ohio has seven judges, who go to every county in the State and hold court.

Mr MANN. Is that the Supreme Court of Ohio?

Mr. FRANCIS. That is the appellate court of Ohio, next to the supreme court, and they do it for the convenience of the litigants.

Mr. MANN. I never heard that court quoted, or its opinions, and I presume that is the reason I did not know. The opinions of the court are not quoted. Even the churches have gotten over the idea of keeping a minister traveling all the time on the theory that he would know more by traveling.

This is the judge's deliberate opinion, expressed at the request of the gentleman:

> I am of the opinion that the business in the four counties named in your letter, to wit, Jefferson, Belmont, Monroe, and Harrison, is insufficient to warrant the establishment of a court at Steubenville, and that the locating of a court there will be a costly and disappointing experiment.

This letter of the judge was written after the Committee on the Judiciary had reported the bill. That committee did not have the benefit of the information or the opinion of that judge. The judge says further:

> If a court be established, there should be no October term.

The bill provides for an October term on the first Tuesday of October both at Cincinnati and at Steubenville in the same district. Of course that will be a matter of great convenience to the active lawyers and to the judge who has to try the cases.

If we are going to have any economy it can not come in saving hundreds of millions of dollars at one clip. The only way you can have any economy is by practicing the economy in the particular case which arises. We shall keep after the extravagance of the Democratic Congress. We will ring it on every stump and every public place in the United States. There has been no occasion yet, or there has been very seldom, when there has been any desire, as expressed in their acts, for the Democratic Congress to be economical. I sympathize greatly with some of the Members on the Democratic side who do believe in carefully considering the needs before they vote for a proposition. But the great majority on that side of the House vote the way a committee has recommended, and outside of the Committee on Appropriations there has been no indication of a committee being in favor of practicing any economy.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WEBB. This identical bill, as I understand, was introduced by a Republican Member of Congress and passed by the House.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. WEBB. So far as economy is concerned, the Committee on the Judiciary does not see how it will be uneconomical or expensive to carry justice to the people's doors. We have held down as much as possible propositions for the creation of new judges. I have always opposed them here. But we have always favored the policy of getting the court as near as possible to the people, because we think that is a fundamental policy for the House and for the people to rely upon.

Mr. MANN. The only justification that the gentleman offers is that a Republican House passed a bill identical with this on a former occasion.

Mr. MADDEN. No; that a Republican Member introduced the bill originally.

Mr. MANN. I grant that that may be a powerful argument. But if on this side of the House we are willing to see a new light and not stand by what we did before, why should you be bound by it? Why should you feel that you should support a measure simply because it was good enough to have received Republican support in a prior Congress?

Every time a proposition is presented here some gentleman on the Democratic side of the House says, "Why, here is something you did or did not do. Why should you criticize us if we are not better?"

Mr. WEBB. I assure my friend that I am not using such an argument as that.

Mr. MANN. That is just the argument that the gentleman made.

Mr. WEBB. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. That is the argument that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] made. With what other object was your suggestion made?

Mr. WEBB. I was showing to the Member now speaking that a Republican Member of Congress from the identical district in which this court is sought to be established thought it ought to be established.

Mr. MANN. That was in a former Congress; or was it in the next Congress that the gentleman is referring to—the Sixty-fourth Congress? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEBB. No; in a former Congress.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was perhaps referring to the future, to the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Mr. WEBB. I was trying to convey the idea to the mind of the gentleman from Illinois that a Republican from out there thought a new place for holding court ought to be created, and a Democratic Member thought the same thing. One reason for prejudice—I do not know whether such a prejudice exists in the gentleman's district or not—against the Federal courts—it certainly exists in some States—is that to the average person it is so far away that it seems a foreign court to which he must go either as witness or litigant. I am in favor of establishing additional places for holding courts and in favor of bringing them as nearly as possible to the litigants, witnesses, and jurors, and to the people of the States, even though it may be at a slight inconvenience to the judges. I think Steubenville ought to have a court.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks that just now, because his committee reported the bill without information.

Mr. WEBB. No. The fact that Dayton has not enough cases for trial to warrant the maintenance of a court there is no reason why a court should not be established at Steubenville. I can see how a judge might prefer to sit in his court in comfortable and magnificent quarters at Cincinnati and draw all the Dayton business into his own court, and the consequence is that when he goes down to Dayton there may be only 20 minutes' work, because all the rest of the work has been done in Cincinnati. I think there should be divisions, and all courts should be held in the division and cases arising in the division tried in the court for such division, and a stop should be put to this practice of judges and lawyers drawing all witnesses and cases to one big city, instead of the judges and lawyers going to the courts in the vicinity of where the cases arise.

Mr. MANN. My friend from North Carolina is one of the gentlemen in the House for whom I have a great regard. He is a very young man to be chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I think he is doing able work as chairman of that committee. But the argument that he has just made about the judges sitting in their palaces and wishing to draw all public business to themselves is beneath his reputation and beneath his ability. There is nothing in all that. That is all rot. Judges are willing to perform their duties.

The business of the Steubenville court is not so hard to ascertain. There is practically no Federal business in the four counties which this bill is designed to be of service to. There has not been. If the purpose of the bill is to encourage the creation of more Federal business, then I am that much more against it. I think we have too many cases now in the Federal courts. I think we ought to restrict the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, instead of increasing it. [Applause.] But while you applaud the proposition you are constantly adding to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and passing acts which are designed to increase the litigation in those courts. There is no occasion for this court being held at Steubenville. It is a useless, unwise, extravagant expenditure of money, and it will be of no benefit to the litigants. It may be a trifle more convenient for some of the local lawyers, who do not wish to be put to any expense or time in traveling to a near-by place.

I hope the bill will be defeated.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. If there is so little business to be transacted at Dayton, is it not the gentleman's opinion that the court there ought to be abolished?

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be abolished.

Mr. FOSTER. I think if this bill passes it ought to be so amended.

Mr. MANN. If somebody else does not offer it, I expect to offer an amendment to strike out the Dayton court.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad the gentleman intends to do it. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, something having crept into this debate outside of the matter germane to it, which is the holding of court in Steubenville, I beg to inform the Members of the committee somewhat with respect to the situation in Dayton, Ohio.

The holding of the Federal court in Dayton, Ohio, was arranged for by the Hon. Robert M. Nevin, a Republican Representative from the third congressional district of Ohio, an able lawyer and a brilliant Representative in Congress, who had three terms of service in this body.

Dayton is a city of about 150,000 population, rapidly growing, a city which is seeking to better itself upon its own merits and by its own ability, after the disastrous flood of March, 1913. Under previous legislation a magnificent Federal building for the housing of the post office and the Federal court has just been practically completed. In this building the Federal court is to be held, under a bill passed by Congress and introduced in this House by Mr. Nevin, of my district.

Something has been said about a letter written by Judge Sater, referring to the limited number of cases. I desire to inform this committee about one case which was tried in the city of Cincinnati, the regular sitting place of Judge Hollister, a member of the bench for the southern district of Ohio. That case was tried in Cincinnati over the express objection of the parties defendant. I refer to the case of the United States against the National Cash Register Co., of Dayton. This company, a native of the county of Montgomery and the city of Dayton, was compelled to defend itself in a court 70 miles distant from its place of residence, because the judge decided that he wanted to hold the court in that particular case in the city of Cincinnati and not in the city of Dayton. That one case required the time of the United States court in the city of Cincinnati for nearly four months before it was finally concluded.

And that case is not the only one. I do not profess to be advised particularly of the exact number of cases filed there, but there has come to be in the past a recognition of the fact that it is necessary to try cases where the sitting judges are located, for instance, in Columbus, where Judge Sater lives, and in Cincinnati, where Judge Hollister lives; but the idea of this bill and the idea of all laws pertaining to Federal courts should be, in my opinion, that the places of hearing should be brought reasonably near to the people. Now, I am making no complaint. This is simply a matter of comparison. I call the attention of the members of this committee to the enormous expense borne by the National Cash Register Co. in defending themselves in a court 70 miles away from their home, when the case would naturally have been tried in their home city. They were compelled to take their entire office force and all of their books and files, and they were practically compelled to suspend their office operations until this case could be concluded in the United States court at Cincinnati.

Dayton is a city of 150,000 people, struggling against a great natural calamity, and now by their own splendid efforts they are on their feet again. Dayton is in the center of the great Miami Valley, an agricultural garden spot in the United States. It is within 25 miles of Springfield, within a few miles of Xenia and Urbana, near Hamilton and Middletown, and within a few miles of the cities of Troy and Piqua, which are all connected with Dayton by trolley lines. Dayton is the natural place where the great bulk and body of the Federal business in the south interior of the State of Ohio should naturally be transacted. There is no reason why more cases are not heard there save the desire of the judges to remain in the immediate county of their residence. I say this in no offensive sense.

The criticism most frequently made against the administration of justice in the Federal courts is that the expense precludes a hearing and that it is sometimes a denial of justice. We are all familiar with the rule which requires the deposit of a sum of money in the court where the case is to be heard to insure the payment of witness fees. It seems to me it is not reasonable to require cases to go to a far-distant court, where men are compelled to pay the mileage of witnesses, bringing them from 75 to 100 miles, when their testimony might be taken in a court held in or near their home city. Surely that is not within the province of justice as it should be administered among men. That is the Dayton situation. Of course it is a matter extraneous to the one under consideration since it has been established and is working out itself in a proper manner. The court already established in Dayton is just beginning to see its usefulness. As Judge Sater has said in his letter, which was read by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MADDEN, and referred to by the other gentleman from Illinois, the court at Dayton is situated right in the center of a region which will draw to it increased business. While possibly there may not have been many cases, the cases which are there are those of persons living directly in the city of Dayton. Outside, as I have said, there is a territory of at least 300,000 people within the radius of 25 miles where the Federal court should be held.

Now, the Federal court is held there, as I said in response to a question asked me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and it has been held there and is intended to be held there again. I may say that the situation immediately in Dayton, the reason given by the judges of United States courts heretofore for not trying Dayton cases in Dayton, was the fact that they had no proper court room—that no proper facilities were at hand. The court rooms in the courthouse have been occupied by the county courts and the appellate court. I call attention to the fact that a new Federal building has been provided, and that it contains a splendid court room and all other rooms necessary for court, officers, litigants, and witnesses. The other day I received a letter from Judge Hollister, of the district court at Cincinnati, concerning the arrangement and decoration of this new court room at Dayton, and there is now absolutely no reason why cases arising in or near Dayton may not most properly and conveniently be heard there. This is a matter of which I would be pleased to answer directly any question from any gentleman of the committee. I have brought it to your attention so that you may be fully advised about it. I do not want any amendment which will take Dayton out of the present plan of being a place where a Federal court shall be held. There is nothing to be gained by it; everything which ought to be done has been done, and to deprive the city of Dayton at this time of a Federal court, when it has just begun to be able to show the beneficial effect of holding courts there, is not, in my judgment, wise. I trust that when consideration is given to this Steubenville matter that there will be nothing done detrimental to Dayton. I have simply desired to inform you of what the Dayton situation is, and I sincerely trust that no change be made there, but, on the contrary, that it be permitted to develop as the proper place for the hearing and trial of Federal cases in that populous territory.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I had expected that the chairman of the committee would answer the charge made by the minority leader from Illinois. I believe that on the floor and in the Democratic platform we have charged the party we succeeded—the Republican—with extravagance in the management of affairs. After listening to the gentleman from Illinois, especially in this matter, I think that we are extravagant and not they. If I understand the chairman of the committee correctly, he justifies this act by what some Republican Members from Ohio have done in some other Congress. That is a strange thing to me—strange for a great Democrat and a great lawyer to do—to justify wrongdoing by wrong some other men have done.

Is it not strange that this great army of lawyers, presumably rising to address the Chair, should not give us the information about the volume of business done in that court? Not a word. I submit in all fairness the inquiry, How are we going to vote intelligently? The fact is that the amount of business done in all the counties in that district is not of much moment. That is the fact if the report of the Attorney General is to be believed. From his report it appears that there was commenced during the year a total number of 95 cases; that there were terminated during the year 74 cases—that is, in the civil cases where the United States was a party. The total of criminal cases terminated during the year was 81; commenced during the year, 95. The total amount of money involved in these cases was less than $10,000—that is to say, the judgments amounted to that.

There is only a small amount of business there; and still Members here wish to divide the business and create more expense, whereas the court at the present time does not have much business. Out of all the criminal cases there were only three trials by jury during the year. Still we want to divide it up and create a term of court in some other place in the State, which means a new public building and a whole retinue of officials attached to the court. Think of it, only three trials by jury. How can we charge the Republicans with extravagance and waste of the public money; they could not get this bill through; we are going to get it through.

Mr. Chairman, the committe does not treat its associates fairly when they withhold this information. Being a Democrat and remembering the Democratic articles of faith as to economy in public expense, so that labor may be lightly burdened. I am going to vote against the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, in line 17, page 3, strike out the word "October" and insert the word "September."

Page 33, line 17, strike out the word "October" and insert the word "September."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. WEBB. Is that a preferential motion? I want to move that the committee rise.

Mr. MANN. It is a preferential motion; the gentleman can not make his motion as long as any amendment is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 1 and 2, strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 14, noes 19.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 4, by striking out all after the word "building," in line 4, striking out the provision for a court at Dayton.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 4, after the word "building," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEBB) there were—ayes 13, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5849) to amend section 100 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. [After a pause.] The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 45, noes 21.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 199, nays 96, answered "present" 2, not voting 131, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BRUMBAUGH was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of illness in a hospital.

CERTIFICATION TO THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to call up for consideration the bill S. 94, on the House Calendar, No. 217.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 94) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 237 of chapter 10 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"It shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court, although the decision in such case may have been in favor of the validity of the treaty or statute or authority exercised under the United States or may have been against the validity of the State statute or authority claimed to be repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, or in favor of the title, right, privilege, or immunity claimed under the Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority of the United States."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, in simple words, this bill gives the right to ask for a writ of certiorari whenever the supreme court of a State declares a State law invalid by reason of its infringement upon any Federal right arising under the Federal Constitution, treaty, or Federal law. At present if a supreme court of a State decides a law to be not in contravention of the Federal Constitution or a Federal right, then an appeal may be had by writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States. But the converse of that proposition is not true—that is, if the supreme court of a State declares that a State law violates a Federal right then there is no appeal. That has been the condition in the United States for 100 years.

As a matter of historical interest we are told that the reason for the one-sided right of review is that in the early days of the Federal Government the only apprehension was that the State courts might encroach upon the powers granted to the Federal Government, and as a safeguard against this apprehended danger the present law was passed.

This apprehension no longer exists. With its passing has gone the reason for the one-sided review. But as long as the statute lives it serves to grant a right to one party in the suit, which right is denied to the other. Viewed from the standpoint of the litigant, who is the party to be served in the administration of civil law, it is difficult to see why, if it is necessary or desirable to have the Supreme Court of this Government pass upon the judgment of the court of a State in construing the fundamental or statutory laws of the Federal Government, when the judgment of the State court does not uphold the Federal right claimed, the same tribunal should not review the judgment of the same State court, when in the exercise of the same judgment they upheld the Federal right claimed.

In the last few years a widespread demand has gone up for a right to appeal in a case such as provided for in this bill. To give you a concrete case, lawyers from New York and over the country are familiar with the case of Ives against the Buffalo Railroad Co., involving the construction of the workmen's compensation act, or the labor law. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of New York, and that court declared the act of the Legislature of New York invalid because it offended against the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. There was no right to appeal from that decision, whereas if the court had held that the law was constitutional the railroad could have appealed. In other words, it gave the railroad in that case two bites at a cherry, while the last resort was the State court, when a State statute had been declared unconstitutional.

Since the Supreme Court of the United States is the final tribunal which should pass upon the meaning of the Constitution, treaties, and statutes of the United States, we think this power to review the judgment of the State court should be extended to it where either side felt that substantial justice had not been done it by the construction of the State court, whether it technically was in favor of or against the validity of the Federal right claimed, and the Supreme Court is of the opinion that it is a case of sufficient importance to justify their review.

There is no reason, so far as the Judiciary Committee can see, why the same right should not be given both sides.

This would make for the uniformity of the Federal laws in their practical application to the numerous questions that would arise in the several States. Under existing laws the Federal Constitution may mean one thing in one State and the reverse in another.

For instance, in New Jersey a similar workmen's compensation act was held constitutional. In New York it was held unconstitutional. If the case had been carried to the Supreme Court of the United States from New Jersey and it had declared the law of New Jersey constitutional, then we would have the Supreme Court of New York declaring the identical law unconstitutional, whereas the Supreme Court of the United States had declared the same law in New Jersey was constitutional. This idea has been discussed by the American Bar Association, lawyers, and publicists for quite a while, and it passed the House of Representatives a year ago. It has passed the Senate, and we are now considering a Senate bill, and if the House will indulge me I want to read an extract from a letter which I received a few days ago from Mr. Wheeler, a distinguished lawyer of New York, a public-spirited man, and a distinguished member of the legislative committee of the American Bar Association. He said:

We also hope the Judiciary Committee of the House will report favorably Senate bill 94, giving authority to the Supreme Court to grant a certiorari in cases where the decision in the State court is averse to the constitutionality of a State statute.

Since I saw you I have seen the report of the Industrial Relations Commission. The report deals with the subject of industrial unrest, and mentions as one of its causes a belief on the part of many that "There is one law for the rich, another for the poor." The commission report that both employers and employees are of opinion that in many cases before the courts justice is not done. It will certainly be a great advance if the present Congress should pass the two bills referred to, which are really fundamental.

Take, for example, the Ives case, in which the Court of Appeals of New York decided against the validity of the workmen's compensation act. It was felt as a great grievance by the working men that they had no right to ask to have the decision reviewed by the Supreme Court, although if the decision had been the other way the employer would have had the right to such review.

Mr. Speaker, for the reason given in the report and for the reason that I have assigned I hope the vote on the bill will be unanimous. I can see no reason why we should not give the right of appeal to both parties in the case where a Federal question is involved.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, naturally very much, indeed, nearly all, of the legislation being passed and to be passed in this country to make those adjustments of the rights of individuals necessary for the changing conditions of society are acts of legislation passed by State legislatures. In each such case the unwilling party may challenge the power of the legislature to pass such legislation, in the name of the Federal Constitution. When he makes that challenge, if the State court in which it is made should not agree with him, he can have resort to the Feredal courts, and to the Supreme Court itself. But if the decision of the State authority should be negative, should sustain his challenge and take his view of the Federal principle, then the State authorities themselves can not appeal to the Supreme Court to get its view of what the Federal principle really is.

Now, the effect of that discrimination between the parties has not only been to strike down State sovereignty in a great many instances, but to destroy some of the wisest State legislation enacted in this country on those difficult relations of labor and capital. I think now, sir, of two instances that occurred in my own State, even with courts that are far, far above any suspicion. In one of them State legislation designed to put an end to the so-called "pluck-me" store was stricken down in our courts on the strength of the old precedents in other States, on the theory that such legislation was in conflict with the rights vouchsafed the citizen by the Federal law. In another case laws providing for semimonthly pay days were stricken down on the same argument, and, I believe, by judges who disliked the consequence of their own reasoning, but who did it on the basis of misoneistic decisions, if I may use that phrase, made a generation ago. Now, in both of those cases no appeal could be taken. Now, as a matter of circumstance, if not as a matter of principle, the workmen of that State were denied the right to go to the higher courts, when their antagonists could go to those courts ad libitum.

I think the history of the legislation explains itself and justifies the bill, which has been favorably reported. It was naturally assumed in the early days of the Republic, when there was an intense devotion to local authority and local power and considerable distrust of Federal power, that State courts if they committed any error would commit it under the impulse of a bias in favor of State legislation, and that there was no practical danger, therefore, that the State courts would decide against valid State legislation; in short, that the benefit of the doubt would be given to their own legislatures and not to some abstract contentions made under Federal principles. But we have found, thanks to the growing sense of solidarity in our country, thanks to the patriotism that gives us but one flag, that the State courts are quite as anxious to sustain Federal principles, where they can be invoked, as they were then to sustain the sovereignty of the local power. And the result has been that the foresight of the fathers failed with respect to this discrimination; and the reason for it having passed away, I think this House, following the example set by the Senate, should eliminate that discrimination. [Applause.]

It was my privilege to offer and have adopted by the House at the last session an identical amendment to the judicial revision bill now before the Senate, and it is a pleasure to support it this afternoon.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to indicate in the Constitution of the United States in the provision that relates to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court that there should be granted to one side rather than to another the right of appeal. The provision of the Federal Constitution is that—

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority—

And so forth. I think it would be utterly impossible to find anyone who would advocate the passage of the law that for years has been upon our statute books which gave specifically the right, not of an appeal to both parties or to either party, but only to one. I think it would perhaps be a surprise to those who are not familiar with the statute to find that under this general power which certainly was intended to be available to any party to a suit, it should be deliberately written in the statute that it should be only available to one side. The language of the act which has been continued for these years to the disgrace of our jurisprudence upon the statute books is that—

> A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under, any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States; and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity especially set up or claimed, by either party, under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States. The Supreme Court may reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such State court, and may, at their discretion, award execution or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ.

Specifically in the further provision of the statute is where the right of an appeal or rehearing in the Supreme Court of business regarding the Constitution and treaties and laws of the United States is only given to one party as the case may be. It is so manifestly unjust that I can not think anyone now, with our present sense of fairness, at least, in jurisprudence would support and sustain it. Therefore for that reason we ought now to change it. We ought to have changed it years ago. The American Bar Association has, I believe, for 20 years advocated it. In fact, this bill is the provision of the American Bar Association, and it has been supported and sustained and hardly ever challenged by nearly all of the leading jurists and lawyers of the United States.

Further than that, it has gone out to the people so that they have understood finally that they were being in certain cases deprived of their constitutional rights; and now the sentiment is very general, wherever the question has been mooted at all, in favor of the adoption of this great reform in our jurisprudence.

I join with the chairman of the committee in the hope that the vote on this bill may be unanimous in its favor.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, allow me to say just one word in reference to this bill. It seems to me that it ought to pass. I think the law as it now stands works an injustice in many instances, and I think it works an injustice largely to the smaller man and to the general public.

The cases that are taken to the courts for the purpose of having a statute declared unconstitutional are, I believe, in the great majority of cases, taken there by the large corporate interests. It is those interests that as a rule try to have the laws set aside that have been passed for their control. If they succeed in having those laws set aside in a State court, that ends it under the law as it now stands. The other side can not appeal. If they fail to have the statute declared void in a State court, they can appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States and have another chance there to effect their purpose.

It seems to me that we ought not to leave a statute like that in force any longer. We ought to allow equal treatment to all parties and not favor these large interests. Every lawyer is familiar with the class of cases and the class of litigants that appeal to our courts to set aside the will of the people as expressed by our State legislatures. There is no good reason why those who seek to thwart the will of the people should have any advantage, such as that given by the present law, over those who seek to sustain the law and the legislative will.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] is recognized.

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the bill, one reason being that I hope it will be the final enactment of legislation on the subject. It is so much better than the bill introduced by my friend from Minnesota and some other bills on the subject that I would be glad to vote for this bill and get the matter out of the way.

For more than a hundred years the law on the subject has been practically what it is now with reference to these appeals. There is a very good reason for it. No one can tell how many cases will be brought under this provision of law in the Supreme Court, or how many cases will be brought in the lower courts with the design of reaching the Supreme Court. If Congress had dreamed, when the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted, that it would be used in the way that it has been used to get cases into the Supreme Court of the United States, it undoubtedly never would have been adopted in the form that it was. No one had a suspicion that it was as broad as it is.

I am not sure whether under this provision every municipal ordinance that may be passed by Podunk or some other place will not eventually reach a claim before the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari.

I have noticed a natural tendency since I have been a Member of the House to keep on increasing the work of the Supreme Court of the United States. The amount of work that any man can do is limited. The amount of work that any court can do is limited, where the cases are to be considered by all the judges in the court; and if we keep on piling on to the Supreme Court of the United States additional cases, without taking away any of the cases which now go there, in the end we will have destroyed largely the benefit of the Supreme Court, either by delaying the determination of cases or by requiring such hasty determination that the opinions will not be very valuable. If the Committee on the Judiciary succeeds in passing this bill, I hope it will bring before the House some bill which contains a limit on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States in cases of appeal.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that we are going to do that in the very next bill we call up.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, that is going to limit it where it has no jurisdiction. That is the fact of the matter. But the amount involved in cases going to the Supreme Court ought to be increased, although, of course, you will be told by the demagogues at once that you are only providing a court for the rich man and not for the poor man. When we created the circuit court of appeals in order to help the Supreme Court the Supreme Court gradually overtook its business from year to year for a series of years, until it began to be able to see daylight ahead; but now the work of the Supreme Court is again getting behind, because we keep piling up new business on that court, and I venture to say that the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States are the hardest working judges in the world.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report of an arbitration opinion by Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER, of Pittsburgh, between the employees and employers of the street car system there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER in rendering this opinion has served the cause of the wageworkers in Pittsburgh and throughout the country, which should and will be highly appreciated by the working masses and all who are in sympathy with the cause of humanity. It is indeed regrettable that the majority of the arbitration board were not capable of exercising broad-minded, equitable, and humane judgment, as did the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my friend STEPHEN G. PORTER.

The opinion is as follows:

DISSENTING OPINION OF HON. STEPHEN G. PORTER, MEMBER OF CONGRESS, TWENTY-NINTH DISTRICT PENNSYLVANIA, IN THE MATTER OF THE ARBITRATION OF THE WAGE DISPUTE BETWEEN THE PITTSBURGH RAILWAYS CO. AND ITS MOTORMEN AND CONDUCTORS.

On May 1, 1914, the two-year wage agreement between the motormen and conductors of the Pittsburgh Railways Co., their employer, expired. Representatives of both sides held a number of meetings in an effort to agree upon a new scale of wages, but after prolonged negotiations they were unable to reach an agreement.

The motormen and conductors of this company, 3,000 and upward in number, belong to the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of America. This organization differs from the usual labor organization in that it does not insist upon what is known in labor circles as the "closed shop," but relies entirely for its membership upon the benefits derived from its method of aggregate bargaining with the employer and the payment of insurance in case of sickness or death. It is the fundamental law of the organization that all disputes between the employers and employees must be settled by the peaceful method of arbitration unless the employers absolutely refuse to do so. The testimony disclosed that a large majority of the motormen and conductors of the United States belong to this organization, and that during the last few years practically all their disputes as to wages and labor conditions have been settled by this method, notable cases being the recent Boston and Chicago arbitrations.

An adequate street car service in a city like Pittsburgh in this age of transportation is a matter of tremendous importance to every citizen, and this organization undoubtedly recognizes by the adoption and enforcement of arbitration the irreparable injury done every citizen by a strike of the street car employees and that the loss by such action is greater to the helpless citizens than it is to the parties to the controversy. This "cool-headed" instead of "broken-headed" method of settling labor disputes and thus protecting the innocent public entitles, in my judgment, the members of this organization to the highest commendation and makes it the positive duty of this board of arbitrators to give their claims the tenderest care and most careful consideration.

I have always believed that arbitration of labor disputes resulted in more substantial justice to both sides than any other method of settlement which the genius of man has so far devised, and when I was requested by the officials of these motormen and conductors to represent them upon this board of arbitration I readily consented to do so, believing that I would be doing a public service not only to the employees of the company but to the citizens of Pittsburgh, all of whom have a vital interest in the peaceful settlement of this wage scale.

Before the discovery of steam and electric power labor disputes were unknown. The relations between the employer and employee were simple. The employee was in daily contact with his employer, and the little differences which arose from time to time were promptly adjusted. The use of these two great forces, coupled with the inventive age which they developed, has resulted in combinations of capital and the unionizing of the workmen. The latter was the natural result of the former. Capital recognizes the value and efficiency of combination; labor recognizes the value and efficiency of aggregate bargaining with the employer. In fact, during the last half century steam power, electric power, and inventions have revolutionized our entire industrial situation to such an extent as to create many new and important questions, of which the most important is a proper and equitable adjustment of the relations between employer and employee.

After my acceptance it became my duty to agree with J. C. Gray, Esq., who represented the Pittsburgh Railways Co. on the board, upon a third person as umpire. We early found the selection of such a man to be a very difficult matter. We considered upward of a hundred men. I do not believe that either of us discarded any man because we felt that he lacked intellectual honesty, but entirely because of his point of view upon industrial questions. My difficulties in the matter were materially increased by the fact that the financial ramifications of the Pittsburgh Railways Co. are like an endless chain and wield an unseen influence over the minds of many of Pittsburgh's best-known citizens. We finally agreed upon S. Leslie Mestrezat, justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, who was unable to serve, and subsequently upon the Hon. Joseph Buffington, of the United States Court of Appeals, and immediately proceeded to take testimony.

The entire board agreed that technical rules of evidence were to be ignored, and that all testimony tending to throw any light upon the matter in dispute was to be admitted. The testimony, as a result, took a very large range and many days to hear it. The hearings were closed on the 20th day of July and contained upward of fifteen hundred pages. On the 28th day of July the oral arguments of counsel for both sides were heard and printed briefs submitted.

Immediately thereafter the board reconvened, had a number of daily conferences, and after protracted discussions it became evident to the umpire, the Hon. Joseph Buffington, that Mr. Gray, representing the company, and myself, representing the employees, were unable to agree upon an award; and the umpire assmued the burden of deciding the many weighty questions involved in this dispute. His report is now before me. I have read it with care, and regret to state that the conclusions reached by him are so clearly at variance with my ideas of what they ought to be that I feel it my duty to file this dissenting opinion.

The wage scale which expired on May 1, 1914, was adopted in 1912, and is as follows:

	Per hour.
First 6 months	$0.23½
Second 6 months	.25
Second year	.26½
Third year	.28
Fourth year	.29
Fifth year and thereafter	.30

It is but fair to assume that this scale, being adopted by mutual agreement between the employees and the company, was reasonably satisfactory to both sides, and I believe that the principles so well stated in the brief of the counsel for the employees should guide us in the determination of this controversy: "That wages ought to be higher than those which have prevailed in the past if the work is now harder or more responsible, or if it requires more skill, or if it is shown that the wages in the past have been too low or beneath a living wage. The wages for any useful work on which a man is required to spend eight hours a day six days a week ought at the minimum to be sufficient to maintain a normal family (husband, wife, and three children under the earning wage) in health and reasonable comfort. We submit that the resources of this country and this district are amply sufficient to maintain such a standard, and that it is self-evident that the Nation can not be sound, healthy, and happy upon any other basis."

DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

It is necessary for a proper understanding of this matter to state the extraordinary nature and character of the labor which the employees are called upon to perform by the company.

In the selection of motormen and conductors the company exercises great care to secure men of clean habits and good health. They must be over 25 years of age and under 45, absolutely free from all evidence of dissipation of any kind. The company was requested to furnish a list of the rejected men for the period of the year before the hearings. It failed to do so, and I therefore assume, by reason of this failure, that many are rejected because they do not comply with the standard heretofore stated. The applicant for position files an application in which his family history is given, the names of all his previous employers, condition of his health, and the names and addresses of men whom he thinks are willing to recommend him as a sober and industrious man. He then receives a most rigid examination by the company's surgeon, and if he passes this, and if the company's investigation of him has been satisfactory, he is given employment. He is then sent to one of the barns and for four or five days rides on a car with an experienced motorman or conductor, and is instructed by him as to his duties. He is then allowed to occasionally operate the car or collect fares, and his care in the performance of these duties is reported to the company by the motorman or conductor by whom he is being instructed. If a conductor, he is then sent to the conductor instructor to receive further instructions as to the complicated system of transfers now in use by the company, the preparation of accident reports, and other matters connected with his employment. If he is a motorman, he is sent to the motorman instructor and thoroughly examined as to the workings of the car. He is then given a book containing 162 rules, every one of which he is required to know and obey. He is then placed to work as an extra and receives, while acting as such, compensation of about $1.40 per day. The period of this service ranges from three months to a year.

The modern electric car is a complicated piece of machinery, and inasmuch as there are several types of cars in use by the company, the men are required to be thoroughly familiar with the mechanism of each type.

"Rule 215. Test for trouble:

"(a) Power off on car, lamp circuit out—

"If the power is off on car and lights will not light, and it is known that the power is on the line, examine the trolley wire at trolley base; ground wires on motors; or if there is dirt on the rail, place a switch iron so as to make contact between truck and rail.

"(b) Power off on car, lamp circuit lit—

"Examine fuse, fuse leads, ground leads at motors, also motor leads. Examine the controller contacts. Try rear controller. Try overhead switch.

"(c) To cut a controller out—

"If it is necessary to cut a controller out because it is flashing, when the controller on the other end of the car is thrown on the trolley and ground wires must be removed and placed so that they will not come in contact with the frame of the controller or with each other.

"Trouble in motor—

"If one of the motors is seen to be disabled or in trouble, cut it out by pulling the proper plug in controller or cut-out box. Sometimes a motor lead may cause the trouble. A broken motor lead may be connected with fuse wire.

"Lamp circuit—

"The lamps may sometimes refuse to light. This will probably be found to be due to one of the following causes: A broken or burnt-out lamp; poor contact between one of the lamps and its socket; poor contact in the switch; a loose or broken wire. The remedies being as follows: Replace the defective lamp with a new one; try every lamp, pushing it more firmly into the socket. If the above fail to remedy the defect, it should be reported without delay.

"If car fails to move when you try the controller, see that the fuse is properly adjusted; if burnt out, replace with a new one."

"Rule 223. Operation of air brakes:

"When taking cars—

"The air reservoir is always empty and drain cock open when the car is in barn. Therefore motormen will, when taking car, observe the following instructions:

"(a) See that the reservoir bleeding valve is closed.

"(b) When not hauling trailers, see that the valves at the rear are closed.

"(c) When hauling trailers, see that the valves to trailers are open and that the air hose is coupled properly, being crossed between cars.

"Motormen must try brakes on emergency as well as service application before starting after receiving trailer. Conductor of each car must watch brakes and see that the shoes apply and release properly before giving starting signal.

"(d) Turn both pump switches in cabs to 'on' to start the pump and watch gauge closely.

"(e) After having followed the above instructions, should you find the red hand has passed the 75-pound mark, turn off the platform pump switch and report same to first inspector and also to barn foreman, who will inspect the car.

"(f) Before starting car see that air pressure is off brake cylinders by throwing handle to 'release' position; with valve handle in 'release' position, the black hand in gauge should sink to zero; with black hand at zero and valve handle in 'release' position, the car is ready to start. Always carry valve in 'release' position when not actually using brake.

"(g) When making an ordinary service stop throw valve handle to 'service-stop' position and back to 'lap' position, making one application of air. As the car slows down throw handle to 'release' position so that at the moment car stops the pressure (as shown by black hand) shall have fallen to about 10 pounds if car is on level. If on a hill, of course, the final amount of air necessary to stop the car may be greater. When a car is running at full speed, more pressure can be put on brake cylinder without skidding the wheels than at the moment of stopping.

"(h) Never throw handle to 'emergency' position except to avoid accident.

"Brakes sticking—

"If after a stop the black hand fails to sink to zero, then the air pressure is still on in the brake cylinder and the car will not start. To remedy this first throw handle to emergency position two or three times until motor compressor starts; second, if this fails to remedy the difficulty, then set hand brake, turn off compressor pump, then bleed the reservoir by letting the air exhaust through the reservoir bleeding cock. If you are hauling a trail car, examine the hose connection between the cars.

"After brakes release start the compressor pump again and do not start car until the gauge registers 55 pounds.

"If, after following above instructions, the brake still sticks, bleed the reservoir again and run on hand brake, reporting same to first inspector and also to barn foreman.

"(j) If brakes set without the engineer's valve being thrown, make tests as for above:

"Pump governor out of order—

"(k) If the pump governor does not regulate between 50 and 65 pounds, report same to first inspector.

"(l) If the pressure is below 40 pounds or above 75 pounds, cut the governor by turning governor-cock handle down and run into barn on gauge. To do this watch the gauge closely, and as soon as the red hand sinks to 50 pounds start the pump by turning pump switch to 'on' position; thence when gauge registers 65 pounds turn pump switch to 'off' position. Repeat this as often as necessary.

"Coupling and uncoupling cars—

"When coupling trail car to motor car—

"(m) See that the hose couplings are crossed.

"(n) Always couple up hose before opening cut-out cocks, there being two such cocks on each end of car.

"When uncoupling trail car from motor car—

"(o) First set up hand brake on both cars, then release the air from operating valve, letting air out of straight air pipes in both cars.

"(p) Uncouple the hose between the cars and couple the two on each car together. This will keep dirt out of the pipes.

"(r) In case the car has not been uncoupled properly and the trail car will not move because of brakes being set, drain the reservoir on trail car at the drain cock on bottom for such purpose.

"Supplementary—

"(s) Never leave the platform of a car until you have released the air brake and applied the hand brake sufficiently to hold the car.

"(t) Before the car is put away in the barn the air pump must be stopped and drain cock under the reservoir opened wide. This is important and must be done whenever car enters the barn for storage, either day or night.

"(u) Air brake may be used on grades."

"Rule 206. Economical use of current:

"(a) In order to effect an economical use of the electric current it is necessary that the continuous movements of starting and increasing speed should be made gradually. In starting a car let it run until the maximum speed of each notch has been attained before moving handle to the next notch. The controller must never be thrown on the last point if the car does not start on the preceding one.

"(b) Do not apply brakes when the current is on.

"(c) Do not apply current when the brakes are applied.

"(d) A great amount of power can be saved by using judgment and discretion in approaching stopping places and switches by shutting off power so as to allow the car to 'drift to the stopping place without a too vigorous use of brake.'"

A reading of the above rules ought to satisfy any mind that the technical and practical knowledge of especially the electric equipment of these cars demands of the employee a very high order of intelligence. In addition to this, he must be able to start his car smoothly and stop it in the same way. He must be economical in the use of the electric current. He must have good judgment and be extremely careful to protect the lives and limbs of citizens who momentarily, through thoughtlessness or otherwise, are unable to avoid injury or death from his car. In fact, it might be stated here that while the physical strain on these men is very great the mental strain from almost daily avoiding injuries to pedestrians is much greater. The happening of a distressing accident, especially to a child, usually destroys the efficiency of a motorman.

The speed of the cars, according to the testimony, exceeds in some instances 25 miles per hour, and is being increased as the large cars are placed in the service. These large cars are run on the same schedule as the smaller ones, and inasmuch as they carry double the number of passengers the number of stops are materially increased, and the motorman, to maintain the schedule, must increase the speed between the stops. The conductor is required to maintain order in the car, and, if called upon, it is the motorman's duty to assist him in ejecting disorderly passengers.

The conductor is required under rule 11:

"(b) The conductor is in charge of the car and is held responsible for the safety and convenience of the passengers and for the collection and proper accounting of all fares.

"(c) With the motorman, he is responsible for the running of the car in strict accordance with the rules and regulations.

"Rule 13. (A) To keep a lookout for persons desiring to board the car and a careful watch of passengers to observe request to stop car.

"Rule 16. He must treat all passengers with politeness under all conditions.

"Rule 17. (C) To give passengers any information desired.

"Rule 25. To report accidents and give all necessary aid to the injured.

"Rule 24. To eject all disorderly passengers.

"Rule 30. To control by bell signals the movement of the cars so as to protect passengers.

"Rule 68. Must regulate the heating and ventilating of the car.

"Rule 101. To promote the comfort and convenience of the passengers by announcing all streets, principal places, transfer points, etc.

"Rule 105. Issue transfers at such places and times as the rules provide.

"Rule 109. To give special attention to seating passengers.

"Rule 8. And present a good appearance personally by neatness of persons, hands, clothing, and habits of sobriety.

"(Rule 10.)"

They are frequently reminded by the rules that "employees bear in mind that they are engaged in a public service, in which they are constantly called upon to exercise great patience, forbearance, and self-control." The conductor must be a man of tact, and especially proficient in making change. If he makes a mistake in change or accepts counterfeit or mutilated coins, the loss occasioned thereby is taken from his wages. As so well stated in the brief of counsel for the men, "he must look above the weakness of individuals in the cars, meet discourtesy with courtesy, unreasonableness with reason, impatience with patience." This company has made many arbitrary rules governing the operation of its cars, and the dissatisfaction resulting therefrom materially adds to the annoyance of both the conductors and motormen, whom thoughtless people look upon as responsible for the company's actions. In the course of a day's employment he handles upward of a thousand human beings—men, women, and children. He must constantly be on the alert to protect the aged and infirm while entering or leaving the car. He must be ever willing to help the mother with her child and see that they enter and leave the car in safety. He must protect the passengers from the disorderly or drunken passenger, and sometimes take a severe beating in doing so. He is required to make out a number of complicated reports at the end of his day's work, for which he receives no compensation. He must be thoroughly acquainted with all the streets and public buildings, and in some instances street numbers, of all the routes his car is operated; and above all things he must be careful that passengers are not injured by the premature starting of the car, which always results in a heavy loss to the company. This work must all be done with the schedule in mind. He is therefore frequently hurried in its performance. If employed on one of the old cars collecting fares, he is compelled many times to use physical force to get through an overcrowded car, breathe at all times the foul atmosphere, careful not to make mistakes in change, especially careful not to ask the same passenger for his fare the second time, and at the same time watch for people who desire to board or leave the car, and see that they do so in safety.

EXPOSURE.

The exposure of the employees to all kinds of weather conditions should be, I believe, taken into serious consideration in fixing their wages. The unavoidably irregular hours of their labor requires them to leave home at an hour and minute fixed by their employer. Rain, sleet, hail, snow, or zero weather will not excuse them. Their duty is fixed and certain; it is to take out the car and operate it according to the rules of the company while in a partially protected position, from 9 to 13 hours. A man who can do this for a number of years in this climate without feeling the ill effects from exposure would be, indeed, a physical marvel.

It is urged by the umpire that the work in the fresh air accounts for the splendid physical appearance of all the men who appeared before us. Fresh air is undoubtedly conducive to good health, but there is an old adage that "too much of a good thing is worse than none at all," and the man who operates a street car in this variable climate is getting entirely too much of a good thing in the way of fresh air. The magnificent physical appearance of these men, in my opinion, is not so much due to the fresh air as to the fact that they are carefully selected and give evidence of having avoided all kinds of dissipation.

OCCUPATIONAL DISEASES.

It is also in evidence, and admitted by the company—and therefore I assume it to be true—that many of these men suffer from occupational diseases, such as the breaking down of the arch of the foot from standing, tonsilitis, rheumatism, and other diseases due to exposure in bad weather.

DANGEROUS NATURE OF THE EMPLOYMENT.

The operation of a street car, or any form of transportation vehicle, is recognized as a dangerous one. The dangers from collision, runaway horses, imperfect equipment of the cars, are always present, and the casualty list among the employees of this company, while probably no greater than in other cities, is quite large. The open summer car, which requires the conductor to ride on the running board while collecting fares, or aiding passengers to board or leave the car, places him in a position of great danger from passing vehicles or obstructions, this exposed condition being responsible for many injuries to the conductors.

IRREGULARITY OF THE HOURS OF LABOR.

The irregularity of the hours of labor of these employees should also be given substantial weight in determining their wages. According to the evidence they are divided into four classes:

First. The early straight men, who go to work about 5 o'clock in the morning and work straight through until 4 in the afternoon.

Second. The late straight men who go to work about 3 o'clock p. m. and work straight through until 1 a. m.

Third. The swing men who work from about 5 a. m. to 10 a. m. and then from 4 p. m. to 9 p. m. They work and are paid for about 10 hours' labor, but the layover in the middle of the day requires them to be on duty upward of 15 hours.

Fourth. Extra men. These men have no regular work from day to day, but are used as occasion requires to fill the places of regular men and to handle the extra night and evening rush hours.

The early straight men have the advantage of spending the evenings with their families. This is denied the late straight men, who reach home between 1 and 2 a. m. If they sleep the usual number of hours, they do not arise until 9 or 10 a. m. The same is true of the swing men, who start extremely early in the morning, have a lay-over about midday, and then resume the work until almost midnight. The testimony shows that a large number of these employees are married and have families. In the case of the late straight and swing men they seldom see their children; the late straight men rising after the children have gone to school, and when they return home the children are in bed; the swing men arising before the children are up, and returning at midnight after they have retired. These men can not go to the theaters or enjoy any form of recreation in the evenings, because they are engaged in their work. Their home life is destroyed, and it is with them simply a proposition of eating, sleeping, and working, in the hope that some day through resignation of other employees or otherwise they will secure an early straight run.

The necessities of the traveling public compel them to work on holidays and Sundays. Holidays and Sundays are always looked forward to by home-loving men as days of recreation, rest, and devotion, but to the street car motorman or conductor the holidays are days of much greater labor and Sundays days of the usual work. In a normal industrial calling the man goes to and returns from his work at seasonable hours. He has his evenings for recreation and the home, his holidays for pleasure, and his Sundays for the home and church, and when these things are taken out of a man's life, as they are in the case of these workmen, there is very little left of the real pleasures of life.

I do not contend for an instant that this system could be changed, but I do contend most earnestly that any system which requires men to work these unnatural hours places upon them an intolerable burden, and that this board of arbitrators should make them a reasonable increase in their wages for the irregular and, I may say, unnatural nature of their employment.

ARE MOTORMEN SKILLED OR UNSKILLED WORKMEN?

It was urged at the hearings that the motormen and conductors were unskilled workmen. May I ask, whoever heard of an unskilled workman having 167 printed rules to guide him in the performance of his duties to his employer? May I ask, if these men are unskilled laborers, the reason for the sliding scale which runs over a period of four years? It is a fixed and well-established custom that apprentices are paid apprentice's wages until they reach the journeymen's stage, and this is exactly what this company does when it requires the employees to serve an apprenticeship for at least four years before they receive the maximum wage; and when we consider the testimony of the company—which I shall later discuss in detail—showing that the six months' men who receive 23½ cents an hour actually cost the company in wages and damages resulting from their accidents 41.3 cents per hour, and the five-year men and over, whose wages are 30 cents an hour, only cost the company 3.2 cents per hour in damages, thus demonstrating that experience in the handling of the cars greatly increases the efficiency of the men, the contention that they are unskilled workmen is too absurd and ridiculous to discuss. It is the assertion of such unrighteous propositions that keeps open the breach between the employers and the employees.

EXTRAORDINARY TRAFFIC CONDITIONS.

First. The inadequacy of the service rendered by this company to the public, resulting in the overcrowding of the cars, materially adds to the revenue of the company, but at the same time places additional burdens upon the motormen and conductors.

Second. The rugged topography of the ground in and around the city of Pittsburgh, resulting in extremely heavy grades, requires of the motormen a much higher degree of care in the handling of their cars, I believe, than in any other city in the Union.

Third. The peculiar location of the business section of Pittsburgh, which is the termini of all these lines, 66 in number, and the narrowness of many of the principal streets, with the resulting traffic congestion, require of the motormen extraordinary care in the prevention of accidents and the maintenance of the schedule.

Fourth. The use of automobile trucks and automobiles, the number of which is rapidly increasing, materially adds to the strain on the motorman of the car, especially in the downtown and congested part of the city.

The large number of heavy grades, the narrowness of the city streets, the peculiar location of the business section of the city, and the overcrowding of the cars create a condition the like of which, I believe, can not be found in the entire country, and requires of the operators of the cars much greater care, presence of mind, and quickness of judgment than in cities where there are few grades, wide streets, and practically no overcrowding of the cars.

It is a long step from the city hack to the modern electric car, but that step has been taken by reason of the inventive genius of our people and the harnessing of the electric current within less than 20 years, and I fear that the average man does not realize that these rapid changes have increased from year to year the responsibilities of motormen and conductors to such an extent that their duties now require more presence of mind, knowledge, skill, good judgment, tact, and courage than that of any other calling in the industrial field. The locomotive engineer holds a position of great responsibility, but a comparison of his duties with the duties of a modern street railway motorman shows that the greater mental and physical strain is on the latter. The locomotive engineer hauls about the same number of human beings on a trip that a motorman does in a day. The engineer runs his train over a private right of way upon which neither pedestrain nor vehicle has a right to be except at grade crossings, and these are rapidly being abolished. The motorman operates his car day after day through the streets of a great city, crowded with pedestrains and vehicles which have exactly the same legal right to use the highway that he has, except that they have to give way to the car, as it can not leave the track. The motorman avoids collision with hundreds of pedestrains and vehicles every day who have a legal right to be on the highway. The engineer avoids collisions with but few of either, who have no right to be on a railroad right of way. The engineer receives a wage of from $6 to $8 per day; the motorman $2.70 for a 9-hour day under the scale decided upon by the umpire.

COMPARISON OF WAGE SCALES IN THE PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

The wage scales of other skilled employments in the Pittsburgh district, while not conclusive in this matter, are worthy of consideration. I concede that men engaged in the outside building trades do not in all cases have steady work throughout the year, but the printers, compositors, linotypers, coopers, blacksmiths, hoisting engineers, pressmen, and stereotypers have steady work the year round; and an examination of the following table, which is conceded by both sides to be correct, discloses that of all forms of labor there is but one that is paid less than the maximum paid the motormen and conductors, and that is the common laborers who receive from 20 cents to 25 cents per hour. Even the hod carrier, whose work requires no mental effort, receives 40 cents an hour for his work.

	Per hour.
Painters and decorators receive	$0.56½
Carpenters, the same, with an advance for 1915 to	.63½
Bricklayers	.72
Stonemasons	.65
Coopers	.45
Blacksmiths	.45
Steamfitters	.62½
Marble-workers	.68¾
Roofers	.60
Hoisting engineers	.65
Hod carriers	.40
Compositors	.39½
Linotypers	.48
Newspaper compositors	.60
Pressmen	.47
Stereotypers	.47

All of whom work eight hours a day.

The degree of industry, intelligence, and efficiency required of motormen and conductors is certainly as great as that required of many of the men in the employments above enumerated, and certainly much greater than that of some of them.

THE LARGER OR LABOR-SAVING CARS.

According to the testimony about one-third of the old cars have been replaced during the last four years with what is known as pay-as-you-enter cars, and while this car, so far as the conductor is concerned, has the advantage over the old one, of protecting him from the foul air while collecting fares in overcrowded cars, the capacity of the new car is double that of the old one. Doubling the capacity of the car naturally doubles the number of fares to collect, doubles the number of aged, infirm women and children to handle in safety. It also enables the company to carry the same number of passengers with one car and two employees that under the old system required two cars and four employees, thus doubling the revenue of the company.

Mr. Jones, the general manager of the company, testified that within the next two years all of the open cars will be abolished and the pay-as-you-enter car in operation on all the lines; and inasmuch as this wage scale is for over two years, these labor-saving cars will be in operation during the life of this contract. It is idle to contend that the increased capacity of the cars does not enlarge the duties and responsibilities of both the motorman and conductor. Even Mr. Jones (see testimony, p. 1087) says, in speaking of night-car service, "The receipts at night are very much less per mile than in daylight, showing that the travel was lighter and it is easier on the conductor as well as the motorman." Again, in testifying as to the rate of wages paid on the local lines in Washington, Pa., in support of the company's contention that the men on this line are not entitled to as high a rate of wages as those employed in the Pittsburgh district, he says: "But the service is very much easier. They haven't any peaks there, the people ride in small cars, fewer stops, etc." It might be noticed that Mr. Jones does not say that the service is much easier owing to no peak, smaller cars, fewer stops, etc., but emphasizes it by stating that it is "very much easier." Applying to this state of facts the principle stated heretofore, that the wages ought to be higher than those which have prevailed in the past, if the work is now harder or more responsible, or if it requires more skill, the change in the size of these cars which has taken place since the last wage agreement was made, and that will take place during the life of this scale, will materially increase the duties and responsibilities of the operators of the cars; and if there were nothing else in this controversy, I would recommend a substantial increase in wages on this fact alone. There is a well-recognized custom in all industrial establishments which provides where a machine is installed that increases the output the operator of the machine is given an increase in wages. This custom is just and equitable and should be applied in this case.

ABSURDITY OF THE PRESENT WAGE SCALE.

It appears, according to the testimony of Mr. Jones, the general manager, that he made a calculation, which was introduced in evidence, showing not only the cost of the various classes of employees by the day but the cost per hour to the company of each class for losses suffered by it due to accident claims. The calculation is as follows:

Length of service.	Cost per hour plus accident cost.	Per cent of total men.	Per cent of total accidents.	Per cent of total cost of accidents.
	Cents.
First 6 months	41.3	9.15	21.04	28.79
Second 6 months	38.5	6.00	9.47	13.18
Second year	33.2	8.12	9.54	8.34
Third year	36.3	8.35	9.64	10.73
Fourth year	33.2	11.34	10.66	7.73
Fifth year and over	32.9	57.04	39.66	31.23
Total		100.00	100.00	100.00

An examination of the above calculation discloses that the six months' men, who receive 23½ cents an hour as wages, cost the company an additional 17.8 cents per hour in damage claims, or a total in wages and damages of 41.3 cents per hour; that while they represent only 9.15 per cent of the employees they are responsible for about 28.79 per cent of the accidents. This loss to the company due to accidents, according to Mr. Jones's calculation, gradually decreases as the experience of the men increases until we find that the men who have been in the service five years and over and receive 30 cents per hour cost the company only 2.9 cents per hour in damages, or a total in wages and damages of only 32.9 cents per hour. In other words, the six months' or inexperienced men actually cost this company in wages and damages 41.3 cents per hour, while the five-year men and over only cost it 32.9 cents per hour in wages and damages, resulting in the remarkable fact that it actually costs the company 8.4 cents per hour more for its inexperienced men than it does for the experienced men. A mere statement of these facts should be a demonstration of the absolute unfairness of the present scale. An application of the common sense so frequently mentioned in the opinion of the umpire must convince any reasonable man that these five-year men and over, who by reason of their own increased efficiency are able to save the company 8.4 cents per hour, should be entitled to at least a portion of the profits secured by the company from their increased efficiency. These men at least, who effect this great saving for the company, are undoubtedly entitled to a substantial increase in wages.

COST OF LIVING.

Considerable testimony was introduced by both sides on the increased cost of living in the Pittsburgh district during the last few years. It was expert and statistical and, like all such testimony, of doubtful value, but inasmuch as it was the best evidence obtainable, was admitted by the board.

The company admits that living costs have increased about 7 per cent since 1910, but its contention is based largely upon an analysis of the price lists for a number of years of the Charters's stores. Mr. Charters has a number of stores handling groceries, fresh and salt meats, etc., in the Pittsburgh district. He is able, by reason of the extremely large volume of his business, to buy in large quantities directly from the producer and the manufacturer instead of the wholesaler, and thus avoid the middleman's profit which the corner grocer or butcher has to pay. In addition to this advantage, the major portion of his sales are for cash, which enables him to save bookkeeping expenses and avoid, to some extent at least, the usual losses of the ordinary grocer or butcher from bad accounts. I am perfectly willing to concede that he can and does sell from 7 to 10 per cent cheaper than the ordinary store, and if all these motormen and conductors lived conveniently near the Charters's stores they could undoubtedly effect a saving in their cost of living. The difficulty with the testimony, however, arises from the fact that these employees are scattered throughout the entire Pittsburgh district, and the distance between their homes and these stores is very great. Few of them have any household help, and in the larger number of the cases it would be impracticable for the wife to patronize Mr. Charters, as she would have no one with whom to leave the children, and she does the same as the ordinary person—patronizes the corner grocer or butcher.

Without attempting to determine exactly the percentage of the increased cost of living during the period mentioned, the fact remains that the 7 per cent increase conceded by the company is much greater than the increase in wages of the 30-cents-an-hour men, who represent over one-half of the employees. Under the scale of 1910 they received 29½ cents an hour; under the scale of 1912, 30 cents an hour. This is an advance in four years of only one-half cent an hour, or 1.64 per cent, compared with the 7 per cent increase in the cost of living admitted by the company.

Coupling my own knowledge of these matters with the expert testimony where it appeared to be reasonable, I have concluded that living costs have increased in the city of Pittsburgh since 1910 about 12 per cent. In this, of course, I include rent, clothing, etc. This increase has been especially noticeable during 1913 and the present year, and it would be but just and reasonable to increase the wages sufficiently to provide for this increased cost of living.

LIVING WAGE.

Heretofore I have adopted the principle suggested by the counsel for the employees that "wages for any useful work should be sufficient to maintain a normal family in health and reasonable comfort; that the resources of this country and this district are amply sufficient to maintain such a standard, and that it is self-evident that the Nation can not be sound, healthy, and happy upon any other basis."

Are these men receiving a living wage as defined above? A large number of the motormen and conductors appeared before us, and in some instances their wives. They told of their home lives and the amount of money required to maintain them in a reasonable manner, and it was a noteworthy fact that the men, with but one exception—and many of them have been in the company's service for years—never have been able to acquire any property. Prejudiced minds may say that this was due to bad managerial ability on the part of the wife or extravagance on the part of the husband; but if they will take the trouble to read this testimony, which I have not the space to quote in detail, they will wonder, as I did when I heard the testimony, how they get along as well as they do. I will take the case of ———, because the wage received by him is the average one received by these workmen and is a fair test of their living conditions. He is a regular man having a swing run who about six months before these hearings started to keep account of all his expenditures, which account was offered in evidence and is a part of the testimony. From July 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914, his total earnings amounted to $864.47, or an average of $72.06 per month. He has two children, aged 6 and 2 years. His appearance on the stand indicated that he was a neat, careful man, and the fact that he was idle only 18 days in the year and worked some extra time speaks for his industry. This expense account shows that for the 5½ months he turned over to his wife $349.55. He testified his pay for these months amounted to $415.26. This would leave $69.71, or a little less than $3 per week, which he said he spent for such items as lunches, shoes, shirts, collars, and things for the home. This does not seem extravagant, particularly when the family food bill is considered, which amounted to $137.44 for the 5½ months, or almost exactly $25 per month. Their milk is about $1.65 a month, which would indicate that they purchased about a pint a day. Evidently there was no milk for the children to drink. Their bill for doctor and medicine was $31.85, which would corroborate Mrs. Fothergill's statement that an undue proportion of the income of these families goes for such items. Their bill for clothing was $52.70.

It is plain from this analysis of their expenses that Mrs. ——— is a good housewife, else this family could not get along as it does. But with all their good management what is the net result? Mr. ——— says that he is square with everybody except the grocer, to whom he owes $7.10. It might be possible that with good luck a saving can be made in the bill for doctor and medicine, so that he will break even on the year; but what margin is there for an extraordinary expense such as a death or new baby or an operation or any other of the extraordinary things which happen to all of us, and what opportunity to lay by anything for old age? What is to happen to this family if the breadwinner should be suddenly taken away? Society would have to shoulder the burden, and yet this man is temperate and industrious. He arises at 5 in the morning to go to his work and returns to his family about midnight. The family has two rooms and an attic, with the use of a bathroom, for which they pay $12 per month. Father, mother, and two children sleep in one room. One of the children is 6 years old. Now, it is certainly not a proper standard of living which requires this to be done, yet if this family wants another room they must economize on some other item of expense, which is impossible. For his $72 a month he will carry during that period in safety between fifty and sixty thousand of our citizens. The citizens trust to his care their own lives and the lives of their wives and children.

I submit that his wages are not sufficient to maintain himself and family in good health and reasonable comfort.

As to the other matters in controversy, I agree with the umpire in his statement that if it had not been for the wage dispute it is probable that all of them would have been settled between the parties. I therefore shall only comment but briefly upon two of them. One is the rule which requires the employee to be at the barn five minutes before he is to take out his car. The testimony shows that the employees, especially the motorman, uses this five minutes, which they call "sharking time," in looking over the car, seeing that the brakes are in order, and work of like nature. There can be no question as to the wisdom of the rule. It is in effect in all the principal cities of the country and rendered necessary by the very nature of the employment. But I do not consider it fair to the men that they should not be compensated for the time so spent. It is clearly a necessary incident to their employment and should be treated as a part of it. This sharking time represents a saving to the company of approximately $37,000 a year, which of right, in my judgment, belongs to the men. Considerable testimony was introduced as to the custom in other cities in regard to this matter. While in some of them, as stated by the umpire, the men are not paid for this time, in the majority of them they are.

Secondly, the dispute in regard to the method of collecting the money from the conductors. Under the present system, which has been in effect for several years, the conductor counts his receipts, puts them in a bag, and hands the bag to a custodian at the barn. It is taken from there by the money cars, and after passing through several hands finally reaches the office of the company, on Sixth Avenue, Pittsburgh, where it is counted by a number of young women. The conductor is not present when his money is counted, contrary to the usual method in such matters, and if he is short the shortage is taken from his wages. Manifestly this system is productive of a great many disputes and is extremely unsatisfactory to the conductors. I believe that the system formerly in use, which permitted the conductor to turn over the money at the barn to some one authorized by the company to receive it, would result in a great deal less dissatisfaction. The umpire, however, has seen fit to refuse the claims of the men for a change in the system, mainly, I believe, on account of the testimony of Mr. Jones that the pay-as-you-enter cars will be in operation on all the lines within the next two years. If Mr. Jones's statement is correct, it will obviate the difficulty, and I can suggest no remedy in the matter except for the employees to test the truthfulness of Mr. Jones by the passage of time.

Attention is called, in the opinion of the umpire, to the fact that this company can not increase the fare above the present rate of 5 cents, and that it is not like a manufacturing concern, which can place the additional labor cost upon the consumer by increasing the price of the product. This contention of the umpire would be meritorious if there were any evidence of the financial inability of this company to pay a reasonable increase in wages, but there is no such evidence. In fact, the company carefully avoided any reference to its financial condition. The subtle counsel for the company, in his argument, never even mentioned such a defense. All the evidence relating to the financial condition of the Pittsburgh Railways Co. is in the possession of that company, and inasmuch as it made no effort to show that it was unable financially to pay an increased wage it is a fair and reasonable presumption that it can do so. It should be apparent to the dullest mind that financial inability of the company to meet the demands of the men would have been the strongest possible defense.

The umpire places emphasis on the fact that there is a surplus of labor in the Pittsburgh district, and urges this as one of a number of reasons against an increase in wages. I admit that there is some finacial disturbance in the city of Pittsburgh—in fact, throughout the entire Nation—due, as admitted by one of the company's witnesses, to a radical change in our currency laws and the national agitation against the trusts; but the new curerncy law is now admitted by its opponents to be a marked improvement over the old system, and all fair-minded men must admit that the trust problem reached such a crisis in this Nation that it became a question whether the Government controlled the trusts or the trusts controlled the Government. Now that the regulative trust legislation has been passed by Congress and approved by the President, I am hopeful that business affairs will assume their normal state, unless the appalling catastrophe in Europe, where civilization appears to have perished from the earth, should further disturb our commercial life. This I do not fear, as the war has already created an extraordinary demand for the products of our farms and factories, which is bound to increase as the belligerent nations exhaust the supplies they now have on hand.

Assuming, however, as contended by the company, that financial conditions are disturbed, this should have little, if any, bearing upon this wage scale, which runs for a long period of time, namely, two years and upward. It is positively unfair to the employees to fix a wage for such a long period of time, based upon hard times, with strong probabilities of an improvement; and if the situation were reversed, it would be equally unfair to the company to fix a scale based on good times, with a probability of financial stringency.

Comment is also made by the umpire upon the fact that this company pays out annually for "dead" time approximately $87,000. In the aggregate this sounds like a large sum of money, but divided among 3,000 employees it represents only about 8 cents per day per man. But no mention is made in the opinion of the umpire of the "dead" time of the swing men who lay over in the middle of the day for from one hour to three hours without compensation, and I believe it but fair to call attention to this latter fact, because the "dead" time for which the men are not paid far exceeds the "dead" time for which they are paid.

CONCLUSIONS.

Under the evidence I would find the following facts:

First. Motormen and conductors must have good sight, hearing, and mental alertness. They must have sound minds, sound bodies, and be in the very prime of life.

Second. They must have individuality in contradistinction to employees that work and act under the direction of a boss.

Third. They must act at all times on their own initiative, with no precedent to guide them in the endless number of emergencies that arise in the performance of their duties.

Fourth. They must possess not only patience but great endurance and presence of mind; patience with passengers, endurance for constant employment, and presence of mind for emergencies.

Fifth. They must eat irregularly, be away from their families to a greater extent than any other class of workmen, and work regardless of the elements.

Sixth. They must assume the risks incident to an admittedly dangerous employment and imperil their lives in a crisis like a soldier in the field, without regard to their own safety.

Seventh. They are responsible to the law, both civilly and criminally, for mistakes of judgment and to the company even to the extent of making change.

Eighth. They must forfeit their conviction as to the propriety of working on Sundays and holidays.

Ninth. Their responsibilities have been materially increased since the signing of the last wage agreement, by the introduction of the large or labor-saving cars, the increased congestion in the downtown section of the city, and the rapid increase in the number of automobiles, auto trucks, and similar vehicles.

Tenth. The cost of living since the signing of the last wage scale has undoubtedly materially increased.

Eleventh. They serve two masters, the public and their employer.

The facts I would find puts them in a class much higher than an ordinary mechanic or skilled workman. They have the additional responsibility for human life. They are denied, by reason of Sundays and holidays, present enjoyment, and if not properly compensated, future enjoyment as well. The effort of every man is to better his condition, and if he is precluded by his environment, the sequel is discontent. The modern idea is that the inequalities of fortune should be mitigated by paying a fair living wage, the same to be measured by the cost of living, the risks incurred, and the responsibilities assumed.

From these premises the deduction follows: The increase demanded by the men is reasonable and should be granted. I believe the testimony in this case justified an advance in the wages of all of these employees of at least 5 cents an hour.

A number of recommendations which are not binding upon either side are made by the umpire, one of which suggests the creation of a board of conciliation, represented on one side by men elected from the various barns of the company, and the other by the officials of the company, the board to be given power to determine the disputes which are bound to arise between the employees and the company. With this suggestion I am in entire accord, although I am informed that it differs little, if any, from the system now in use. I do not, however, agree with one of the reasons which the umpire gives for this board of conciliation, namely, the action of the men in refusing the offer of insurance which this company made a few days before the present wage scale expired. It appears that the Equitable Life Insurance Co. offered to insure the motormen and conductors in such a way that in case of death their wages would be paid to their dependents for a period of one year in monthly installments. The premiums which the company were required to pay amounted to about $20,000 per year, or about 3 cents a day for each man. The difficulty with this aggregate insurance, so far as the workman is concerned, is the fact that his policy expires the moment he leaves the service of the company, and the only advantage which it has is the fact that the premium is one-eighth less than straight life insurance. The disadvantage of the policy expiring with the end of the employment should be apparent to anyone. If the company earnestly desires to insure the lives of its employees in this manner, I would recommend to the employees that they pay the additional one-eighth premium and secure a straight life policy. I have no doubt, as the umpire suggests, that this offer of insurance coming on the eve of the expiration of the wage scale, was looked upon by the men as a sop, as I recall that it was carefully advertised through the newspapers by the company about that time. If this company desires in good faith to protect the dependents of these workmen for a period of a year after their death, it would be an economic fallacy to purchase policies of insurance which expire with their employment, when a premium one-eighth larger, which the men should be perfectly willing to pay, would give them policies which they could keep up by paying all the premium after they had left the service of the company. The employees no doubt thought the amount of money expended by this company for insurance would be treated by a board of arbitration as part of their wages and used as an argument against their claim for an advance in exactly the same way that their right to free transportation to and from their work was used in this case.

JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, ETC.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 19076) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first subdivision of section 116 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"First. The first circuit shall include the districts of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine, and Porto Rico."

SEC. 2. That sections 128, 238, and 246 of the act aforesaid are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 128. The circuit courts of appeals shall exercise appellate jurisdiction to review by appeal or writ of error final decisions in the district courts, including the United States district court for Hawaii and the United States district court for Porto Rico, in all cases other than those in which appeals and writs of error may be taken direct to the Supreme Court, as provided in section 238, unless otherwise provided by law; and, except as provided in sections 239 and 240, the judgments and decrees of the circuit court of appeals shall be final in all cases in which the jurisdiction is dependent entirely upon the opposite parties to the suit or controversy being aliens and citizens of the United States or citizens of different States; also in all cases arising under the patent laws, under the trade-mark laws, under the copyright laws, under the revenue laws, and under the criminal laws, and in admiralty cases."

"SEC. 238. Appeals and writs of error may be taken from the district courts, including the United States district court for Hawaii and the United States district court for Porto Rico, direct to the Supreme Court in the following cases: In any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue, in which case the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the Supreme Court from the court below for decision; from the final sentences and decrees in prize causes; in any case that involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States; in any case in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States or the validity or construction of any treaty made under its authority is drawn in question; and in any case in which the constitution or law of a State is claimed to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States."

"SEC. 246. Writs of error and appeals from the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii and of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico may be taken and prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States witain the same time, in the same manner, under the same regulations, and in the same classes of cases, in which writs of error and appeals from the final judgments and decrees of the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, may be taken and prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States under the provisions of section 237; and in all other cases, civil or criminal, in the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii or the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, it shall be competent for the Supreme Court of the United States to require by certiorari, upon the petition of any party thereto, that the case be certified to it, after final judgmen or decree, for review and determination, with the same power and authority as if taken to that court by appeal or writ of error; but certiorari shall not be allowed in any such case unless the petition therefor is presented to the Supreme Court of the United States within six months from the date of such judgment or decree."

SEC. 3. That section 244 of the act aforesaid is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That the judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of appeals in all proceedings and cases arising under the bankruptcy act and in all controversies arising in such proceedings and cases shall be final, save only that it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require by certiorari, upon the petition of any party thereto, that the proceeding, case, or controversy be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority as if taken to that court by appeal or writ of error; but certiorari shall not be allowed in any such proceeding, case, or controversy unless the petition therefor is presented to the Supeme Court within six months from the date of such judgment or decree.

SEC. 5. That an action or suit by or against a railroad company incorporated and existing under an act of Congress shall not be regarded as a case arising under a law of the United States within the meaning of the statutes regulating the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, unless there be some sufficient reason for so regarding it independently of the incorporation and existence of the railroad company under an act of Congress.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of January, 1915.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, this bill incorporates a number of different propositions, which I will take up in detail.

The first section of the bill relates to appeals and writs of error from the District courts of Porto Rico. In the present state of the law Porto Rico is not attached to any circuit, and appeals from the District Court of Porto Rico go direct to the Supreme Court of the United States. That causes a great many cases to reach the Supreme Court of the United States that ought to be disposed of in the circuit court of appeals. The sole purpose of section 1 is to attach Porto Rico to the third circuit, as Hawaii is now attached to the ninth circuit. It is attached to the third circuit simply because that has less business than other circuits.

The second section simply reenacts sections 128, 238, and 246 of the Judicial Code, adding to section 128 the words "and the United States District Court of Porto Rico," in line 9.

Also, in line 19, the words "under the trade-mark laws" are added so as to put litigation in regard to trade-marks on the same basis as cases arising under the patent laws and the copyright laws. It seems that there was an oversight in the statute, and the provision does not now relate to trade-marks, which gives a different rule in trade-mark cases than in patent and copyright cases, and the committee saw no reason for such distinction. So it provided that the law applicable to patents and copyrights shall also apply to trade-marks.

Section 238 is amended so as to include Porto Rico. The same is true of section 246.

Section 244 of the act is repealed. That provided for appeals direct from the District Court of Porto Rico to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Section 4 relates to bankruptcy cases, and the adoption of that provision will prevent a great many bankruptcy cases reaching the Supreme Court which now reach it. It makes the decision of the circuit court of appeals final in bankruptcy proceedings and cases, but still leaves the Supreme Court with the power to review, through certiorari, such proceedings and cases as it may deem necessary and proper. The bankruptcy law has now been so thoroughly construed that there is not much doubt about any of its provisions, and cases now coming to the Supreme Court under it involve complicated questions of fact rather than of law. Besides all of this, many of these matters now have four hearings—one before the referee, one in the district court, one in the circuit court of appeals, and one in the Supreme Court. Certainly all litigants ought to be satisfied with a hearing before the referee, a trial in the district court, an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, with a right to review in the Supreme Court of the United States by a writ of certiorari upon a sufficient showing.

Now, section 5 proposes to amend the law which, as far as I know, relates only to the Texas Pacific Railway Co. The courts have held that a railroad company chartered by Congress has a right to remove a cause to the Federal courts on the sole ground that it is a corporation authorized by Congress. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL], and the Texas Pacific road, operating in Texas, was incorporated by act of Congress, and is the only road in the State of Texas that has the right to transfer its cases to the Federal court on the ground that it was incorporated by Congress, thereby giving it an advantage over other railroad corporations operating in the State of Texas.

This amendment provides that if a railroad company chartered by act of Congress takes its cases to the Federal courts it must allege some other ground provided by statute for the transfer of cases from the State to the Federal courts. In other words, it so amends the law that they can not take it to the Federal courts on the sole ground that the corporation was chartered by Congress.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has considered the desirability of amending the law so as to prevent the transfer of cases from a State court to the Federal court by corporations on the ground of diverse citizenship? This House put in the codification of the judiciary title a provision eliminating that as one of the grounds for transfer. A Senator refused to agree to it; it was in the closing hours of the short session, and the provision in conference had to be eliminated because he would not agree to it.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. That matter was not brought to our attention in connection with this bill, but these other matters were, and we thought they were all meritorious.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is dealing with only one little abuse by one railroad, while I am speaking of a great abuse by all of them.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. The gentleman asked me a question, and I replied to it. If this is brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee, I have no doubt they would give it careful consideration.

Mr. WEBB. I think there are three or four bills looking to a remedy of the very evil that the gentleman from Kentucky speaks of, but we have been very busy lately.

Mr. SHERLEY. You have a bill here undertaking to change the jurisdiction of the Federal courts as to railroads that are incorporated by the United States. You are dealing with one little evil. All the railroads of the country exercise the right to transfer actions from a State court to the Federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship, although at the time that the provision was put into the law originally there were not a hundred corporations in the country to be affected by it.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL].

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not quarreling with what the committee has done, I am trying to emphasize a matter of very much more importance than that which is now presented to the House.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I think the gentleman from Kentucky is correct in saying that there are more important matters connected with this subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. This bill is dealing with the specific question of the right of transfer from State courts to Federal courts.

Mr. WEBB. I will state to the gentleman that we are giving consideration to that matter, and we will bring out a bill before long. We have had no hearings upon it; we have been so busy with other matters.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope it may come early enough so that it will not be sandbagged by some Senator opposed to the provision when it gets to another body.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This bill was introduced on October 2 and reported to the House on October 8, and it provides that it shall go into effect on the 1st day of January, 1915. I was going to ask the gentleman to change the date, so that if the Senate should pass it it would not have to come back here.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I think that is a good suggestion. What time would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. Not earlier than the 1st of April; that will give a reasonable time after Congress adjourns.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in section 6, line 7, by inserting the 1st day of April, 1915, instead of the 1st day of January.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 7, by striking out "January" and inserting "April."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PROCEDURE IN THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12750 on the Union Calendar. I want to make the suggestion that it ought not to be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Plainly it is not a Union Calendar bill. I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12750) relating to procedure in the United States courts.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 269 of the Judicial Code, approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"No judgment shall be set aside or reversed or a new trial granted by any court of the United States in any case, civil or criminal, on the ground of misdirection of the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless in the opinion of the court to which application is made, after an examination of the entire cause, it shall appear that the error complained of has injuriously affected the substantial rights of the parties.

"The trial judge may in any civil case submit to the jury in connection with the general verdict specific issues of fact arising upon the pleadings and evidence, reserving any question of law arising in the case for subsequent argument and decision, and he and any court to which the case shall thereafter be taken on writ of error shall have the power to direct judgment to be entered either upon the verdict or upon the special findings if conclusive upon the merits."

The following committee amendment was read:

Amend as follows: Strike out, on page 2, lines 5 to 12, both inclusive, it being the last paragraph of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ACTION FOR DEATHS ON HIGH SEAS.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill H. R. 6143, relating to the maintenance of actions for deaths on the high seas and other navigable waters, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas, the Great Lakes, or any navigable waters of the United States the personal representative of the decedent may maintain a suit for damages in the district courts of the United States in admiralty for the exclusive benefit of the decedent's wife, husband, parent, child, or dependent relatives against the vessel, person, or corporation which would have been liable to a suit for damages by or in behalf of the decedent by reason of such act if death had not ensued.

SEC. 2. That the recovery in such suit shall be a fair and just compensation to the persons for whose benefit the suit is brought and shall be apportioned among them by the court in proportion to the pecuniary damage they may severally have suffered by reason of the death of the person by whose representative the suit is brought.

SEC. 3. That suit shall be begun within one year from the death of the decedent, unless during that period there has not been reasonable opportunity for securing jurisdiction of the vessel, person, or corporation sought to be charged: Provided, however, That after the expiration of a period of one year from the decedent's death the right of action hereby given shall be deemed to have lapsed within 90 days after a reasonable opportunity to secure jurisdiction has offered.

SEC. 4. That if a person die as the result of wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas, the Great Lakes, or any navigable waters of the United States during the pendency in a court of admiralty of the United States of a suit to recover damages for personal injuries in respect of such act, neglect, or default, the personal representative of the decedent may be substituted for the decedent as a party, and the suit may proceed as a suit under this act for the recovery of the compensation provided in section 2.

SEC. 5. That in suits under this act the fact that the decedent has been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar recovery, but the court shall take into consideration the degree of negligence attributable to the decedent and reduce the damage accordingly.

SEC. 6. That this act shall not affect the rights of shipowners and others to avail themselves of the provisions of the laws of the United States relating to limitation of liability.

SEC. 7. That all suits for damages for the death of a person caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas, the Great Lakes, or any navigable waters of the United States wherever such death may occur shall be deemed to be within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, and in all suits in admiralty recovery of damages for death so caused shall be had only under the provisions of this act; and where the death has been caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas suit for damages shall not be maintained in the courts of any State or Territory or in the courts of the United States other than in admiralty.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the rights of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory or in the courts of the United States other than in admiralty to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in case of death from injuries received elsewhere than on the high seas: Provided, That there shall be but one recovery by the person injured or by or in behalf of any of the persons mentioned in section 1.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "compensation," insert the words "for the pecuniary loss sustained."

Page 2, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "one year" and insert the words "two years."

Page 2, line 15, strike out the words "one year" and insert the words "two years."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] desires to be heard in opposition to this bill. He is on his way over from the Office Building, and I would not like to have the amendments voted upon until he has had a chance to be heard upon the bill. So far as I am advised up to date myself, I am in favor of the bill, and I ask the Clerk to read in my time a letter from Mr. C. E. Kremer, of Chicago, an admiralty lawyer of very high standing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MANN: The Maritime Law Association have for years been trying to pass a bill in Congress providing for the survival of a right of action in case of death on the high seas and within the admiralty jurisdiction. I understand the Judiciary Committee has reported in favor of such a bill and that it is now before the House, and that some of the Members are objecting to it out of a fear that in some way it will interfere with State rights.

I do not know whether you are opposed to the bill or whether you are open to conviction upon the subject. The advantages of this bill are that it provides for a survival of a right of action on the high seas, where at present there is no such survival, because the high seas are outside of the territorial limits and the jurisdiction of the different States.

There is, as you know, as much reason for providing for a right of action where a death occurs on the high seas as where it occurs on waters within the boundaries of a State, in which case the State law provides for a right of action.

Another advantage of such an act would be this: In many cases where death has occurred on the Lakes it has been difficult, and in some instances impossible, to determine whether the death occurred in Michigan or in Illinois or in Wisconsin, as in one case I know of. As you know, the boundary of the State of Illinois extends to the middle of Lake Michigan and there meets the boundary of the State of Michigan and on a line drawn with the northern boundary of the State of Illinois there is a point in the lake where Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan practically come together.

A worse controversy arises where the boundary is between a State of the United States and Canada. All of the Lakes except Michigan are bounded on the one side by Canada, and in a recent case there was considerable difficulty in arriving at the point of whether or not the Canadian law applied to a death which occurred on an American vessel at the time it was in a channel of the St. Marys River, which is the boundary between Michigan and Canada. Much testimony was taken to determine whether the death occurred on the American or the Canadian side.

All of these difficulties would be obviated by passing the bill that is now before Congress and giving the admiralty courts jurisdiction over a case of death which occurred on the high seas or upon the Lakes. This would not deprive the State courts of jurisdiction, because the judiciary act of 1789 expressly provides that in all cases the jurisdiction of the State court remains and there is a remedy in every case tried in the admiralty courts, which can be enforced in the State court which may have jurisdiction at the time.

I could, of course, go into this matter at greater length and give you authorities, and I would be glad to do so if you think you need them, but I know that for years the admiralty bar of the United States have been trying to get Congress to pass this act, or a similar one, in order to supply a deficiency which exists in all cases where death occurs outside of the territorial limits of one of the States of the United States, in each of which a right of action is preserved.

I trust and hope that you may lend your valuable service in furthering this much-needed legislation.

Yours, very truly, C. E. KREMER.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from North Carolina is willing I will yield the time now to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. WEBB. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. MANN. Then I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, why not let me be recognized in my own right? I desire to reserve the balance of my time. I do not want this bill to pass this afternoon if I can prevent it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not entitled to recognition except by the courtesy of the gentleman from North Carolina. We are not in the Committee of the Whole. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] or the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] is first entitled to recognition.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read in my time a letter from Judge Harrington Putnam, of the second judicial department of the appellate division of the supreme court of Brooklyn, N. Y., which is a very clear exposition of the provisions of the bill. I send that letter to the desk and ask that it be read in my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., August 22, 1913.

Hon. E. Y. WEBB,
Chairman of Subcommittee of Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: Availing myself of the suggestion in your note to Mr. McCoy, I beg to address you on behalf of H. R. 6143, the bill for maintenance of actions for death at sea.

The general purpose of the measure is to give a uniform right of action in the United States admiralty courts for death by negligent acts occurring on the high seas, or on navigable waters of the United States, including the Great Lakes. The common law of England and in this country had no right of action for death, the reason for this omission being commonly stated that such a right was personal, which did not survive the death of the one injured. This was remedied by Lord Campbell's act, and following it our States have passed statutes conferring certain remedies for death. Congress also has changed the common law in this respect for the District of Columbia.

On the Continent of Europe a recovery may be had for death, whether the negligent act was on land or on water. Generally the right is admitted in favor of those whose maintenance or support is cut off by such removal of the one under a duty of support.

But the maritime law of England and the United States follows the common law, and hitherto we have had no remedial legislation passed for our maritime courts. In England it has been held that Lord Campbell's act does not cover a death on the high seas so as to give a right of action in rem; that is, against the vessel at fault, although a recovery has been allowed in personam against the vessel owner.

In this country a series of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States has held that there is no recovery for death at sea, in the absence of a statute conferring such a remedy. (The Harrisbury, 119 U. S., 199; The Alaska, 130 U. S., 201.)

The French law allows such recovery. Hence in a proceeding to limit liability by the French steamship company owning the passenger steamship La Bourgogne (210 U. S., 95), our court enforced the right to recover for death at sea, applying the law of France.

In another limited liability proceeding arising from a collision more than 3 miles from land between steamships both owned by Delaware corporations the death statute of Delaware was applied. (The Hamilton, 207 U. S., 398.) These State statutes, however, are far from uniform. In some States the recovery is limited to the conscious suffering before death—a matter difficult of proof in case of drowning at sea. (The Robert Graham Dunn, 70 F. R., 271.) Other States only give the remedy against those who are common carriers, which would not apply to vessels chartered or engaged for a single owner. In a few States the remedy for damages must follow, or be concurrent with, a criminal prosecution, so that the offender must have been first indicted. Furthermore, corporations owning seagoing vessels are not confined to the States upon the seaboard. For reasons of taxation, or other supposed advantages, shipping corporations may be organized in a remote inland State, and if the vessels are negligently managed at sea the death remedy must be sought in the statutes of such State. If a collision be supposed between vessels of different States, having diverse systems of relief for death, obviously great difficulties would arise, especially in fixing damages.

Although the constitutional grant of all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, with the power to regulate commerce, was intended to secure uniformity throughout the country, the Supreme Court has suffered this anomalous condition to grow up on the permissive theory that until Congress acts a State can legislate at least to the extent of binding corporations which it has created, so that these statutes may extend to torts committed more than 3 miles from land.

Such State statutes, diverse in their terms and conflicting in remedies, are but a poor makeshift for the uniform, simple legislation which Congress alone can enact.

The present bill is designed to remedy this situation by giving a right of action for death, to be enforced in the courts of admiralty, both in rem and in personam. The right is made exclusive for deaths on the high seas, leaving unimpaired the rights under State statutes as to deaths on waters within the territorial jurisdiction of the States. The measure has engaged the attention of the Maritime Law Association of the United States for more than 10 years, and in its present form has the approval of the American Bar Association. It is believed to be plain, simple, and in accord with the general policy of our more recent State and Federal legislation

Referring to the separate sections, it may be said:

Section 1 gives a right of action in the admiralty courts for death from negligent acts occurring upon the high seas, the Great Lakes, and other navigable waters, the language being similar to the language of Lord Campbell's act.

Section 2 provides that the damages to be recovered shall be a fair and just compensation to the persons injured by the death of the deceased, to be determined and apportioned by the court, inasmuch as in admiralty proceedings there are no jurors.

Section 3 fixes a one-year statute of limitation within which suit must be brought, and since it may not always be possible to get jurisdiction of the vessel or owner during that period, a proviso is added to allow additional time in case the one-year period does not afford reasonable opportunity to serve process.

Section 4 deals with the case where a person has brought suit in an admiralty court to recover for a personal injury but dies from the effects of the injury before the suit it concluded. The section permits the action to be continued by the personal representative of the deceased for the recovery of damages for his death as provided for by the act.

Section 5 states the admiralty rule in respect of the effect of contributory negligence, namely, that it shall not bar recovery, as at common law, but go to the reduction of damages. (See the Max Morris, 137 U. S., 1.) This is also the doctrine of the Federal employers' liability act (Laws of 1908, ch. 140, sec. 3).

Section 6 reserves to shipowners the right of limitation of liability, as established by the laws of the United States, present or future.

Section 7 makes the act the law of the courts of admiralty of the United States, and, so far as the high seas are concerned, makes the remedy exclusive. This is for the purpose of uniformity, as the States can not properly legislate for the nigh seas.

And section 8 reserves to suitors their rights under State statutes in the courts of the States and in the common-law courts of the United States with the proviso that there shall be but a single recovery for the injury.

The measure is primarily a bill for the admiralty courts; not to interfere with the jurisdiction of the States.

The fact that the several States have followed Lord Campbell's act, in so far as actions in the courts of common law are concerned, shows that public opinion in this country favors recovery for death. The Titanic disaster is still fresh in mind.

There is no reason why the admiralty law of the United States should longer depend on the statute laws of the States and lag behind the general law of Europe. Congress can now bring our maritime law into line with the laws of those enlightened nations which confer a right of action for death at sea.

I am not aware of any objection to the bill.

Very respectfully, yours,

HARRINGTON PUTNAM.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, that is such a clear description of the provisions of the bill that I do not care to make further comment at the present time. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I did not know this bill was to come up here to-day, and I am not in good shape, so far as my notes are concerned, to present my objections to the bill as I would have been under different conditions. This proposition, of course, is a very important proposition. Everyone will admit that there ought to be some kind of an employer's liability to cover cases where the injury amounts to death on the water, the same as on land. There is no doubt about that. England changed the old common law and created that liability in what is known as Lord Campbell's act. In that act there was no provision that it should apply merely to carriers by rail, but it applied to all persons who through negligence caused the death of another. That became applicable to the high seas and to the waters of Great Britain, and all of the territory of Great Britain, whether land or water, and was enforced. It was amended along the lines of development of the modern ideas of liability and the modern notions of an employer's responsibility, common-law defenses, negligence, and all of those things until, for instance, one amendment I now have in mind provides that insurance going to the deceased, which the beneficiaries, the dependents of the deceased, may receive shall not be held as a debit or a cut-off from the amount of judgment that is rendered. There are a great many other amendments that have been provided by the natural evolution of the ideas involved in the Lord Campbell act, but that original act is far in advance of the act which is tendered for passage this afternoon. As the act was passed in 1846 it had more of relief and more of the modern idea in respect to employer's liability than this proposed act, and at the present time amendments have been added and the act has been made stronger. Of course, it provides for jury trial, with no thought of leaving the matter to an admiralty judge, or a Federal judge, or some one person to determine the amount of the injury and the issues of the suit. The right of a jury trial is something which we have for all time held valuable; a right that we would not alienate for any consideration, since, at least, our country has been in existence. When the Titanic went down those claimants who filed their claims in England went on with their suits, they had their jury trials, and, according to the Times law reports, the amounts of the various awards have been settled and adjudicated.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any limitation as to the amount of recovery, according to the value of the ship that is destroyed?

Mr. BRYAN. That is another feature, but I will be glad to answer all that I know upon that subject. Under the operation of the English statute, liability in the case of the Titanic, for instance, was approximately $3,000,000.

Under the operation of our liability laws, which provide that the claimant can have the value of the ship and the current revenues, the tariffs for passengers and freight, the liability under the American laws would have been $96,000, as against $3,000,000, and yet they say we are not good to our ships, that we are unkind to our shipowners, and we do not give our shipping any consideration or any laws that will permit them to operate. The British shipowners, the Ocean Steamship Navigation Co., came here before Judge Holt, who recently resigned because the salary of the office was not sufficient—a good man as far as I know and an able judge—and they went before him and sought an injunction against the State courts that were trying cases against this steamship company, one in Chicago, one in Minnesota, another in New York, and caused all of the cases to be transferred to his jurisdiction, and sought then to apply the American rule rather than the English rule. The claimants said that this was an English ship flying an English flag and the liability was to be given under lex delicti instead of lex fori, or the law of the forum. They went to trial. These English shipowners begged and beseeched the court to test their liability by the American statute instead of the English statute, and under the decision they have won their contention, and their liability is some day to be decided or tested before some Federal court under American law, which is lex fori. In the meantime the English claimants have gotten their money by a jury of 12. But I did not care or expect to go into that question just now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the gentleman sure that a jury sat and affixed and awarded damages in the English court?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. The Lord Campbell act provides in its very body for a submission of this matter of damages to a jury.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But the Lord Campbell act does not apply to maritime courts or to admiralty proceedings——

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman assert that juries did not——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not assert it at all; I asked the gentleman if he were sure of it.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman is mistaken in the position he takes there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not, as respects the Lord Campbell act itself. I do not know what may be the amendments to that act.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman did not listen to the reports a few moments ago. There is nothing in the statutes of England that binds the Titanic or any other ocean steamship company to pay damages in case of death to the successors of the decedent except the Lord Campbell act and amendments thereto, with respect to compensation proceedings recently enacted.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. In the report of the committee on this point appears a letter from Judge Harrington Putnam, and he says, speaking of this act:

Section 1 gives a right of action in the admiralty court for death from negligent acts occurring upon the high seas, the Great Lakes, and other navigable waters, the language being similar to the language of Lord Campbell's act.

Mr. BRYAN. "Similar to Lord Campbell's act." The gentleman who wrote that is a proctor in admiralty, a very able gentleman, and has prepared this law and sent it here to be enacted as similar to the Lord Campbell act, and then, if the gentleman from Virginia, to whose opinion I readily defer on any legal proposition——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I beg the gentleman's pardon, if he will permit me; I do not wish to divert him at all. The proposition I submitted was that the original Lord Campbell act did not apply to death occurring by negligence on the high seas. I did not mean to say there have not been amendments; I express no opinion upon that at this time. The question, however, which I addressed to the gentleman was this: Did juries assess the damages in the case of the Titanic in the English admiralty court?

Mr. BRYAN. I will take that up in just a moment. The Lord Campbell act provides for death by negligence, and does not limit it to land or water. Its provisions extend wherever British authority extends, both on land and water, and has always so extended. Our employers' liability act limits its provisions to railroads, and the reason it does not apply to both boats and railroads in this country is because it is limited to carriers by railroad. Now, as to whether juries assess the damages under the Lord Campbell act, if the gentleman will look at the Times Law Report for Friday, July 11, 1914, in the case of O'Brien against the Ocean Steamship Navigation Co.

(Ltd.), being one of four cases brought to recover damages for death in this particular Titanic disaster, he will find it noted there that a jury held there had been no negligence in the navigation of the ship but there had been negligence in the speed of the ship; and while I have not those reports before me, he will find them in volume 29, page 629, of the Times Law Reports; and there is no question at all that the gentleman is mistaken in that matter; and while, as I say, I defer to the gentleman's ability on law matters, I do not defer to the gentleman's statement in reference to that fact. He is mistaken there. They were tried by jury.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman will permit me, I did not say it was not so done. I simply asked the gentleman if he was certain that that was the fact.

Mr. BRYAN. I am certain.

That is the way England took care of that matter, and that is the kind of relief the English law gives. In this country, after living long under the common law, we developed somewhat, and every State in the Union, nearly, passed laws fixing liability in case of death. Of course it was an abhorrent notion that you could burn a man nearly to death and he could get damages for that; that if you paralyzed him he could get damages for that, if he still lived; but if the breath of life went out of him, then there was no liability to his successors. That was an abhorrent idea, but it originated in the notion that the cause of action ended with the death of the person injured. But in all of our States, practically, we changed that old rule, and we created State statutes fixing liability upon any person who is responsible, through negligence, or who, through negligence, becomes responsible for the death of an individual, that liability to go to the descendants. And, of course, we had lots of legislation all over the country on that subject, and then finally it came up to Congress, and Congress passed an employers' liability act, and we provided that in all cases of injury and death in interstate commerce caused by carriers by railroad there should be that liability, and we passed an up-to-date statute, involving all personal injuries in interstate commerce by railroads. Of course it is subject to very material improvement, but that statute was adopted as affecting interstate commerce in this country, and we limited it, however, with great care and caution to railroads. Now, if we had left that limitation out, like the Lord Campbell act did, and merely passed an act that any person who should be responsible for the negligent taking of the life of another should be responsible in damages to the dependents of the person injured, then it would have affected a steamboat just the same as a railroad train.

Mr. VAUGHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. VAUGHAN. Does the gentleman think the Congress of the United States has the power to pass a general death-injury statute such as the States have passed?

Mr. BRYAN. We have the power to pass it affecting interstate commerce on railroads or on steamboats.

Mr. VAUGHAN. I understand that.

Mr. BRYAN. And we have the right to pass a law as to employers' liability on all steamboats and all vessels that sail the waters because of the constitutional provision which gives a special jurisdiction in admiralty matters.

Mr. VAUGHAN. The gentleman did not answer my question.

Mr. BRYAN. We have no right to pass a law that will govern the internal matters of a State.

Mr. VAUGHAN. Then it was by virtue of the power over interstate commerce that the act was passed applicable to carriers engaged in such commerce.

Mr. BRYAN. The steamboat that sails from New York to Savannah or Galveston is just as much engaged in interstate commerce as a railroad train that goes from New York to Savannah or Galveston, and we have a right to pass that act as to vessels carrying interstate commerce, for two reasons: First, because it is interstate commerce; and, second, because it is subject to admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. We have the right on those two grounds. But when we passed our law as stated we restricted it to railroads, and now boats go to sea and there is no national law establishing this liability.

But the matter went into the courts, and by a series of decisions it was determined in the first place that the New York statute applied. It was decided by Judge Addison Brown, of the United States District Court of the Southern District of New York, after citing a great string of precedents, that in effect the State law of New York should apply in a case of death—injury where the vessel was registered at New York; that the vessel was subject to the New York law. Then came a decision from Judge William H. Taft along the same line, and then a couple of Delaware decisions. And the steamboat companies found out that they had to try these cases for death at sea under the law of the land, under the law of the State from which they were registered, and that they had to go up before a judicial tribunal and face a jury of 12 men under the State law unless the injury was so great to the vessel and the claim so great that they faced practical insolvency, and then they could have them all clustered or gathered together in some one Federal court. Otherwise they had to meet a jury of 12 men under the State law.

Down in Mobile, Ala., for instance, if a man is injured on a vessel that sails from Mobile out into the Gulf of Mexico and is registered in the State, he can invoke the State law of Alabama and get judgment rendered under the laws of the State of Alabama. I do not know about Alabama, but the laws ought to provide up-to-date and modern provisions as to liability and as to negligence. If a boat sails out from New York, he can sue in the State of New York and can get judgment there before a jury of 12 men. He has that advantage. He has the advantage of an up-to-date law of the State. And in Puget Sound he can get his relief under the laws of my State, the State of Washington.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Gladly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the gentleman's objection to the bill the fact that it undertakes to give exclusive admiralty jurisdiction in cases where the death occurs on the high seas, or is it because in giving that exclusive jurisdiction you do not provide for the proper sort of relief and for jury trial?

Mr. BRYAN. My principal objection is it does not provide proper and adequate relief.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that the gentleman discussed this bill last summer. Have you prepared a substitute that does give relief?

Mr. BRYAN. I have prepared a bill, H. R. 12807, and have introduced it, practically following the very wording of the employers' liability law, and if any man can stand up here and tell me why a steamboat should have the privilege of burning a man to death and not be liable under the same kind of rules and restrictions as a railroad is liable if it burns a man to death I will get some informtion.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BRYAN. Gladly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman believe there should be no limitation as to the extent of liability for death or injury occurring aboard ship?

Mr. BRYAN. That is another question.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is one of the questions that occur when you ask as to whether there is any difference between a railroad and steamboat. I would like to get your opinion.

Mr. BRYAN. I will give my opinion on that. My opinion is that the steamboat ought to be just as liable, and there ought to be no limitation; that they ought to be compelled to take out their insurance; and that they ought to protect their workmen in the same way as the workmen on a railroad train are protected. That is my opinion. But if our limited liability statutes which are so extremely favorable to the steamboat lines are left on the statute book, nevertheless a man who gets hurt or the dependents of a man who gets killed ought to have the full limit of relief under modern ideas as to liability and as to negligence and restrictions of common-law remedies as on a railroad, and then when he gets his judgment, the steamship company may avail itself of its right under the limitation statutes, which permit them to limit the liability to the value of the vessel and current revenues of the trip.

As to whether we repeal these laws or not, that is another question. But while we are trying these damage suits the men are entitled to equal consideration with railroad employees. For instance, a man gets a judgment for $10,000 from the Ocean Steam Navigation Co., and the Ocean Steam Navigation Co. owns several vessels, or the liability in a particular case is $96,000, and there are no other claims, the matter of liability is nothing to him in that case. He does not care anything about it, but the matter of liability becomes of great importance when there is a wholesale number of claimants, when the steamship company engages in the wholesale drowning of seamen and workmen. The individual claimant for one judgment, or a small judgment, does not care particularly about these liability laws that the gentleman mentions, and therefore we have two different, separate questions, and we are not talking primarily about the question of a limited liability.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman dismisses it as of no consequence or as secondary consequence, and yet the very case he indicates, that of the Titanic, shows that it is frequently of infinitely more importance than any other question. It is of great importance, even if you have all the rights under the sun, to get a judgment, if the judgment when you get it is of only limited value.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman says that the case I cited, that of the Titanic, does not sustain my contention. I say that the case of the Titanic does sustain my contention. If there were a number of claimants in the case of the Titanic, the limitation of liability allowed under the laws is of great importance. If there had been only one claimant for a small amount, the limited liability statute would have no effect. I want to cut out the limiting of liability, and I want to make the steamship companies assume their liabilities. But first and foremost I want a decent employers' liability law as to seamen and as to men who work on boats, the same as for the men who work on railroad trains.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell us what there is in the rules in admiralty touching the right to recovery that he objects to, because the effect of this bill as prepared is simply to extend the right that would exist in admiralty where there was injury but not death to a case where there was death? Now, what is there touching the enforcement of the rights of a man to recover for injury in the admiralty law that the gentleman thinks is unfair or old or obsolete or what not, as he says?

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman asks what I object to in the admiralty law. Before answering that I think what the gentleman means is, What is there that I object to in the present procedure, the present relief that is granted?

Mr. SHERLEY. I mean just what I said.

Mr. BRYAN. Then the gentleman does not say what he ought to mean. The present admiralty law does not cover the situation. The present admiralty law is not exclusive. The State laws of the several States——

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, if the gentleman will permit, I do know what I wanted to say, and I did say what I wanted to. What I meant was not the State law, but this law that the gentleman is objecting to, because to a limited extent it excludes State jurisdiction. I asked the gentleman to point out what there was in the admiralty law that he objected to.

Mr. BRYAN. My objection to the present admiralty law is that when a man comes in with his claim he gets no jury trial. So far as that is concerned he has no relief at all, or his dependents have no relief, in the admiralty court in case of death, and for that reason this matter has no application to the admiralty court. It is the State courts that are involved, and in view of the fact that there is no admiralty law for death you can have your case tried under the State law, which is more liberal than all the admiralty rules in practically every case; I think in every case where State laws have been passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. What I am trying to get at is, what in the admiralty practice in the Federal court does the gentleman object to?

Mr. BRYAN. I have just told you.

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The gentleman simply dismissed it by saying there is no jurisdiction in death cases, which this bill is intended to cure. Now, I ask the gentleman, in suits for injuries—not for death—what there is in the procedure in admiralty cases that he objects to?

Mr. BRYAN. Injuries less than death?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. But that has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. SHERLEY. It has a good deal to do with this case. This bill proposes to give jurisdiction in admiralty to cases where a man is killed.

Mr. BRYAN. Killed only.

Mr. SHERLEY. Heretofore admiralty jurisdiction went only to injury cases, and not to death cases. Now you propose to put the death cases on practically the same plane as injury cases. Therefore it becomes important to inquire what there is that is wrong touching the method of trial or the rights of litigants in cases of injury and not of death, so that we may correct it in both cases. That is the meat in the whole discussion.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course the bill that I introduced, and which the gentleman asked about, does involve cases less than death. In discussing that proposition of putting all those cases under the employers' liability law, what I object to in the admiralty procedure as applied to personal-injury suits in the first place is that there is no jury trial.

The Federal judge can call a jury if he wants to, but that is merely advisory, and the ordinary man will say that he might just about as well let his claim go as to try it before a Federal judge, who he feels, whether justly or not, is unfriendly to him. The average workingman, engineer, or fireman who gets seriously hurt on board a vessel does not like very much to submit his case to a judge who ordinarily is a member of various organizations to which he has no access; and he prefers, under the same rules and regulations that the gentleman from Kentucky would prefer, a jury of 12 men. That is fundamental, and that is enough if there were no other reason to apply.

In our Federal employers' liability law we made these provisions. We did not fix it so that a Federal judge would try a case where an engineer was killed or injured in a wreck, but we fixed it so that a jury of 12 would try it. So, when we come to this proposition, we ought to pass an employers' liability law that will really mean something. We ought at least to put into it all the relief that is provided in the employers' liability law for railroad employees.

But outside of that, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has brought into this discussion—and I suppose if he had not brought it in I would have done so—the question of the limited liability. There is a section of this bill keeping in force that limited liability statute which enables ships to escape any greater liability than they now have. For instance, the Standard Oil Co. puts a ship under the American flag. You will say, "My! The Standard Oil Co.! John D. Rockefeller! That is all right. You can go on that ship with safety." But perhaps the ship is called the Leviathan, and there is organized a Leviathan Co., which owns nothing in the world except that one ship; no other property. Then that ship goes out and meets with another ship, and she has only half enough of a crew on board, and down she goes, and the liability then is limited to that ship and her value at the bottom of the ocean.

Mr. WEBB. Will my friend suggest how that evil could be remedied? Practically every ship is incorporated, and all the corporation owns is the ship and its freight, and when the company comes into court and surrenders the hull of the ship and the freight, what else could you get under the liability laws? The company has surrendered all the property it owns.

Mr. BRYAN. It would take more of an enactment than I have suggested, or even than I have put in my bill, to get around this separate incorporation; but that is done only to escape certain negligence provisions. Take, for instance, the Nantucket. She went down. There was a little fellow named Kuehne, who took off his belt and gave it to a lady passenger, and he went down with the ship. Now, when the aged parents of this boy seek money recompense for their loss, they are told to go and get the ship at the bottom of the ocean. I think there ought to be additional legislation to cover a case of a separate incorporation of one ship, so that every ship that goes out on the ocean shall have some kind of liability and some kind of backing that is responsible.

Then, on the Lakes; I was talking to one of the ablest men in the House a while ago about the Great Lakes—he is not now on the floor—and he said this law would not affect the Great Lakes; that the States which border on the Great Lakes and have up-to-date employers' liability laws will still try them. Of course the gentleman is mistaken. The term "high seas" as here used is a very broad term. The bill starts out with the proviso—

That whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas, the Great Lakes, or any navigable waters of the United States—

And so forth. Of course the Great Lakes are included in that, and then there is a section here that attempts to preserve the jurisdiction of the States. That is section 8. Here is what it says:

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the rights of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory or in the courts of the United States other than in admiralty to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in case of death from injuries received elsewhere than on the high seas.

Note the words "elsewhere than on the high seas."

That does not preserve the jurisdiction of the States that border on the Great Lakes, because the Great Lakes are a part of the high seas.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reference in the bill to the Great Lakes in connection with the high seas would separate the Great Lakes from being included in the larger term.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that would depend on the interpretation by the courts as to what is meant by "high seas." If the court decides that the high seas include the Lakes, then this State jurisdiction is eliminated under the term which involves an exception:

Elsewhere than on the high seas.

The United States Supreme Court, in the case of United States v. Rogers (150 U. S., p. 249), has held that the Great Lakes are high seas; and then you can not be sure what the decision would be, for instance, as to Puget Sound. There is a great body of water going north into another country, and while it is true enough that inland rules apply after you get to a certain point, at the same time, as to whether Puget Sound would be a part of the high seas or not is a subject for dispute. I do not believe that the citizens of this country who live on the borders of these Lakes want to give up the right to try these cases before their State courts unless a decent Federal law is passed, and this law, in my opinion, is not that kind of a statute. I think this law is a disgrace to those who are its proponents. It is too far out of date. The proper way to do it is through a workmen's compensation act that gives a man damages for an injury without regard to negligence, which gives him a fair compensation.

This provides, in the first place, only for his "pecuniary loss sustained." You could not get that into a modern statute in any State where the people have any say so in a thousand years. They would not put it for "pecuniary loss sustained." Under that if a man is killed and his fraternal insurance amounts to $500 or $1,000, and this is passed, and his case went to trial in court, the damages would be $2,000, but $1,000 is deducted for the amount of the insurance received, so that $1,000 is the pecuniary loss sustained. If the man's damages amounted to $1,000 and his insurance to $1,000, his dependents would get nothing.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. Does the gentleman know of any State where those deductions are made?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I think you would never find that incorporated into the statute of any State, but that is what this Congress is trying to do.

Mr. DECKER. I am asking for information. I am not familiar with any law that will allow them to deduct the life insurance where they are recovering for pecuniary loss. What law is the gentleman familiar with under which they can do that?

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from Washington permit me to answer that?

Mr. BRYAN. I will yield gladly to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. That is a question I was coming to by and by. In some States the constitutions provide for the recovery of exemplary damages. The right to recover such damages is given by the constitution of Kentucky, the constitution of the State of my learned friend, Mr. SHERLEY. This is the language quoted by Sutherland on Damages:

> Whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or wrongful acts, then, in every such case, damages may be recovered for such death from the corporations and persons so causing the same.

Then Mr. Sutherland says:

> This language includes not alone compensatory damages but all varieties of damages known to the law. In Washington, under a statute allowing the recovery of pecuniary or exemplary damages, both can not be recovered in every case, but in case of mere neglect the pecuniary loss measures the recovery; in case of injury caused by moral or legal wrong amounting to willfulness, exemplary damages may be added.

Now, suppose that the owner of a steamboat should willfully ignore the provisions of a law for the safety of passengers, as was the case in the horrible catastrophe of the Slocum, in New York Harbor, when 1,100 people were burned to death. The only damages under this proposed statute would be the actual financial damages. The corporation owning the steamboat might be worth a hundred million dollars and have willfully violated the statutes of a State, yet you could not collect exemplary damages.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COOPER. After I have read one passage more from Sutherland. He says:

> Under the Alabama act, which provides for the recovery of such damages as the jury may assess, the damages are punitive and exemplary in every case—punitive of the act done, and intended by their imposition to stand as an example to deter others from the commission of moral wrongs or to incite to diligence in the avoidance of fatal casualties—the purpose being that the preservation of human life, regardless of the pecuniary value of a particular life to the next of kin under the statutes of distribution.

Now I will yield to the gentleman, with the permission of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where was the Slocum burned?

Mr. COOPER. In New York Harbor.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This statute does not apply. It only applies to damages occurring on the high seas.

Mr. COOPER. That is true, but there might be a boat of the same character on the high seas.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What I mean is that you have your State remedies against the corporation, as in the case of the Slocum, if this bill passes, as you have it if it does not pass.

Mr. COOPER. My friend will readily understand that there might have been a boat on the high seas as regardless of the law as was the Slocum in the harbor of New York. I am showing, or having the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] infer and understand, that not alone are people negligent in the harbor of New York, but that they have a great deal more opportunity to take passengers out on the high seas and escape detection for negligence than they have to escape detection for negligence in the harbor of New York.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is entirely right about that. This law may not be perfect, but it gives a remedy where we have none now. It gives a right to sue in admiralty for death occurring on the high seas, where we have no right to sue in admiralty now.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman say there would have been no right, in the case of the Slocum disaster, if the boat had been out a little on the high seas beyond the harbor?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, no; I do not say that.

Mr. BRYAN. They could have sued under the State law.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; the admiralty court may apply the State law.

Mr BRYAN. And that is what is the matter with the shipowners. They do not want the court to apply the State law. The State law is too strong—claimants get larger judgments. They want to save money and deprive the injured of their due, and they come down here with a learned proctor in admiralty, who parades a nicely prepared opinion that he is going to give something to claimants and to widows and orphans they have not got, and then he fixes up an antiquated law which if it was introduced in a Chinese assembly 2,000 years before Christ would have been 2,000 years behind the time then.

It is an outrage to attempt to pass a law like this at this time, and it will never be any credit to the gentleman who introduced it, to those who pass it, or those who answer the roll call in its favor. It does not accord with the ideas of this day and time, and for that reason I oppose it more than the matter of State jurisdiction. I am willing to give to the Federal courts exclusive jurisdiction in the waters of the country. I am willing to give them exclusive jurisdiction, at least in respect to boats engaged in interstate commerce, or even of all boats, provided they have a decent law. I do not care so much who has jurisdiction. I want a good law. The reason why I support these other measures and do not listen to this State-rights business is because I want a good law, and I believe the Federal Government can enforce a good law; but this law will never be any good, no matter how long it stands on the statute books, if it is ever enacted.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] to the Virginia law upon this subject and what is attempted especially by this bill to prevent—that is, the recovery of anything except pecuniary loss in case of death. Sutherland on Damages, paragraph 1263, says:

> The Virginia statute permits the jury to award such damages as to it may seem fair and just. Under it punitive damages may be awarded, and the jury may consider the mental suffering of those for whose benefit the action was prosecuted. A later case, however, treats the question as an open one. The same conclusion was announced in a California case awarded under a like statute; but that case was soon disapproved, and the rule declared to be that in estimating the pecuniary loss of a wife for the death of her husband the jury may consider whether or not the deceased was a good husband, able and willing to provide well for his wife.

And under the constitution of Texas we find this provision, paragraph 1264 of Sutherland:

> The constitution of Texas provides that in cases of willful homicide there shall be responsibility for exemplary damages and a jury may be directed to award such damages.

But this bill provides that in a case of willful homicide on the high seas, death by wrongful act, nothing but compensation for pecuniary loss can be awarded. Not only that, but I direct the attention of the gentleman from Washington to the fact that right across the page in this bill is a provision that the people who are after damages because some one has killed a relative or caused his death through gross negligence or vicious malignant attack—the people who are suing for damages are likely to have the award of the jury reduced by the court, because the decedent may have been negligent.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me further?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, how much more time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield for a moment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will just say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that the question to which I was addressing myself was not at all the question of pecuniary loss. I was simply discussing the question of jurisdiction, the question of how far Lord Campbell's act was applicable. I know very well the law of Virginia. We have in Virginia in addition to compensatory damages what we call punitive or exemplary damages.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. There has been a difference of opinion as to whether the right to recover compensatory or exemplary damages survives.

Mr. WEBB. That is the point I wanted to ask the gentleman from Virginia, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, also.

Mr. COOPER. Exactly. I called attention to these laws in certain States, notably Texas and others, in which it is expressly provided that the right of exemplary or punitive damages does survive. In some of the States the jury may be instructed to award them.

Mr. WEBB. I wanted to say I think there are very few States that permit the recovery of punitive damages in case of death. In other words, I think there are very few States, if any, that allow the executor to sue for the value of the deceased's life and also recover punitive damages for his death or the bringing about of his death.

Mr. BRYAN. Is the reason why you push this little blanket one-page statute here to do away with the possibility of anybody in any State getting punitive damages? Does the gentleman think it is wrong?

Mr. WEBB. No; we desire to open the courts of the United States to any suitor who wants to sue for death on the high seas. That is just the object of this bill. We want to apply the Lord Campbell act or some other act that will give a citizen of the United States the right to go into a United States court and sue for a death that occurred by negligent act on the high seas.

Mr. BRYAN. Why will not the gentleman accept as a substitute for this bill the employers' liability law that applies to railroads and let us apply the same meed of liability to a steamship company of John D. Rockefeller that you would apply to a railroad owned by John D. Rockefeller? Will the gentleman agree to such a substitution?

Mr. WEBB. Of course the gentleman could not draw a bill now that would apply——

Mr. BRYAN. I say, and I challenge successful contradiction——

Mr. WEBB. And the gentleman could not get 100 votes for it here.

Mr. BRYAN. I know I could not get the votes; I admit that. All you have to do is to cut out the limitation involved in the term "carriers by railroads" in the Federal employers' liability act, and it will apply to everybody under the jurisdiction of the United States. It will apply to land and water alike.

Mr. WEBB. If you did, you could not get it through, and what is the use of fooling with something which you can not get through?

Mr. BRYAN. When there is something that needs to be knocked on the top of the head, let us knock it. Let me show you something here that a little girl at the mangle down at the laundry can understand. She may not understand all the big words, but she can understand this: Here is your negligence in the employers' liability act passed by Congress when they could get 100 votes. A different party was in power and it got 100 votes then. I thought that party was reactionary; I thought that the Democratic Party was progressive, but this came up and it got 100 votes. That was before the Democratic Party came in, this employers' liability law, but here is what was put in in reference to negligence:

SEC. 2. That in all actions hereafter brought against any common carriers to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery where his contributory negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross in comparison, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee. All questions of negligence and contributory negligence shall be for the jury.

Now let me read the other.

Mr. WEBB. Just a moment. This bill preserves that, too. It is progressive in that it destroys the effect of contributory negligence.

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask the gentleman to let me read the bill. Section 5 of the bill the gentleman is attempting to pass through here for steamships provides:

That in suits under this act the fact that the decedent has been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar recovery, but the court shall take into consideration the degree of negligence attributable to the decedent and reduce the damages accordingly.

Then the Federal employers' liability act denies the railroad company any relief for the employee's negligence where it is violating a statute when the accident occurs. But this urgency bill, for the relief of the Shipping Trust and the robbery of unfortunates who may be deprived of the relief they now have, is silent on that point. The learned proctor and corporation lawyer who wrote this bill did not think of that feature.

I want to know why these people, and the learned proctor in admiralty, who I suppose has been in the employ of steamship companies a great part of his life, should draw this bill which he sent to this committee in such a way as to leave out these provisions to the effect that the damages shall be assessed by a jury in proportion to the amount of negligence where the contributory negligence was slight and that of the employers was greatest in comparison. The railroads run through North Carolina and people get killed once in a while on railroad crossings, and the people get injured, and the brakemen and other employees are injured, and you want to apply some kind of restriction there, and you say where the corporation is grossly negligent the jury can come in and give them a little taste of their own medicine, can take into consideration the gross negligence of the corporation, but you do not want to mention that about a steamboat. Why not? I know the gentleman does not care particularly, does not defend these steamboat companies particularly; but this was a learned man, this Mr. Putnam, who drew this act and made this report and wrote all the documents that have been submitted here. He is a prominent member of the American Bar Association, and ex-President William H. Taft is president of the American Bar Association. I do not suppose he ever saw this act or ever paid any attention to it; but these are two great men, very great men.

I suppose this Judiciary Committee believe turn about is fair play, and they say to themselves, "Have we not given Samuel Gompers all he wanted and the American Federation of Labor all they claimed?" You may suppose you can give passengers and workmen on the steamboats any kind of medicine and make them take it. And you come here before this House with that kind of negligence provision. The labor unions to-day are knocking at the doors of the House for a statute that will eliminate this negligence defense. Why should it be that when a man, because the night before he was up perhaps with his sick family and nervous and all disorganized, goes down to work the next day and does some little act of negligence and thereby loses his life, his widow can not recover anything because he was negligent, whereas the blooming bachelor, who had no responsibilities at home, went down steady and self-reliant and did not do any act of negligence and was killed and his sister or brother or other survivor can get the damages?

Mr. WEBB. Has your State abolished the contributory-negligence act?

Mr. BRYAN. We have wiped it out like a poisonous rattlesnake. Whenever a corporation kills a man out there we do not ask whether the man who is dead was guilty of some act of negligence or not. The relief is not for him. He is dead. The relief is for his widow. We do not want to leave her in poverty and dependent upon society. We give the relief and let the price be charged to the particular industry involved.

Mr. WEBB. I understand you want to make your law the national law of this country. You know that a majority of the States of this Union still permit the contributory negligence to be set up as a defense, and you ask this Congress now to adopt your very progressive compensatory law or the employers' liability law for the high seas.

Mr. BRYAN. I have had no hope of getting any such condescension from this Congress.

Mr. WEBB. Then you want nothing done?

Mr. BRYAN. I introduced a bill giving to these boats the same amount of negligence responsibility. Or I am willing to accept the same kind that you put on a railroad—that this Congress has included in its employers' liability act as to a railroad. I do not ask you to follow my State. But if you did, you would give the survivors of those who lost their lives in an accident what is coming to them.

Mr. WEBB. Then you would rather have nothing than to have this bill?

Mr. BRYAN. I certainly would. I would prefer to have the State laws.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman indicate why we have these big proctors in admiralty coming down here and passing a law if there was nothing? The shipowners are not protesting. They are generally pleased with nothing. They have something; that's the trouble. They have something that affects them. They have the laws of the several States, and the laws of the several States put them in position worse than this law will do. They want to get away from big judgments and juries. The only effect of this bill will be a relief to the shipping organizations, to ease them from a big share of their responsibility and liability. Do not you think that we have nothing. We have better laws than this law.

Mr. WEBB. You still want the doors of the courts of the United States to be closed to every citizen in his right or that of his dependents to sue for death on the high seas and forbid a man going into court and seizing the vessel and bringing an action in rem?

Mr. BRYAN. You are trying to shut a dozen doors. All the people who live in the cities around the Great Lakes, such as Chicago, Detroit, Duluth, and other cities, are not going to accept, I tell you, with any kind of pleasure this kind of a statute, that takes away from them the remedy that the progressive legislation of those States has given them and substitutes a lame, ineffective, corporation-made statute.

Mr. WEBB. The bill reserves that legislation. I suggest to the gentleman that he read the text of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. The bill says:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the rights of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory or in the courts of the United States other than in admiralty to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in case of death from injuries received elsewhere than on the high seas.

Mr. WEBB. That is right. If the injury occurs on the Great Lakes or on the navigable waters, the State will have the right to try those cases.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. If the gentleman will read it, here is the law, One hundred and fiftieth United States Reports, that establishes the contention that the Great Lakes are the high seas, and under the term "high seas" you do not know how much will be included. Puget Sound will be included in it, I think, and the Great Lakes are included in it. If the gentleman will consult the authorities, he will see that what I say is correct. This law will be the sole remedy on the Great Lakes if it is passed by Congress.

Now I ask the gentleman if he intends to vote on this bill this afternoon?

Mr. WEBB. I hope so, if the gentleman will not resort to obstructive tactics.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that a week devoted to the consideration of this bill would be profitably spent, and I hope it will go over one week until the next Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the gentleman that in my judgment this is a matter of too exceedingly great importance to be voted on and passed now under the present circumstances.

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman objects seriously to a vote now, I shall make a motion to adjourn and let it come up next Wednesday.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to renew the request I made this morning, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if this is for the purpose of expediting the consideration of appropriation bills, and not for any other purpose?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is to give another hour for the consideration of appropriation bills. I make the request at the suggestion of the gentleman in charge of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no objection if it is for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 17, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce submitting urgent estimates of appropriation for inclusion in the urgent deficiency bill for the fiscal year 1915 (H. Doc. No. 1364); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Postmaster General submitting urgent estimates of appropriation required for the Postal Service on account of the fiscal years 1914 and 1915 (H. Doc. No. 1365); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of State submitting an urgent deficiency estimate in the sum of $250,000 for payment to the Government of Panama the third annual payment, due February 26, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 1366); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting urgent estimate of deficiencies for contingent expenses of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 1367); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of the Interior submitting an urgent estimate of deficiency for contingent expenses, office of surveyor general of Alaska, for the fiscal year 1915 (H. (H. Doc. No. 1369); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Henry P. Field, administrator of Edward A. Field, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1370); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Henry H. Barroll v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1371); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of John Cook v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1372); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of James Biddle v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1373); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

11. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Alzina L. Harris, widow of Edgar B. Harris, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1374); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

12. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions of law in the case of Levi W. Dooley et al., heirs of Aaron T. Dooley, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1375); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

13. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions of law in the case of Asahel Jones v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1376); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

14. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Catharine Snyder, widow of Jacob Snyder, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No 1377); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

15. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Julia A. Ordway, widow of David S. Ordway, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1378); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

16. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Thomas A. Wakefield v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1379); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

17. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Albert G. Peabody v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1380); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

18. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Amelia King, widow of Prettyman King, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1381); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

19. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Patrick Tobin v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1382); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

20. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Ella Sowle, widow of Orlando T. Sowle, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1383); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

21. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Kate B. Boggs and Mary B. Russell, heirs of Walter B. Barnett, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1384); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

22. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Cornelia Cress, widow of Edwin Cress, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1385); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

23. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Isaac C. Sheaffer v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1386); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

24. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Charles E. Ferguson, son of Richard L. Ferguson, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1410); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

25. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Cleaveland F. Dunderdale v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1411); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

26. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of James H. Smith v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1412); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

27. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions of law in the case of Samuel A. Crawford v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1413); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

28. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Galelma Law v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1414); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

29. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of J. Webster Henderson, executor of Robert M. Henderson, deceased v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1415); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

30. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Margaret Augustine, administratrix of the estate of Henry Augustine, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1416); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

31. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Theodore G. Anderson, brother of Chauncey B. Anderson, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1417); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18173) to reinstate Frederick J. Birkett as third lieutenant in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1226), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 17, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we worship Thee. Thou art worthy to receive the adoration and praise of all men. When we live upon the low plane of life Thou dost seem afar off. When we behold Thy glory through the atmosphere of our own sinful hearts our vision fades into the light of common day. Give us a perception of Thy goodness and of Thy greatness that will appeal to every high motive and purpose of our lives, remembering that our lives lived in conformity to Thy will will reach the highest possible destiny. Every motive that Thou dost appeal to is an appeal to the strength and nobility of our own manhood. Guide us this day according to Thy will. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 94) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5849. An act to amend section 100 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 12750. An act relating to procedure in United States courts; and

H. R. 19076. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that to-morrow, following the speech of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], I shall address the Senate on the subject of nation-wide prohibition.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of sundry citizens of Minnesota remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to exclude anti-Catholic publications from the mails, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Synod of Minnesota, Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, in session at Duluth, Minn., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present two telegrams which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the following telegrams.

The Secretary read as follows:

GREENVILLE, TEX., December 15, 1914.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the ministers of Greenville, heartily commend you for your stand on prohibition during last spring and summer. About 4,000 people in Hunt County indorsed the Sheppard-Hobson resolution. The sentiment is even stronger for it now.

E. W. ALDERSON.
GRAHAM MCMURRAY.
A. A. DUNCAN.
W. J. HUMPHREYS.
C. C. YOUNG.
T. PERRIN.

WHEATLAND, WYO., December 15, 1914.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Wyoming State Grange, representing 21 subordinate and 2 Pomona granges, with 495 members, in annual session assembled here, unanimously adopted resolution favoring national constitutional prohibition, and most heartily thanking you for your joint resolution pending in Congress.

P. A. SHOPE,
Business Agent Wyoming State Grange.

Mr. JONES. I have a telegram signed by George W. Slyter and H. E. Warren, of Tacoma, Wash., stating that 280 voters of the Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church of that city have unanimously indorsed the Sheppard-Hobson prohibition resolution.

I also present a petition of Laurel Lodge, No. 99, International Order of Good Templars, of Everett, Wash., asking for the passage of the prohibition resolution. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I also present a petition from the Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church of Omak, Wash., favoring the settlement of the present European war by arbitration and the establishment of an international tribunal. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SALE AND SHIPMENT OF COTTON.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, under the head of petitions and memorials I send to the desk some correspondence, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The first letter that I shall ask the Secretary to read contains a series of questions with reference to cotton-trade conditions in Europe, which were contained in a number of letters addressed early in September to various cotton buyers, manufacturers, and dealers in Austria, Hungary, Germany, Belgium, Holland, France, Russia, and England. Thus far I have heard from correspondents in Russia and Germany, and I ask the Secretary to read the letter I sent to them and the replies, and then that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce for its further consideration. It is along the line of the communication which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] had read yesterday.

There being no objection, the letters were read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

GENTLEMEN: Will you be kind enough to answer the following questions:

First. What, in your opinion, will be the decrease and consumption of American cotton in your country on account of conditions incident to the European war?

Second. What stocks of American cotton are now on hand? What other kinds of cotton now on hand; that is, in the hands of spinners?

Third. What percentage in reduction of time, if any, are the mills in your country running?

Fourth. In case of a continuance of the war, in your opinion, will conditions in cotton manufacturing in your country improve as compared with the present conditions?

Fifth. What effect has the war had in your country in obtaining funds for the purchase of cotton?

Sixth. What is the present condition and outlook for available transportation to your country of the raw product and the exportation of your manufactured cotton goods?

Seventh. What effect, if any, has the war had upon the supply of available labor in your cotton manufacturing business?

Eighth. To what extent has the supply of American cotton in your country been affected by the disturbance of transportation facilities?

Ninth. Would adequate facilities for transportation increase the consumption of American cotton in your country?

I shall be under obligations to you for as prompt reply to these inquiries as you may be able to make.

HAMBURG, October 27, 1914.

Mr. E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your esteemed letter of the 29th ultimo has been duly received, and we answer the questions submitted as follows as well as we can under the present difficult conditions:

First. In our opinion, the consumption of American cotton in Germany will entirely depend upon the quantity available. If none can be obtained, it will be almost nil after present stocks are worked up

Second. It is impossible to say. Stocks of American cotton in spinners' hands will, in our opinion, be very small. The cost of last summer's spot cotton was very dear, and new crops were offered so much cheaper; in consequence spinners did not hold any reserve stocks.

Third. Spinners who are working for military purposes are running full time; others may, perhaps, stop three days per week or more.

Fourth. May, perhaps, improve some for certain qualities in consequence of insufficient supply.

Fifth. Owing to exporters in the United States of America asking cash payment in New York instead of drawing 60 or 90 days' sight on European bankers, funds for the purchase of cotton are very limited, but they would be plentiful could Germany obtain the cotton.

Sixth. The outlook for available transportation of cotton to Germany is very gloomy, and the same applies to the exportation of German manufactured cotton goods.

Seventh. The war has had the effect that, of course, many laborers have left the mills to go to war. However, there are enough remaining to work if the necessary cotton could be obtained.

Eighth. It has come to an almost complete standstill.

Ninth. Most certainly, could cotton be obtained from America, there would be a great increase in the consumption of American cotton in our markets.

Yours, truly,

VEREIN DER AM BAUMWOLLHANDEL
BETHEILIGTEN FIRM IN HAMBURG,
WM. FOERSTER, President.

BREMEN, November 2, 1914.

DEAR SIR: To your questions of September 29, we beg to address you with the following information:

First. Our cotton spinning and weaving mills are very busy on account of army orders. The general business of our mills is better than before the war. In the long run the consumption is hard to estimate; mills of higher goods go short time already, and many mills in the Elsass are closed up; for the greater part of our spinners much depends on how much American cotton will reach Germany. We do not think that less than two-thirds of the general consumption will be used if this cotton can be imported.

Second. Stocks of American cotton were in Bremen at the beginning of August about 300,000 bales, and are now reduced to about 110,000 bales, which are, but for a few hundred bales, sold and pledged to spinners. Stocks in the interior are small and mostly Indian cotton, on account of its cheapness two months ago compared to American growth. Spinners' supplies will, on the average, last till about the end of November.

Third. About 40 per cent of our mills returned to full time; those having army orders, especially weavers, are working overtime.

Fourth. On continuance of war we think conditions will even improve; of course all depends on what quantity of cotton will reach us.

Fifth. Funds for purchase of cotton are plentiful and readily furnished by banks heretofore engaged in cotton financing. All those concerned were well prepared and have not at all suffered by the war.

Sixth. German and English boats that have so far mainly carried American cotton to our harbors are, of course, out of question, and it will remain to neutral steamers to bring cotton to neutral ports, wherefrom it can safely be carried to our country. We do not doubt that in the event of larger cotton shipments, compared with former years, to certain ports the English Government will under some pretense capture such cotton, especially if such steamers belong to smaller European nations. We would prefer to secure for our requirements in shipments on American bottom, and with the whole of our trade look to the American Government to protect the interest of the Southern States, whose property mostly all shipments will remain until landed at neutral port or destination. German and Austrian consumption of about 3,000,000 bales of cotton will mean a good deal to American producers.

Seventh. Mills have replaced by others practically all labor men who were called to the army. Spinners employ to a large percentage women hands. Many workmen are applying for work, and any vacancies could easily be filled.

Eighth. With exception of the steamship Aurora and such cotton now obtained at Antwerp, no cotton has reached this country after declaration of war. Within the last month spot cotton rose sharply to now about 92 pfennigs per one-half kilogram, which equals in American money, Bremen spot terms, 19.64 cents per pound. Any receipts of new crop cotton via neutral ports would, of course, lower prices decidedly.

Ninth. Our agents in the mill centers inquire daily for offers of cotton, and from all reports obtained a good consumption, in our opinion, is assured for all such cotton reaching our country up to two-thirds of its usual consumption, this the more as East Indian and Egyptian cotton does not come into question at all.

Our country appears to bear all perils of this dreadful war—which was forced on us—easier and better than other countries concerned. Everybody is assisting to his best the Government, the military authorities, the Red Cross, or the poor people. Rich and poor people are more united than ever.

Banks have not changed their financial arrangements with importing or exporting firms; all payments are regularly made, and banks claim to even have excessive credits from their clients, for which credit balances they allow partly an interest of 4½ per cent per annum.

The question of cotton imports to this country remains absolutely with the American Government, and whether this is strong enough or willing to protect the interest and property of American citizens crossing the ocean under American or other neutral colors from English capture * * *.

Yours, very truly, ADDIX & CARDES.

MOSCOW, October 6, 1914.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry of the 20th September, we are able to give you the following information:

1. In consequence of the war the consumption of American cotton has decreased 100 per cent, as there is no importation of cotton from America.

2. The stocks of American cotton are rather low, but the Russian cotton industry is supplied by our own cotton from the Turkestan district.

3. The reduction of time our mills are running is about 50 per cent of our normal work time.

4. The continuance of the war will no doubt affect the cotton-manufacturing business of Russia.

5. The obtaining of funds for the purchase of cotton is rather difficult, and £10 are now worth 125 rubles, compared with 95 rubles in time of peace.

6. There has been an intention to import cotton via Vladivostock, Siberia; as to the exportation of manufactured cotton goods, our connections with Persia, Mongolia, and China have not been affected in any way.

7. The supply of labor has decreased 20 per cent.

8. In consequence of the disturbance of transportation, the importation of American cotton to Russia has been entirely stopped.

9. Facilities for transportation would no doubt increase the consumption of American cotton in Russia.

We remain, yours, truly,

LA SOCIÉTÉ DE LA MANUFACTURE D'INDIENNES,
"EMILE ZUNDEL," A MOSCOW,
E. B. KANUFF, Director.

VILHELM TORKILDSEN.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 6866) for the relief of Vilhelm Torkildsen, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 6972) granting a pension to Sarah E. Marsh; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS:

A bill (S. 6973) governing the reclamation of desert-land entries by the planting of trees, etc., and for other purposes (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 6974) for the relief of desert-land entrymen in Fresno and Kings Counties, Cal. (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 6975) for the relief of Minor Berry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 6976) granting an increase of pension to Luther M. Blackman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 6977) to amend section 4215 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JAMES:

A bill (S. 6979) granting a pension to George Troutman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. LODGE. I introduce a bill to increase the efficiency of the Army. It is an embodiment of the recommendations of the Secretary of War in his report. Similar bills perhaps, which I have not noticed, have been already introduced. I hope so. This measure no doubt can be much perfected by the committee, but I think the recommendation of the Secretary of War should be brought before the Senate. Therefore I introduce the bill and ask that it be read twice and be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I also ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 6978) to increase the efficiency of the Army was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to fill up to their full strength the existing organizations which compose the aggregate mobile Army force, as recommended in the report of the Secretary of War for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and that he be further authorized to appoint not more than 1,000 officers for commands in this increased force.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to discharge enlisted men from the service at the expiration of 18 months if satisfied that they are proficient in the duties of a soldier.

SEC. 3. That the men discharged in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of this act shall constitute a reserve and shall be subject to be called back to military service in time of war.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR JOSEPH FORNEY JOHNSTON.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, January 9, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of my late colleague, Hon. JOSEPH FORNEY JOHNSTON.

LITERACY TEST IN IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I shall move at the proper time to strike out from the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States lines 10, 11, and 12, on page 8. These words embrace the literacy test, so called, in the immigration bill and are as follows:

All aliens over 16 years of age physically capable of reading who can not read the English language or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish.

I ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday, the 5th day of January, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall, with the permission of the Senate, submit some remarks on the Public Health Service.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 5849. An act to amend section 100 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 12750. An act relating to procedure in United States courts; and

H. R. 19076. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR BACON.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice heretofore given by me, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia submits resolutions, which the Secretary will read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 503) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. AUGUSTUS OCTAVIUS BACON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the second resolution the Senate will proceed with the memorial services touching the character and high standing of the late Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is with consciousness of a great loss that I ask the Senate to consider the high character and distinguished public service of AUGUSTUS OCTAVIUS BACON. To say that by his death the Senate lost one of its ablest and most experienced Members feebly expresses the truth.

He came to the Senate splendidly prepared for the work. He was, when elected, a business man of unusual experience, an able lawyer, and a trained legislator and parliamentarian. He served in the Senate 19 years. During his service here he was tirelessly industrious; he realized that the entire business of the Nation, as well as the legislative hopes of the people, were covered by the measures considered by the Congress, and that the smaller size of the Senate gave opportunity for each Senator to contribute toward perfecting each measure with no limitation other than his ability and his capacity for labor.

Senator BACON gave to the duties of the Senate all of his ability and all of his time. Service as a Senator was the thought and the joy of his life. Accurate and painstaking by nature and by training, he brought to the service a devotion rarely equalled—never excelled.

Senator BACON was born October 20, 1839, in Bryan County, Ga., although the home of his parents was Liberty County. His ancestors upon one line were among the earliest settlers of Virginia. Upon another they were with the colony of Puritans who settled in Dorchester, Mass., in 1630. Some of the latter removed to Georgia in 1753 and founded what was known as the Midway Colony, afterwards called Liberty County. On both lines his ancestors were soldiers and officers in the Revolutionary Army. His father died before his birth, and his mother died before he was a year old. His parents are buried in the cemetery of the Midway Church, and he was born in the atmosphere of this church.

Liberty County, Ga., was the home of two signers of the Declaration of Independence, Lyman Hall and Button Gwinnett. Midway Church had among its pastors most distinguished men, among others Dr. J. S. K. Axson, grandfather of the wife of President Wilson, and Dr. Abiel Holmes, the father of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes and the grandfather of Mr. Justice Holmes. The mother of Theodore Roosevelt, who was the granddaughter of Gen. Daniel Stewart, was also a member of Midway Church. Midway Colony, or Liberty County, was the birthplace of John and Joseph Le Conte, the celebrated scientists.

Before he was one year old, Senator BACON was adopted by his grandmother. Under her guardianship he was carefully trained and received a good elementary education. At the age of 16 he entered the University of Georgia. He graduated from the collegiate department in 1859, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The following year he received from the institution the degree of Bachelor of Laws, having been a member of the first law class graduated by that university. He was a trustee of the University of Georgia at the time of his death and had been a trustee for many years. Few of his attachments were stronger than that which tied him to the State university. The University of Georgia successively conferred upon him the degree of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Laws, Master of Arts, and Doctor of Laws, the latter degree having been conferred in 1909. He selected Atlanta, Ga., as the place in which to begin the practice of his profession.

Before the end of 12 months thereafter he joined the Confederate Army and was made adjutant of the Ninth Georgia Regiment, in which position he served in Virginia during the campaigns of 1861 and 1862. He was afterwards commissioned as captain in the provisional army of the Confederate States and assigned to general-staff duty. He was married on April 19, 1864, to Miss Virginia Lamar, in Macon, Ga.

At the close of the war he was mustered out of service with the rank of captain. He then renewed his legal studies and began practicing law in Macon, Ga.

Senator BACON combined as a lawyer to an unusual degree ability to present with power a client's case to judges or to juries. He added to his thorough knowledge of law capacity as a business man, thus rendering his service to his client of unusual value. His success at the bar was almost immediate, and so long as he gave himself to his profession he enjoyed a lucrative practice and a most distinguished position among his legal associates.

For a number of years he was employed in practically every important case tried in middle Georgia, yet so great was his industry that in addition to his law practice and his legislative services he found time to prepare and publish in two volumes a digest of the supreme court decisions found in the first 40 volumes of the Georgia Reports, and so thoroughly and accurately did he do this work that his volumes at once found space in the libraries of the lawyers of the State.

In 1868, when Mr. BACON was 28 years old, he was nominated by the State Democratic convention for presidential elector. Two years afterwards he was elected a member of the Georgia House of Representatives. He was reelected to that body continuously for a period of 12 years, and was subsequently again elected for a term of 2 years. He was speaker pro tempore for two years and speaker for eight years. In 1883 he was a candidate for the governorship of his State, and in the Democratic convention he lacked but one vote of receiving the nomination, when a nomination would have assured his election. He was several times a member of the State Democratic conventions of his State, was chairman of the convention in 1880, and was delegate from the State at large to the Democratic national convention at Chicago in 1884.

In 1894 he was elected to the United States Senate by the Georgia Legislature. In 1900 he was nominated at a Democratic State primary for the Senate, and was afterwards unanimously elected to the Senate by the legislature, composed of Democrats, Republicans, and Populists. In 1906 he was again indorsed in the State Democratic primary, having no opposition, and was again unanimously elected to a third term in the Senate. He was the first Georgian to be elected to a third consecutive full term in the United States Senate. In 1912 he was again renominated in the State Democratic primary. Before the legislature met the amendment to the Constitution of the United States requiring the election of Senators by the people had become effective. When the legislature met it promptly provided machinery for the election of a Senator by the people. An election was called and Senator BACON had the distinction of being the first Member of the United States Senate elected by the people under the operation of the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. At the time of his death he had served but one year of his fourth term as United States Senator.

Senator BACON was physically strong and vigorous, the result of his simple and abstemious life and habits. He inherited a naturally strong mentality from his ancestors, and from his earliest youth until his death he assiduously cultivated and strengthened his natural mental powers. He was prepared for every line of work which came before the Senate, and, while he enjoyed it all, it is probably true that problems connected with our foreign relations were to him the most interesting. He was at the time of his death a member of the Committees on the Judiciary, Rules, Railroads, Private Land Claims, and Expenditures in the Post Office Department. He was a member of the Judiciary Committee for 17 years, of the Foreign Relations Committee for 15 years, and of the Committee on Rules for 13 years.

For many years he had been ranking Democratic member on each of these committees, while his party was in the minority in the Senate, and upon the Democratic reorganization of the Senate in March, 1913, he became chairman of the powerful Committee on Foreign Relations, for which he was so well fitted, and which position he preferred to any in the Senate.

Though the Republicans were in the majority in the Senate and Judge Archbald was himself a Republican, Senator BACON was unanimously chosen to preside over the Archbald court of impeachment—a splendid tribute to his ability and fairness. The hearing lasted continuously during several weeks, and there were 11 active lawyers representing the two sides, yet all of Senator BACON's rulings at this trial were sustained.

He considered punctuality in his attendance upon the sessions of the Senate as one of his highest duties. In a career of practically 19 years he was never absent a day from the Senate on account of either his personal business or his pleasure. The few times that he was absent were due to providential causes solely.

He had a deep concern for the proprieties of the Senate and held its traditions in high reverence. He was a vigilant guard and an able defender of the Constitution and was zealous in defending State rights.

He was a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution and took a deep interest in its affairs.

As a speaker he was most effective on account of his clear statements and convincing logic. His studious habits had developed and strengthened his reasoning powers and gave him a wide command of language. He seldom delivered a set oration, but was always ready to discuss and did discuss the varied subjects which came before the Senate, such as constitutional questions, treaties, foreign relations generally, the tariff, currency, railroad rates, the Panama Canal, representative government, the Philippines, Cuban independence, the relations between Congress and the executive departments, State rights, the election of Senators by direct vote of the people, education, and agriculture. In fact, he discussed practically every important subject that came before Congress during his service of about 19 years. He was especially strong in debate on constitutional questions and matters of foreign relations.

One of his most notable efforts was in opposition to the acquisition of the Philippines. He introduced a resolution "declaring the purpose of the United States not permanently to retain the islands, but to give the people thereof their liberty." In this connection he delivered a speech that aroused deep interest in the Senate and widely commanded the attention of the public not only in this country but abroad. The vote on the resolution was a tie, and it was defeated by the vote of the Vice President—the first occasion in many years where there had been a tie vote in the Senate upon any question and upon which a Vice President had voted.

Senators were much impressed with the strength of his argument on the "Relations between Congress and the executive departments"; that is, the power of the Senate to call for information from executive departments. A debate between Senator BACON and Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, on the constitutional power of the President and the Senate in making treaties was of unusual interest and attracted widespread attention. Referring to this debate, the Hartford (Conn.) Courant editorially commented as follows:

> Take down an old volume of the Congressional Globe and read one of the debates on foreign affairs in which Lewis Cass and John M. Clayton were pitted against each other—for instance, the debate (famous in its time) on the merits of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Then take Monday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read the report therein of the debate between Mr. BACON, of Georgia, and Mr. Spooner, of Wisconsin, on the constitutional powers of the President and of the Senate in treaty making. It would be scant praise to say that the Bacon-Spooner debate is the more readable of the two. For intellectual vigor, grip of the matter in hand, compactness, and the lucidity of statement, brisk alertness in the give and take of dialectic fence, and last, but not least, good English, the Bacon-Spooner debate is the abler of the two. Daniel Webster would have listened to every word of it attentively, with keen interest and pleasure; Calhoun and Clay also.

No Senator took a more active part in debate than Senator BACON when the Dingley tariff bill was before the Senate, and later, in 1909, when the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was under discussion. He made strong arguments in favor of material reduction of duties on all articles of universal and necessary use—embracing the whole range of things essential to the comfort, health, and convenience of the people.

Two speeches by the Senator on the amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators be elected by the direct vote of the people were powerful appeals in behalf of the rights of the States and the preservation of white supremacy.

While considering our foreign relations he was ever zealous to maintain the rights of his own country, while he was at the same time broad and brave enough to be just to other countries. The following resolution of sympathy was adopted by the Assembly of the Department of Santander, Colombia, on the Senator's death:

> Interpreting the patriotic sentiments of the worthy people whom it represents, and considering the expression of its sympathy and appreciation as an act of justice to those who have labored or labor for the supreme rights of the country and humanity, it deeply regrets the death of Senator BACON, who placed his highest abilities at the service of Colombia and the weak nations, battling for her in the Congress of his country in connection with events that took place in Panama.

Senator BACON died in Washington during the last session of the Senate. Funeral services were conducted in this Hall. When his body reached Georgia it was placed in the capitol. Public officials and the people of the State did honor to his memory. His body was carried to Macon, where he had so long lived, and was followed to the beautiful cemetery upon the banks of the Ocmulgee by his wife, his surviving daughter, his grandchildren, and throngs of friends.

The Legislature of Georgia at its session last summer passed a bill proposing an amendment to the constitution to create a new county to be called Bacon in honor of Senator BACON, and on November 3 of this year the people of the State, at a general election, overwhelmingly ratified the amendment. It was a distinct tribute to him that the county should have been created in his honor so soon after his death.

Senator BACON was splendidly equipped for service in this body. With a lofty sense of the responsibility resting upon a Senator, he discharged all the duties of the office. He was a great Senator in the broadest meaning of the word. He is missed by his colleagues. His place will be difficult to fill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, one of the severest penalties of advancing years is found in the loss of old friends, of those with whom we have lived, which accompanies the passing of the > Daughters of Time, the hypocritic days.

That these words which I have just spoken are both a commonplace and a truism only adds to their sadness. But the inevitable partings with friends brought by the gathering years are accentuated when the separation occurs between those engaged in a common labor or service. At every turn of the well-trodden path we look in vain for a familiar figure, and each incident of the day's work whispers that there is a vacant space by our side which never again can be filled. The oncoming ranks press forward, but they are not the same, and the gap made in the lives of those who survive does not close.

These thoughts come very keenly home to me when I speak of the death of Senator BACON. For 18 years we served here together in the Senate. For 15 years we sat facing each other as members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, where association is close and constant, and where political divisions rarely enter. I saw much of him, also, outside the Capitol, and I met him more than once in Europe, for he traveled wisely and widely when Congress was not in session. Thus I came to know him well. In this way he grew to be a part of my daily life. We belonged to different political parties; we had been bred in widely different schools of political thought; on questions involving party principles we were always opposed. Outside of party politics there were many matters, many aspects of life and of the conduct of life, upon which we agreed and sympathized. We had, as was inevitable, many clashes in debate, but nothing ever affected our personal friendship, which became constantly closer and more affectionate with the passing of the years.

I think, therefore, that I knew Senator BACON well and felt for him such affection that I can speak of him with both knowledge and justice. He came to the Senate with a high reputation as a lawyer, as a public man of large experience in his own State, and as a master of parliamentary rules and practice, derived from his service as speaker in the Georgia Legislature. He at once took a position in the Senate such as is rarely accorded to a new Member, and in a very short time was recognized not only as a leader on his own side but as a leader in the Senate. This was due not merely or chiefly to his ability or to his industry, or to his constant and unwearying attendance at the daily sessions and his watchfulness in regard to legislation, but to the fact that from the day he took the oath of office he was with all his strength and all his mind a Senator of the United States in the largest and highest sense. He felt a great pride in the Senate as a body. He was sensitive as to its rights and jealous of its constitutional prerogatives. He was not ready to suffer any detriment to come to either. It is owing to Senators like Senator BACON that the Senate has held throughout our history the place and power in our Government which belong to it, and when Senators become indifferent to the position of the body to which they belong, all the power and influence so long possessed by the Senate in our Government will fade away.

Senator BACON took an especial interest in all legal questions and in all questions affecting our foreign relations, upon which, owing to his large experience and his familiarity with other countries, both through reading and travel, he was peculiarly qualified to speak with authority.

We all recognize the loss caused by the death of Senator BACON to the public service of the country, to his State, and, above all, to the Senate. But the feeling that is uppermost in the hearts of those who served with him here for so many years is one of personal sorrow. He was a true and loyal friend when his friendship had once been given. He was a thorough gentleman, as incapable of a mean or low action as he was incapable, even in the asperities of heated debate, of mean insinuation or of a low personal fling at an opponent. He was kindly and affectionate always. More sorrows had fallen to his lot than is the usual portion of all who live out the term of years allotted by the Psalmist, but he faced his griefs and trials with a manly, cheerful courage, very pathetic to those who knew him well. Honored and mourned by his State and by the Nation, he leaves to us a gracious, happy memory of one who was an affectionate friend and an able and faithful servant of his country.

There is abundant cause here for both public and private sorrow. There is no place for lamentation. Senator BACON died full of years and honors, to use our consecrated phrase. In war and peace he had tasted of the great emotions which make life worth living. He had lived the life of his time, and he died in service, as he would have wished to die. Think how much that meant to him, how much it means to us. The waiting in helpless idleness for the inevitable close of all things earthly, the weary hours of the sick room, the "set, gray life and apathetic end," all these were spared to him. It is better to wear out than—> * * * to hang

> Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail,
> In monumental mockery.

To him, most fortunate, it was given to say, as it is permitted to so few to say when the years have gathered thick in serried ranks behind them:

> Blow, wind! come, wrack!
> At least we'll die with harness on our back.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, death is so full of solemn mystery that I am prone to stand silent in its presence. Before the Specter of death even thought itself is hesitant, and like unto a tired bird would fold its wings; and speech, however phrased, falls upon my ear like a note sounded from a chord out of tune. My speech, therefore, shall be characterized by brevity.

On Sunday last I attended the funeral services held in the Hall of the House in memory of Representative PAYNE, of New York. To-day we are assembled in the Senate Chamber to pay tribute to Senator BACON, of Georgia. Both were among the most conspicuous and potential American public men of our day. They lived and wrought in the same period, and largely in the same arena. Death came to them in the same way, and not many moons apart. Their lives, distinguished by many important and useful services to their country and mankind, were snuffed out, almost without warning, as suddenly and quickly as a flash, which for a moment lights some far off summer cloud, sinks into darkness and disappears.

Oh, the mighty mystery of it, and with what reverential awe the human mind contemplates this swift transition from life to death! And yet full well we know that after all and at best a single life is but a speck on the unfolding scroll of time, and but little more than that on the record of human experiences and history. This is as well true of those we call great as of those the least known. The span of life is so little—so insignificant—that it can hardly be counted as a separate space in the endless course of time. In truth, those accounted great—those who escape oblivion—come and go like all their kind of whatever degree, and the time comes in after years when the world no longer remembers the real great man as he was, as his contemporaries knew him, but remembers only his deeds; and remembers his deeds, if at all, only because of their influence and effect on the progress of the world and the fortunes of the human race.

This thought, Mr. President, that in time one will be remembered only for his deeds, should be a high and noble inspiration to every man to so live and strive that the sum of his life work may exert some influence for good upon the everlasting struggle of mankind for better things.

AUGUSTUS O. BACON was full to the brim with this inspiration. I shall not here trace the history of his career. That can be better done by the Senators from his own State, so long and intimately associated with him in private and in public life, or perhaps by some other friend who may care to speak with greater particularity. For me it is sufficient to speak in simpler vein—sufficient merely to avow my firm belief in his splendid courage and superb integrity. His ideals were high; his regard for any service he undertook was scrupulous; his devotion to duty was passionate and unflagging; his patriotism, wrought into his very life, flamed like a torch whose light fell upon his whole country and all its people. He loved books and music; he was traveler and scholar; he was soldier and statesman; he was a Christian and a gentleman. What more need be said? What more, indeed, can be said "to give the world assurance of a man"?

He will be sadly missed from our council and in our labors; and especially in this time of tremendous international stress, when we stand in ever-increasing need of learning, sagacity, and guidance, are we keenly conscious of our loss. But so it is, and it boots naught to lament. His life was well rounded, and more nearly reached the full limit of its possibilities than fate or fortune allows to most men. If, unlike Cardinal Wolsey, he did not sound all the depths and shoals of fame, he did sound many of them without wreck; and if he did not scale the highest peak, he did climb some of the loftiest without falling. Maybe it is better for him as it is. His work—constructive, upbuilding, and beneficent—has left an influence for good which will make his name a precious memory. His stalwart form is crumbling into dust, but his spirit, his soul, has entered upon new and nobler activities in a higher and infinitely better sphere. How do I know? Only because I still believe in the eternal Triune God my mother told me about as I knelt at her knees—that sweet and sacred altar of my childhood faith.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, when Senator BACON passed away to his final rest on the 14th of February, 1914, in the seventy-fifth year of his age and in the maturity of his power, the Senate lost in him one of its strongest, ablest, and most efficient Members, one to whom we could always look for valuable advice, information, and instruction. Gifted by nature with a vigorous intellect, which he developed and fortified by a broad and liberal education, he was well equipped in his youth for the active and strenuous duties of life. What happened to so many young and promising men, North and South, on the eve of the great struggle which began in 1861 happened to him. Though educated and trained for the pursuits of peace, yet his first active and pronounced work was that of war, that of an officer in the Confederate Army, in which he proved himself an able, courageous, and efficient officer, faithful to the end to the cause which he had espoused. In 1861, from the heights back of Arlington, in his Confederate uniform, he beheld the dome of that Capitol which he entered as a United States Senator in 1895. The war had exhausted and impoverished the South, and the problem of reconstruction retarded to some extent the work of recuperation. It was not altogether an easy task for the returning soldiers of the North to resume the avocations of peace, and it must have been much harder and much more trying and difficult for the soldiers of the South. The former returned to a prosperous country, while the latter returned to a country where stagnation and paralysis, as a result of the war, prevailed. It was under such circumstances and conditions that Senator BACON embarked in the practice of law in 1866, the year following the close of the war, and in the period of reconstruction. While by intellect and training a thorough, able, and most conscientious lawyer, I can readily conceive that under the circumstances he found it at first uphill and not very remunerative work; but his ability and persistency in due time, as the country gradually recuperated, met with its reward, and he soon became one of the leaders of the bar in his State. As a lawyer he was painstaking, thorough, and honest. He was not a mere case lawyer, but one who was versed and well grounded in the fundamental principles of jurisprudence. He was a close student of our constitutional law, and believed in adhering to its fundamental principles, its checks and balances. He was of a conservative temperament and trend of mind, and hence his opinion on great constitutional questions was deliberately formed and of great value.

After having firmly established himself as a lawyer and becoming well known for his proficiency and skill in that calling, at the instance of his people he entered the political arena of his State as a member of its legislature, in the lower house, where he served for 14 years in all, 8 years of that time as speaker and 2 years as speaker pro tempore.

As a legislator he was safe, sound, and moderately conservative, with a talent for constructive and remedial legislation. As a presiding officer he was patient, fair, and impartial, aiming to keep the deliberations of the body over which he presided within the pale of parliamentary law. In the legislature he was looked up to as a guide and leader whom it was safe and best to follow. He was no truculent time-server nor weather-vane gazer. He stood for what he believed was just, right, and for the public welfare.

The people of Georgia approved of his course and his work, and as a token of their approval in the fall of 1894 elected him to the United States Senate for the term commencing March 4, 1895. He was thrice reelected, and passed away in the first year of his last term. He was the first Senator elected by a popular vote of the people under the recent constitutional amendment.

Few, if any, have ever entered this body better equipped for the great work entailed on its Members, who are not only acting as legislators but as advisers of the President in the matter of our diplomatic affairs and in connection with appointment to office. He was assigned, among other assignments, to the important Committees of Judiciary and Foreign Relations, and in the great work of these committees he took a prominent and leading part. In the proceedings on the floor of the Senate he took a leading and pronounced part from the very beginning. He was nearly always in his seat, vigilant and watchful.

Nothing escaped his attention. Though not an orator in the common acceptation of the term, it can be truly said that he was a first class and ready debater, thorough and exhaustive, ready to take and give blows. But he was always fair, honorable, and manly. There was nothing rough or rude in his behavior to an antagonist. He was always the thorough gentleman, true to his cause, his training, and his environment. To me he always appeared in public and in private as a connecting link between the old and the new South. In his attitude and demeanor he seemed to me like one of the gentry of the old South infused with the progressive spirit and aspirations of the new South. Faithful to his past and the past of his country, he was nevertheless truly alive to the great future of our country and ready to give it a helping hand both North and South.

All of us who served in the great Civil War had much to learn and unlearn of each other; and we came out of that strenuous and drastic school wiser and better Americans and with more charity and good will for each other, and we all came to ultimately realize, as the wounds of the war were healed, that the God of battle had, after all, conferred a great blessing upon us in making us again a reunited country, stronger, more vigorous, and more progressive than ever. Our friend, the deceased Senator, died as zealous in the welfare of our common country as any who were opposed to him in the great struggle.

When at the beginning of this Congress the Democrats attained the ascendancy in this body, Senator BACON was at the head of his party upon the Committees on Judiciary and Foreign Relations, and he had the option of taking the chairmanship of either of these committees. He selected that of Foreign Relations, and it seemed to me that he chose wisely. While he would have made a most excellent chairman of the Judiciary Committee, yet his tastes, his aspirations, and, above all, his studies led him in the direction of our foreign affairs.

He had to my knowledge, after entering the Senate, been a close student of international law and of our diplomatic relations, and as a consequence was in a high degree qualified for the chairmanship of this important committee. And it was his ambition to take a leading part in the adjustment of our foreign affairs and diplomatic relations, and I feel sure that had his life been spared he would have been most helpful to the administration of his party in guiding it in its relations with foreign nations.

I remember very well when, during the first session of this Congress, there was a disposition in certain quarters to have our country resort to armed intervention in the affairs of Mexico, how he frowned upon such a course, and how anxious he was to avoid everything that savored of war. It seems sad, and it must have seemed sad to him, in his last conscious moments, to be cut off by death at the very threshold of the new duties and great work he had assumed. Death, however, is no respecter of human wishes and human aspirations. The summons comes oftentimes when we least expect it and when we are reluctant to go, but we are, on the whole, safe in assuming that the dispensations of an All-Wise Providence are for the best, and in saying: "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in Thy sight."

Fifty-four Senators, who were Members of this body when Senator BACON first entered, have since passed away, and 44 Senators and one Vice President have since that time died while in the public service. I append a list of these latter to my remarks. It is a most notable roll of the men who have been our guides and leaders during this generation. Next to the last on this roll is our departed associate, to whom we pay our tribute on this occasion. He has left us, but the example he gave and the results of the work he wrought abides as an instructive and hope-engendering lesson for us and for our posterity.

AUGUSTUS O. BACON, Georgia, February 14, 1914.
William O. Bradley, Kentucky, May 23, 1914.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, Senator BACON died while the Senate was in session. When it was suddenly announced in the Senate that Senator BACON was dead, it was a great shock to all. A solemn stillness pervaded this Chamber. Sorrow was depicted upon every face and all realized that a great man had fallen, one whose place would be very hard to fill, and the State of Georgia and the country had lost a great leader.

Now, when we have stopped the wheels of legislation and have set apart this hour to pay honor to his memory, to pay to him the last tribute we can ever pay in this world, I, as his friend, desire to add my simple tribute to his memory.

I admired him for his ability. I held him in high esteem for his character and his services to his country. I admired him for his statesmanship and devotion to duty. I esteemed him for his friendship.

When I came to the Senate 12 years ago he had served his State here for 8 years, and his reputation then had been established as one of the leaders of the Senate. I confess that at first my estimate of him, from a personal standpoint, was shattered. I have noticed since that time that with the new Senators at first he was not popular. He appeared unapproachable and unsympathetic, but to the older Senators who knew him this was not so.

His paternal ancestors were Puritans, having first settled in Massachusetts in 1630. Upon this stock was grafted the cavalier, his maternal ancestors having settled in Virginia. Thus he had combined in him the dignity, austerity, cold, irresponsive, and retiring manners of the Puritan with the courage, gentleness, open, frank, positive, and refined qualities of the cavalier.

It was not long before my first impression was dispelled and that better and lovable side came out most vividly. Those who came in close touch with him not only admired but were personally fond of him. All respected him and esteemed him for his ability as a lawyer, a debater, and a constructive statesman.

Few States since the foundation of the Government have been more ably represented upon this floor than the great State of Georgia, but she has never been represented by a more useful Senator than Senator BACON. He was not equal in ability to Robert Toombs; he did not have the logic and was not possessed of the great reasoning faculty and statesmanship of Alexander Stephens; he was not as great and eloquent a debater as Ben Hill; but he was a splendid debater, logical and at times eloquent. He was an able lawyer, superior to either one of these great Senators as a parliamentarian, and was more diligent and untiring in his work upon committees. If all of these had been Members of this Senate at the same time, AUGUSTUS O. BACON would not have suffered by comparison. In any parliamentary body on earth he would have been recognized as a leader among leaders. He was not a colossal figure in the public eye. He was by no means commonplace, and no one would place him in the mediocre class.

No Member of this Senate was more regular in his attendance upon the meetings of committees and the sessions of the Senate. He was rarely absent from his seat and took part in all of the great debates. As a member of the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Foreign Relations he was always ready to debate any great questions affecting the Constitution and inform the Senate upon any delicate questions affecting our foreign relations. He always enlightened the Senate upon these great questions whenever he spoke. His familiarity with the rules of the Senate and parliamentary law was remarkable, and he was the recognized authority on these questions. He was far from being a demagogue or the hypocrite. He was a manly man, always open, frank, and brave. He always stood up to be counted, and with courage always asserted his convictions with such force, frankness, and purity of purpose, that he won the respect of those who differed with him in forensic contests.

Here he ranked as one of the leaders of his party. He was so recognized, and justly so. His name is connected with much of the important legislation which for the last 20 years has passed this body and been enacted into law.

For 40 years he served his State faithfully, loyally, and with warm devotion to her interests. At the first call of his State for troops he volunteered to battle for her rights, and for four long years through the cruel and bloody war he rendered devoted and faithful service, first as adjutant of the Ninth Georgia Regiment and then as captain upon staff duty under Gens. Henry R. Jackson, Imboden, and Mackall. After the war he returned to his State, read law, and soon rose to the first rank among the great lawyers of that State. His oratorical talents and interest in public matters soon led him into the political arena. He served as presidential elector, and was elected 12 successive years as a member of the legislature and for 8 years was speaker of the house of representatives, in which position he served with honor and dignity. Many other positions of honor were conferred upon him by his party. He was considered one of the most aggressive and stalwart leaders in his State, and, recognizing his leadership and ability, his State elected him in 1894 to the United States Senate. Four times he was returned to this body, practically without opposition. The last time—in 1913—he was elected by a direct vote of the people under the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution. In this election he had the marked distinction of being the first Georgian elected for four successive terms and also the first Senator in the country elected by the people.

While he was not what might be called the idol of his people, they felt proud of him. Proud of the great record he made in the Senate and the honor he brought to the State. They believed in him as an honest, incorruptible man; as one who had served his State faithfully, loyally, and with untiring energy; and they were glad to confer upon him these unprecedented honors.

Senator BACON was of a sanguine temperament. His high hopes and purposes were the result of his moral instincts and his intellectual convictions. Those who knew him best knew that he was full of sentiment. He was a deep lover of nature. He was fond of poetry and song. He loved the sunshine, the birds and flowers, the trees and running brooks. He was accustomed to take long walks and ramble through the woods in Rock Creek Park to commune with nature.

Though he never paraded it, Senator BACON was a worshipful man, full of reverence. He had an abiding faith in the immortality of the soul, and was a firm believer in the beautiful land of rest in the great beyond. These things he rarely spoke of, but in his last will, with his own pen, he had no hesitation in telling to his family and the world of his abiding faith, the evidence of things unseen, the substance of things hoped for.

He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die.

With him "life's fitful fever is over." It was permitted to him to live out his three score years and ten. He has crossed over the river and rests under the shade of the trees where separation, sorrow, sighing, and injustice shall be no more.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, a great man has gone from among us, full of years, of good works, and of deserved honors.

When the Senate loses one who for years has been among the most conspicuous and distinguished of its Members we but perform a solemn duty in placing upon the immutable records an expression of the Nation's grief and of our own sense of loss and bereavement.

AUGUSTUS OCTAVIUS BACON was not only an able and exceptionally useful Senator, but he was a distinct force in the life of his State and of the Nation, a strong champion of those broad principles and high ideals which he consistently advocated during his long career in public life. His was an attractive personality; and as he walked among his fellow men he commanded a place of leadership and distinction which his colleagues readily accorded to him. Firm in his convictions and courageous in giving them expression, he was an opponent to be respected and a friend to be cherished. In all respects he was a high type of American citizen, a title which he greatly prized and upon which he reflected credit and honor.

He was elected to the United States Senate in November, 1894, and through the grateful appreciation of his native State served continuously as a Member of the Senate until February 14 of the present year, when, after many years of well-earned honors and rewards, his career came to a close.

Senators are familiar with his long record of service in this body, and in this presence I need not dwell upon the important part he took in our deliberations in committee and on the floor of the Senate. He brought to the discharge of his public duties rare natural gifts and talents, ripened by years of experience in the law and in State and National legislation. He was a man of scholarly tastes, profound erudition, and wide knowledge of the world. His mind was unprejudiced, vigorous, and comprehensive. In debate he was forceful and illuminating. His death took from the Senate one of its most experienced and efficient Members and deprived us of an instructive and companionable associate.

Those who had the privilege of knowing Senator BACON can not withhold the expression of affectionate admiration for his pure and distinguished patriotism, his exemplary life, his unsullied career. A survey of the accomplishments of the Senate during the past 18 years must evoke grateful remembrance of his sturdy, earnest, and zealous devotion to the service of his country. His fine dignity and unyielding respect for the great traditions of the Senate stamped him as a representative of that honorable old school of statesmanship which has contributed so much to the pride and glory of the Republic.

Most men of note live through but one career and win fame in one line of endeavor, along one road of duty and ambition, in a continuous and harmonious environment. It was the fate of Senator BACON to do more; he ran the whole gamut of those emotions and affections which have stirred the American people during the past 60 years. Having lived during the trying days of his youth as a loyal son of the South, the trials and conflicts through which he passed seem to have enriched his patriotism, and the early love which he bore for the Southland was but the budding of that deep and affectionate loyalty to the Republic which made him love each cherished spot where floats the Stars and Stripes. Out of the flames of the sectional conflicts of his youth came a national devotion of patriotic intensity. He loved his country and gave his life to her service. He was a thoroughly sincere man, who had nothing but public purpose to inspire him. Senator BACON grew old forcefully as well as gracefully, giving to the country the full and generous benefit of his ripened experience and mature judgment.

Georgia has played a noble and brilliant part in the battle of American progress. Her distinguished men have added much to the inspiring history of our national advancement, and among the most valued of her contributions to the general welfare were the career and public services of her illustrious son to whose memory to-day we pay the last tribute of friendship and admiration.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, hanging on the walls in my committee room in the Capitol, where I work from five to seven hours a day, are the photographs of some of my best friends, men whom I admire and love. Most of these are still living and are much my juniors. One of them is dead, and his kindly face beams down on me from the wall all the while and makes me feel sometimes as though he were present and going to speak.

We entered the Senate together in 1895, nearly 20 years ago, and during these years a warm friendship grew up between us. Our committee rooms were next to the Senate library and adjoined. Although he was my elder by several years, he always addressed me as "The old man"—"How is the old man to-day," being his usual greeting—and the name by which I addressed him most frequently was "My Lord Bacon."

I was at Robertson's Sanitarium in Atlanta last February when the news of his death was flashed over the wires, and immediately telegraphed the Vice President asking to be appointed on the committee to attend his funeral. When his body reached Atlanta I joined the committee and went on to Macon, and saw him laid away to rest in the beautiful cemetery on the hillside among his loved dead. While he was very reserved about family matters and rarely mentioned them, our intimacy led him once to tell me what a terrible grief came into his life when his twin boys both died in one week. As I stood by his open grave I thought of his reunion with those children and how happy it must make him, and somehow the thought was very comforting to me.

He was very much loved by the people of his own city and State, and there were deputations from many parts of Georgia to attend his funeral. The people of that great State—like Virginia, the "mother of statesmen"—realized that they had lost another great man. I do not say "great man" flippantly, but advisedly. All men who become Senators do not thereby become great. The roll of great Senators is somewhat limited, and the average man would be puzzled to name 50 great Senators out of the hundreds during the entire period of our history. But BACON had qualities of mind which made him worthy to be called a great man. He was not merely a good politician and good fellow.

I married a Georgia woman and was born and reared within 13 miles of the Georgia line, and always had a great many friends in that State. It is a saddening thought that I have attended the funeral of two of Georgia's great men—BACON and Clay. They honored me by giving me their friendship.

BACON was a great lawyer. I will always remember an incident which occurred at a dinner at my home when I lived on East Capitol Street in this city. This was many years ago. I had formed a strong attachment for three of my colleagues, all of them lawyers—BACON, Spooner, and Chandler. Although I am a farmer pure and simple and never studied law at all, my official position as governor, during which time I had many lawsuits for the State, necessitated my reading many Supreme Court decisions. Then, too, in general reading I had become familiar with the principles of the law and knew a little something about the Constitution. Therefore I am not entirely ignorant or an unappreciative listener when law points are being discussed. On the occasion of which I speak (the dinner at my home) it will be noted that two of my guests were Republicans, both leaders of their party until they left the Senate. Although I am considered a partisan and am a very pronounced partisan in many respects, I never allowed my Democratic principles to interfere with my personal friendships. It is a source of pride to believe—indeed, to know—that a large number of the Republicans with whom I have been associated in the Senate during my 20 years' service are and have been my personal friends. Many of them have "gone over the river" where BACON has joined them. I must join that caravan, too, soon, for I am nearly "three score and ten" and realize every day that I am approaching the end. But I am prepared when the time comes to go to the grave—

> * * * Not like the quarry slave at night,
> Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed
> By an unfaltering trust, I will approach my grave
> Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him and lies down to pleasant dreams.

But let us back to the dinner. I had a son who was at that time a law student at Georgetown University, and more for his encouragement than anything else I told those three great lawyers, who had climbed to the very top of their profession and then been given the highest office in the gift of their States, that I would be very much obliged if they would tell us something of their early trials and struggles. I started off with BACON, asking how much income he got from his first year's practice. He answered something like this: "TILLMAN, when I first began the practice of law I entered the office of Judge Lochrane, who was then at the head of the Macon bar and had a very large practice. Although the firm name was Lochrane & Bacon, I soon found very much to my disgust that all of the clients and even visitors to the office wanted 'to see Judge Lochrane,' and none called for or wanted to see Mr. BACON. His reputation had thrown me into eclipse, and I decided that I could not afford this and therefore determined to withdraw from the firm and set up on my own hook. I did not get much practice at first, and money was so scarce that, to economize in every way possible, I used to sit without a fire with a blanket wrapped around my legs and feet to keep warm while reading. I really did not feel able to buy wood."

Spooner broke into the conversation with his reminiscences, laughing at the time, saying: "I was in debt when I hung out my shingle, and the first thing I did was to marry; but I did manage to make about $1,500."

Chandler came next with his experience and, as I recall it, he said: "I began practicing when 20 years old, also in company with a senior partner. I do not recall that I received much of anything that year. The next year, 1856, I practiced alone and made about $1,300 or $1,400—enough to pay board and lay up a little. After practicing nine years, before coming to Washington, I had managed to accumulate between four and five thousand dollars. During that time, however, I recall that I interfered a great deal in politics."

The picture of BACON shivering in the cold for the want of wood which he felt too poor to buy; Spooner battling with poverty and earning only $1,500 per annum, while I know he gets more than that for some of his retainers now and often receives scores of thousands for a single argument before the Supreme Court; and Chandler in stringent circumstances because of lack of practice made a very lasting impression on my mind. Then, Chandler's describing his work as "interfering with politics" seemed ludicrous, especially the "interfering," because those who know him well know how alert his mind is and quick to catch on to things. It amused Spooner and Bacon as much as it did me to hear him thus characterize his activities in political matters. Indeed, his make-up has always puzzled me because of the odd mixture of mischief, earnestness, patriotism, selfishness, and sarcasm. He still "interferes" with politics and will do so until he dies. The lives and achievements of these three men are marked illustrations of the possibilities of our American civilization and demonstrate very forcefully that where men have the brains and energy they can carve a career in this country under very adverse conditions.

As our committee rooms were so near together, BACON and I frequently walked up Pennsylvania Avenue together, and on these walks we had long talks about politics, history, poetry, literature, and books we had read. I remember those walks with a great deal of pleasure now, because my pleasures now are mostly those of memory, and I presume other men, old and invalid like myself, are in the same condition.

He had a characteristic which made our association appear sometimes incongruous. His frame of mind was eminently judicial and he objected strenuously to any interruption; could not tolerate it, in fact. Indeed, no two men in the Senate were more different in temperament. He was calm and pacific at all times. I am impetuous and frank, and my strongest and most marked characteristic is perhaps pugnacity. Our friendship must have been due to the law which has been formulated thus: Men like their opposites, and not those who have the same foibles and feelings they themselves have. He was diplomatic or nothing, and no one ever even suspected me of having any feeling of that kind. I would frequently ask his opinion on a law point on some matter before the Senate or in the newspapers, and when he started to tell me I would see the point he was attempting to elucidate before he got to it, and would interrupt with some word showing I did not need further explanation. He always resented this very much, saying pettishly, "Tillman, you will not let a man tell you anything before you interrupt him."

He was a man of very great refinement of feeling and disliked above all things to wound another. I never heard him in the Senate in debate say anything sharp, sarcastic, or vehement. Sometimes he grew earnest and even eloquent in discussing matters before the Senate, and I have heard him give the Republican Party a very severe drubbing more than once, but I never did hear him utter any such thoughts without apologizing for it—a salve for the wound, as it were. I have abused him many times good-naturedly for this weakness, which many will consider his finest characteristic. But, then, it was his nature to be kind and gentle, and he hated to say anything calculated to wound feelings or rankle in the memory like a thorn in the flesh. I have always considered this a weakness and have acted on the contrary principle. I never said anything unless I believed it to be true, and, if the truth hurts, I felt that it ought to hurt, for in that way only could reformation be brought about. Having served in the minority here for 18 years, I realize fully what it is to cultivate patience, and long for the time when my own party should have control.

BACON had a mind peculiarly filled with veneration for tradition and old customs. He was a stickler for the rules of the Senate, and very few Senators had a better knowledge of those rules or of Jefferson's Manual or was more familiar with the Constitution of the United States than he. He was always at his best in arguing a constitutional question or a legal point, though sometimes I thought him a little prolix and wordy. His membership on the Committee on Foreign Relations made it necessary for him to study international law and be familiar with treaties, and his knowledge of both was very extensive.

He was very fond of music, and in his home were two music boxes, one of the old Swiss type and the other a modern machine, which would reproduce the voices of great singers. Frequently we got together at his home or mine and spent the evening listening to good music.

He was very fond of travel and of reciting his experiences on his various trips to Europe. He made it his religious duty, after his first breakdown in the Senate, some 10 years ago, to spend two or three months each summer in the Tyrolean Alps. He believed that these trips abroad had a great deal to do with his robust appearance and health and were necessary to prolong his life. Whether or not his failure to get away last summer had anything to do with hurrying the end, of course, we do not know, but he longed for the European mountains and was very much disappointed and put out because of his inability to go abroad. He felt that he could not afford to have the appearance of neglecting his duty, although he had been triumphantly re-elected for the fourth time by the people of Georgia the year before, and political consideration did not control his action or govern his feelings in any way. He stood by his post of duty and went down on the firing line, as it were. No soldier on the battle field ever showed more courage. Senators come and go, but it will be a long time before the Senate is adorned by a more able man or one more worthy the respect and admiration of his colleagues.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, others better fitted for the task than I have told the story of the life work of our late distinguished associate, the Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON, of Georgia. For me it is sufficient to say a few simple words of appreciation of a man whom I admired, a Senator of unswerving integrity, acknowledged ability, and universally recognized distinction, who in the discharge of his public duties shed luster not only upon his own State but also upon the country which he served faithfully and well.

When Senator BACON entered the Senate I had been a Member of the body for four years. Before he had taken the oath of office I was told by those who knew him well that he would take a high place in the Senate because of his extensive learning, his legislative experience, his legal acquirements, and his great ability as a debater and parliamentarian. In all these respects he abundantly fulfilled the expectations of those who vouched for him, speedily gaining deserved recognition and honor.

Senator BACON stood for all that is best in the history and traditions of this body. He insisted upon the observance of the rules which are designed to govern our deliberations, and he also insisted upon an observance of the precedents, social as well as otherwise, which have been handed down to us by our predecessors. A man of simple tastes and quiet living, he nevertheless contended that the Senate should be given its rightful place on all occasions and not be pushed aside or ignored by those who had less claim for recognition or priority. A true disciple of Jefferson in simplicity of life and manners, he was equally an aristocrat when occasion demanded. To him the pomp and circumstance of life meant little, but the amenities of life meant everything. He was a man of high ideals, of irreproachable character, and possessed of a courtesy and kindliness of heart which bespoke the true gentleman.

For nearly 20 years it was my privilege to come in almost daily contact with this honored son of one of the original Thirteen States; and during all that time, whether in the routine of legislative procedure, of parliamentary contention, or in the heat and stress of debate, no wound was inflicted on either side that remained unhealed for an hour. A man of positive convictions and matured views, he extended to his colleagues the unquestioned right to opinions differing from those which he held and which he was always ready to defend. Thoroughly versed in the history and traditions of his own country, his wide knowledge of international affairs gave to his opinions an authority and influence possessed by few men in the history of our Government. The death of Senator BACON removed from this body one of its ablest Members and deprived the Nation of the wise counsel of a cultured, conscientious, and broad-minded legislator and statesman.

Mr. President, as I stood at the open grave of my associate and friend, in the beautiful burial ground at Macon; as I saw the great concourse of his friends and neighbors assembled to do him honor; as I saw the tears on the cheeks of family and kinsmen; as I listened to the words of the preacher, so full of tenderness and meaning, and as I looked beyond and saw those whom he had left, struggling for preferment above their fellows, I could not but ask myself what the real meaning of life is. And it then came to me, as it had so often come before and as is has come many times since, that the true meaning of life is not wealth nor fame nor glory, but rather that it is summed up in the few simple words of the Master:

> Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, * * * and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

And turning away from that scene of sadness and grief, bidding a long farewell to the great man whom I was privileged to call friend, I felt like consecrating my life and whatever talents I possess to a deeper devotion to public and private service, and thus be prepared for the great change that will inevitably come to all of us, as it came to this gifted son of Georgia. And so to day I can but express the hope that his example will be to us an inspiration for all that is best in this world, and that the life and character of Senator BACON, as it will be read and recounted by the youth of his native Commonwealth, may beckon them on to higher purposes, to cleaner lives, and to greater achievements for the welfare of their fellow men, the State, and the Nation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, AUGUSTUS OCTAVIUS BACON, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Georgia, long represented and personified on this floor a type of statesmanship that is fast passing away, if, indeed, it be not already passed.

Imagine him clad in the toga of twenty-two hundred years ago, and it would not require a much more difficult stretch of the imagination to see in him, reincarnated, the highest type of the Roman senator at the very climax of that period when the senators of Rome were the lawgivers of the world. Compare him in all the essentials that made the senators of the world's great Republic illustrious and their integrity the proudest boast of a great people with them, and neither he nor American statesmanship suffers in the comparison.

Is high-minded personal and official integrity, that is not only beyond question but above suspicion, the first and all-essential requisite for lofty public service? If so, Senators, in this age of yellow journalism and of unwarranted license in the criticism of public men it should be an inspiration to every American schoolboy to learn what those of you who served longest with our dead friend know best—that in this great virtue he was second to no Roman Cato.

Is lofty patriotism, that exalts one's country above all earthly objects and enthrones the lasting good of her people as the one great object for which senates assemble and parliaments legislate, another essential and fundamental virtue? If so, Senators, we may all find comfort in the thought and draw inspiration from the fact that in the practice of this great virtue the late Senator from Georgia set for himself a standard not less lofty than that of the elder Brutus.

Is real and unassumed personal and official dignity, a due regard for the exact proprieties of every occasion, and a full appreciation of the greatness of the imperial Commonwealth that sent him here so long and of the mighty Nation he loved and served so well to be appraised a virtue? If so, Senators, in these qualities your late colleague could be compared most favorably with the proudest Tarquin of them all.

Is the possession of a mind well stored with the legal lore of his people and his race, well trained in the measurement of wrongs and the weighing of conflicting rights, to be accounted a splendid part of the equipment of a great lawmaker? If so, Senators, in this respect the dead Senator whom we honor to-day was as splendidly equipped for the public service as any Roman Justinian.

Is that "righteousness that exalteth a nation" to be applied to its foreign affairs as well as to its domestic concerns? And is that man who, in his legislative conduct and career, seeks to apply the doctrine of the Golden Rule to other nations as well as to the citizens of his own to be adjudged truly great when the scales of public opinion shall be finally and justly balanced? If so, Senators, the late Senator BACON, who was for so long a time a potent factor for good in the conduct of our foreign relations, will not lose in stature when he is compared with even the greatest of those early Romans who stood for justice and square dealing, even with the despised barbarian, and even against the clamor of a fierce and war-loving nation.

Of Senator BACON'S long and successful career at the Georgia bar, of which he was the acknowledged leader when elected to the Senate; of his splendid service to the people of Georgia while a member of her legislature, of whose house of representatives he was for eight years the honored speaker; of his unselfish devotion to the interests of his alma mater, the University of Georgia, even during those years in which the weight of public duties and responsibilities bore heaviest upon him; of his unfaltering loyalty to the Democratic Party, both in our State and Nation, through many years of valued service, I may not on this occasion speak in detail, lest I become prolix.

Upon his great services in this Chamber through the past 20 years, touching almost every line of legislative and parliamentary activity, I may not with propriety dwell; for many of his honored colleagues, intimately associated with him in those activities, are still with us, and are far more competent than I am to recount his work and acclaim its worth.

I trust I may be pardoned, however, if I allude briefly to several particulars in which it has always seemed to me his influence was strongest and his work most fruitful.

First of all, he was diligent to a degree and constant without exception in his attention to the work of the Senate and in his attendance upon its sessions.

In the next place, he always attached great importance to the rules and precedents of the Senate. In respect to this matter, it may have seemed to the thoughtless, on occasion, that Senator BACON was overtechnical in his insistence upon following the rules of the Senate and in adhering to its well-settled precedents. Such was not the case, however; for he had acquired a profound knowledge of those rules and precedents, and with it an equally profound conviction that the rules and precedents of this great body all form part and parcel of a great comprehensive and complete system by which legislation in this Chamber is both accelerated and safeguarded, and that prudence requires that a legislative body shall steer according to its chart and compass, in this way securing the greatest general good and in this way scrupulously preserving the rights of all.

In the next place, during his long and potent connection with the foreign affairs of our country he brought to their consideration not only all the splendid equipment of a great legal mind but also a fine and fair sense of natural justice. In his consideration of these questions he had two maxims of conduct that, in my judgment, have proved invaluable to our country in the past and are indispensable to her safety, peace, and glory in the future:

First, that we should religiously adhere to the almost inspired advice of the great Father of his Country to cultivate friendly relations with all the nations of the earth and to have entangling alliances with none.

Second, that we can neither afford to bully the weak nor truckle to the strong, but should invariably accord to the weakest nation with which we have dealings the same consideration, the same justice, the same rights that we accord to the mightiest powers of earth.

Lastly, but by no means of least importance, Senator BACON had a fixed and accurate conception of the great American system of government—of the great dual system that distributes power between the Federal and State sovereignties—giving to each jurisdiction complete and supreme power in its own sphere of activity, and yet so adjusting the balance between them that real conflict is rare, if not impossible.

He believed with the intense fervor of enlightened conviction that our fathers had built wisely and not at haphazard when they ordained this dual system, and that in a rigid adherence to it lay the brightest and fairest hopes of permanent happiness and prosperity for the American people. He realized that the country was too large and that its conditions varied too greatly in different localities to permit, with safety, legislation by the Federal authority on matters that were purely local to the several States, and as to such matters that the right of local self-government was all important. On the other hand, he fully recognized and earnestly supported the supreme and exclusive authority of the Federal Government to deal with all foreign questions, with all questions relating to the national defense, with all questions relating to the regulation of commerce between the several States, and to exercise to the fullest extent every necessary power expressly bestowed on it or that could be clearly implied from the grant; and he was as stout in his assertion of the full and exclusive right and power of the Federal Government to perform every proper Federal function as he was unyielding in his devotion to the great Anglo-Saxon doctrine of local self-government in all purely domestic concerns and in respect to all matters that properly fell within the jurisdiction and power of the several States.

The great service that he rendered in this Chamber year after year in his earnest and unremitting effort to keep this balance between Federal and State power truly adjusted and to preserve to the people of this country the inestimable blessings of this great system of government to my mind constitute his most important public service, the chiefest glory of his long and distinguished career.

Mr. President, I have already trespassed far longer than I had intended upon the time of the Senate.

Senator BACON is gone from our midst, but his influence and his example remain with us, to help us all, to inspire us all to faithful service, and to lofty endeavor. The great State that he so long illustrated on this floor was proud of him in life and mourns him in death; but to console her in her grief, to comfort her in her sorrow, she has the proud realization that in her gift of him to our country she made notable contribution to American statesmanship; that his passing marks almost the last of an old and honored school, and that when death claimed him it might have been truly said, "The noblest Roman of them all is no more."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 18, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 17, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, let Thy spirit come with all its quickening power into our hearts and abide with us, that with fidelity to Thee and to our fellow men we may do our work as it comes day by day without the fear or favor of men, for "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which can not be removed, but abideth forever," that we may have that peace which passeth understanding. In Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPORT OF THE ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The other day the President sent a message to Congress, transmitting the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, accompanied by two large volumes. The Chair referred the message and accompanying documents to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered it printed. It turns out that it has been printed, and therefore the Chair asks unanimous consent to cancel the order, so far as the printing of the documents is concerned. The Chair hears no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

For fuel, oil, grease, pipe, wire, and other materials needed for the maintenance and repair of boilers, engines, heating apparatus, electric lighting and power plant, and water-supply system; purchase and maintenance of teams; maintenance, repair, or operation of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles; material for boxing nautical instruments for transportation; paints, telegraph and telephone service, and incidental labor, $8,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what is the need for passenger-carrying vehicles in connection with the Naval Observatory. We provided last year that appropriations should not be used for this purpose unless specifically authorized. Apparently the committee has specifically authorized the use of money in every case, so that the law which we passed last year has only resulted in adding a few words to the bill this year. What need does the observatory have for vehicles to drive around in?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Under the current appropriations they could not have used the money for this purpose, and in every case they have asked us to put in a provision that would enable them to use it. As a matter of fact, I do not see much difference between operation under the present law and the old method except that it results in their furnishing the Committee on Appropriations, before the bill is made up, with the amount of money to be expended in that way.

Mr. MANN. I was opposed to the provision in the law last year. I took it that the purpose was to enable Congress to cut out some of this driving around Washington at the public expense. Of course each bureau or department that was maintaining vehicles at the public expense for private use has asked to have the specific authority given. Why do they need passenger-carrying vehicles at the Naval Observatory? Certainly they can not go to the moon with them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They claim that they are so far out of town that they need them to communicate with the Navy Department and other departments. It looks like everybody in the Government service except Senators and Representatives have automobiles, or other means of conveyance, at the Government expense. But, as I said a moment ago, the only practical difference between our method of appropriation in this bill and the former bills is that in all the estimates it is now set out about how much money is to be expended in that way, and this information we did not have before.

Mr. MANN. You have information as to how much money they have spent, but there is no limitation as to the amount they may spend.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have information how much they expect to spend.

Mr. MANN. But how much they will spend you do not know. I have no doubt that they will not expend any exorbitant amount. They spend what is necessary for that purpose. The question is whether we wish to make appropriations and to permit these gentlemen to ride in public owned and maintained vehicles. I have no jealousy, as far as I am concerned, but Congress last year had such a spasm of virtue on the subject, was so insistent on cutting out the right of anybody to ride in a public-owned vehicle unless specifically authorized; and yet this year I have not heard a word said in the House on the subject, although there have been many instances so far where we have specifically authorized the use of these vehicles.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is correct; we have authorized it where they have asked for it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. While this subject is up it occurs to me that there is a considerable amount of passenger-vehicle service for the benefit of the heads of departments, and so forth. I would like to ask the gentleman how much money was expended last year for this particular item.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. About $500.

Mr. GOULDEN. Was there any money expended last year for the purchase of a team?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No.

Mr. GOULDEN. I see that you insert the authorization for the purchase of teams again; I suppose that is the usual method of making up the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; for a horse might die; but in the absence of some mishap of that kind they have no need to purchase a team.

Mr. COX. Was this money expended in hiring horses from a livery?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. Over at the Observatory they have large grounds, and they keep a team.

Mr. COX. Was this $500 expended for horse feed and maintenance?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. For feed and maintenance.

Mr. COX. How many teams have they?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think only one.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of computers on piecework in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and in improving the tables of the planets, moon, and stars, $3,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 83, line 12, by striking out "$3,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$7,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the estimates called for a lump-sum appropriation of $3,000, and they also asked that two men who have been employed out of the lump-sum appropriation for 11 years should be placed on the statutory roll. We did not grant their requests to put the men on the statutory roll in the preceding paragraph. It has been called to the attention of the Committee that if the men were not to be placed on the statutory roll they must be provided for in a lump-sum appropriation. Indeed, it is doubtful whether they can get through on $7,000, because a good deal of the information has been secured through exchange with other Governments—something they may not now be able to do. They will need every dollar of the amount heretofore appropriated. That is why I am asking that the amount be made $7,000, and these two experts will be kept on the lump-sum roll.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment. I am not one who has been preaching economy. I recognize the difference between economy and parsimony, and I have not been one who has been talking about economy. In fact, I have no more regard for that portion of the Democratic platform than the Democratic Party itself has; but here is one place where it seems to me there is an absolute waste of money, and where there has been waste for several years. I have here the papers submitted in response to a resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator JONES, and if the gentleman from South Carolina had had an opportunity to read through these papers I am satisfied that instead of moving to make this $7,000 he would move to strike it all out.

The appropriations that have been made for piecework in relation to the preparation of the Ephemeris have been wasted absolutely for several years. I tried to get the Secretary of the Navy under a Republican administration to do away with it, and I think probably he would if he had stayed in office a little while longer; but I was in hopes that this one piece of extravagance a Democratic Secretary of the Navy would have cut out, and I believe he would if he knew the facts. This report reveals some facts that I desire to call to the attention of the committee. In the first place, I find that Prof. Updegraff, who was the director immediately preceding Mr. Eichelberger, estimated the cost of the Ephemeris at $10,700, and Prof. Harshman, who was the director for several years, estimated it at practically the same figure. I find that the first assistant, Mr. Robertson, estimates it at $11,561. So that if we receive no assistance whatever from abroad, as you claim here, you would still have appropriated considerably more than is necessary. I find in looking over this report that the present director, Mr. Eichelberger says that, since the Paris conference which took place some three years ago—and which simply means an agreement that the different countries have to exchange work—the cost of preparing this Ephemeris was reduced to about $6,000; and I further find in looking through this report, on page 105, that there was a board called on October 15, 1912, and that that board recommended that the piecework fund be discontinued, as it is not necessary. That board consisted of Profs. Eichelberger, Rice, and Harshman, the assistant, Mr. Robertson, and a gentleman named Morgan. It is somewhat remarkable that these men, who knew all about the conduct of that office, Mr. Harshman having been in the office for over 20 years, and seven years of that time a director, and Mr. Robertson having been there for 20 years, and Mr. Rice for a long period, should recommend that this piecework is wholly unnecessary, while Prof. Eichelberger, who had been in the office less than two years, and Mr. Morgan, who had been there but a short time, should think it needed.

The fact about it is that no one ever thought it was necessary to have this piecework done except the present director, and even under his own statement now, instead of increasing this amount for piecework, you ought to strike it out entirely, because this report shows all the way through, by every director who has been there, including the present one, that the preparation of this Ephemeris can well be done by the office force.

I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to this fact, that the English Ephemeris is prepared entirely by the office force of 7 men, while we have an office force over here of 10 men, and the work in the English office is just as heavy as it is here, and we have just as competent a force as they have over there. The truth about it is that the regular force now employed at the office of the Nautical Almanac can do all of the work in the office necessary to get out the Ephemeris and not work more than one-half their time, leaving them one-half of their time to be devoted to original investigation. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] where he received the information that it was necessary to have any of this piecework done outside of the office? I want to state this further fact, that some two or three years ago an occasion arose when it was necessary for me to investigate the conditions in the Nautical Almanac Office, and I discovered the fact then that this piecework was being farmed out; that it was let to certain gentlemen, and they then in some cases sublet it and made a profit upon it. One instance I recall, where a man obtained some piecework, he was paid $600 for it, but he sublet it for some $200. All of this piecework, so far as you can judge by this report, made up of records from the Nautical Almanac Office itself, is wholly unjustified, and apparently is made simply because the director wants to take care of a few of his favorites.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee on this little item. The people themselves are asking that these men be put upon the statutory roll instead of being kept on the piecework roll, and that is the very reason for the amendment. The committee did not see fit to put them on the statutory roll, and we are simply putting in the amount for piecework that has been appropriated for years. There is no increase in the appropriation.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Was the gentleman aware of the fact that this board of which I have read made a report to the Secretary of the Navy that there was no need for this piecework?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are asking it right now in this year's estimates.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Who is asking it now?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The department.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman evidently did not understand what I said. I say the present director, Prof. Eichelberger, is the only man for years who has contended it was necessary to have this piecework; and this piecework, if it is necessary at all, is required simply because the present director does not himself know how to perform his duties and must employ some one to do his work for him. That is the truth about it. If the present director, who it appears from his own statements is wholly incompetent to fill that place, was transferred elsewhere, the present office force would do this work without outside help.

Now, I think that in times like these, where the work can be done by the office force, that we ought not to appropriate this $7,000 simply because the director of that office wants it to hire some one to perform his duties for which he receives a salary of about $5,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, Capt. Jayne was the Director of the Naval Observatory until a short time ago, and the last time he was before the committee he was asked this question:

> Mr. JOHNSON. You do not think you could get along with any less force at the observatory?
> Capt. JAYNE. Not and carry out the work we are doing. It is pretty hard work and we are hard pressed out there. Aside from the astronomical work of the observatory it is the depot for nautical instruments for the Navy and for surveying instruments for the Hydrographic Office. We could very well employ a greater force, if we had it, to advantage to the seagoing part of the Navy.

It is not necessary to waste time about it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a few moments further. Now, if I can have the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina for a moment, because I am a little bit surprised that he should insist on carrying this appropriation in view of what this record, the report to the Senate, shows. I think it must be due to the fact that he has not investigated the situation. I wish I had time to read all of it, but it is too voluminous.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Why did not the gentleman bring this matter before the committee?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, it is not my business to be running in every minute to try to direct the work of the committee. I am calling the attention of the gentleman to it now. I am pointing out now that there is no justification for the appropriation, and here is the report that shows it, and yet in the face of that fact the gentleman wants to increase the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Secretary of the Navy assumes the responsibility for these estimates as they came to this committee. He is presumed to have looked into this question. Where did the gentleman get his information?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I got it from this report right here, taken from the record as furnished by the department.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What report?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Of this office itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Report to whom?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. All of which convinces me the gentleman has been sitting over there and not paying any attention to what I have been saying or he would have understood what I have said. In reply to Senate resolution 424, July 17, 1914, introduced by Senator JONES, that calls for copies of all reports, letters, and memoranda prepared for or submitted to the superintendent of the Naval Observatory since July 1, 1909, concerning or relating to the cost of preparing the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac. I have not had time to go through this very thoroughly, but, if the gentleman will just listen to me for a moment, I find in there a detailed statement of the cost of preparing the Ephemeris—an estimate by different ones in regard to the cost of preparing it—and, remember, you are allowing $15,000 in this bill; and, according to the statement of Prof. Eichelberger himself—and I can give you the page where he makes that statement—the Paris conference reduced the cost down to about $6,000, although I understand now you say they claim they can not make that exchange. That is probably correct; I have no information upon that subject.

Now, here are the estimates made by Prof. Updegraff, who was in there immediately before Prof. Eichelberger. He gives a statement in which he goes into all the details and gives the cost of the Ephemeris at $10,700. Then I find a statement in here by First Assistant Robertson, made in response to a request by Capt. Jayne, and he gives a detailed statement—gives every item—and he estimates the cost at $11,561. Now, I do not find anybody who estimated the cost of that work higher except the present director. Then following on down in the report this board, composed of the men I have mentioned, all having been in the Naval Observatory and supposed to know more than anybody else about the subject, on page 105, says that the piecework system ought to be abolished and that the present force can do all the work. Now, in the face of that statement of men who know, contradicted only by the present director, you propose to increase this amount of $3,000 to $7,000, when the $3,000 is not needed and should be stricken out. I do not care what you do about it—it does not affect me in any way—but I had, as I said, occasion some years ago to investigate this matter and was satisfied then that was an unjustifiable expenditure and retained only by political influence. Yesterday I went to Senator JONES and got these papers and looked through them, and I do not believe any man can read this report without becoming convinced that it has been an absolute waste of money not only now but for several years past to have this piecework done. It is simply a gratuity. The office force is perfectly capable of doing it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not care what you do about it. I have simply tried to put before you the facts.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman from Washington a question. My understanding is that you are not opposed to the publication of the Almanac itself?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I am not opposed. I said it is a very necessary work. As I understand, it is of value in navigation. That is one of the reasons why I am interested in it. My criticism is not that at all, but my criticism is this, that according to this report which is made it seems that there can be absolutely no doubt that the present force in the Nautical Almanac Office, the 10 regular people employed there, can do this work. Seven do it over in England, and according to the statements here the present force in our office can prepare and do that work and have half of their time left for original investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has expired.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I was speaking in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. ADAIR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington this question. He discussed it for 10 or 15 minutes, and then he winds up by saying that it makes no difference.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not to me personally.

Mr. ADAIR. You are a taxpayer and interested in economy, are you not? Why do you make a 15-minute argument against this and then say it makes no difference to you what is done?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think I have performed my duty. I have called attention to the fact, and, as I said a while ago, I think that for several years this has been a useless expenditure. I went to the Secretary of the Navy and called his attention to it a year or two ago, and told him the whole thing ought to be wiped out.

Mr. ADAIR. You are interested in having it wiped out?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As any other Member of Congress.

Mr. ADAIR. You are a taxpayer and interested in economy?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The tax part would not interest me.

Mr. ADAIR. You should not take the time of the House if it makes no difference to you or the public.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MOORE. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Washington stated a moment ago that some of this piecework had been farmed out, so that the appropriation for it was $600, I believe he said, for which the party of the first part got $600 and sublet it to some one who did the work for $200. Did he investigate that, and does he know personally about it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I got that information when I had the matter up with the department some time ago, and I have no reason to doubt the correctness of it. As I remember, this was mentioned at the time I talked with Capt. Jayne, in the presence of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, about three years ago. If my memory is not at fault after three years, the gentleman's name was Ross—one of the very ones they wanted to put permanently on the roll, according to the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON]—that farmed out some of this piecework.

Mr. LANGLEY. You mean he was the one who got the $600?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and hired his brother to do the work for about $200.

Mr. LANGLEY. And hired his brother to do it for $200?

Mr. MOORE. I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, why would it not be the proper thing under the circumstances not to adopt the amendment, but leave it to stand as reported. It undoubtedly would be increased in the Senate, and then the committee would have an opportunity to make any necessary investigation for action in conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that when we had the bill under consideration before the subcommittee, there being no change in the estimate except that he asked for two statutory offices, we took no testimony. We did not give the two officers they asked for on the statutory roll, but we did reduce the lump sum $4,000. Two days ago gentlemen from the Naval Observatory came down and explained to me that we had crippled them to such an extent that they could not carry on their work; that this appropriation was more necessary now than at any time in the past, because they are obliged to use some of this lump-sum appropriation to get information that heretofore they have gotten free through exchange arrangements.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but of course there is no criticism of the gentleman or the committee for not having made an investigation of the matter. Of course the committee does not investigate every question every year, but there has been a rather exhaustive report submitted, which has not been called to the attention of the committee, which they would have an opportunity to examine. Why would it not be desirable to let it go into conference and let the committee have the chance? I am willing to take the judgment of the committee on it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to read to the gentleman from the hearings taken a year ago on this matter, and which were reaffirmed this year. Capt. Jayne was called before the committee. He was at that time at the head of this observatory. The gentleman knows Capt. Jayne and knows his interest in astronomy, and I take it there has never been a head of that bureau who has had a more distinguished service in that work, with the single exception of that distinguished and renowned Tennesseean, Matthew Fontaine Maury, who, by reason of his splendid services, will live in history. He was asked by Mr. JOHNSON, chairman of the subcommittee, the following questions:

> Is the expense of getting out that book so nearly uniform that for 10 years there would hardly be a variation of a dollar in the appropriation?
> Capt. JAYNE. It is done under that appropriation and the appropriation for miscellaneous computations. We use that appropriation for investigation work of a very high character, which is appreciated very highly by astronomers throughout the country.
> Mr. JOHNSON. Are you referring to the appropriation of $5,000 for miscellaneous computations that we have just passed?
>
> Capt. JAYNE. No, sir; I am speaking of the appropriation under the Nautical Almanac Office.
> Mr. JOHNSON. Are you referring to the appropriation of $7,000?
> Capt. JAYNE. Yes, sir; we use all of that appropriation in the work of getting out the almanac and the work that is related to it of a scientific nature, such as the table of the moon by Newcombe, which are considered the finest things of the kind in the world.

Now, the amendment, offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], simply proposes to restore the appropriation as it has been carried for the past 8 or 10 years. It does not add a dollar to the appropriation heretofore made.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Capt. Jayne says the amount is absolutely necessary, and it is for that reason that the gentleman from South Carolina offers the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I understand. But since that time the Secretary of the Navy has made a report to Congress of information relating to this office, and in that report, as stated by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], is the statement that this work is not required in order to get out the Ephemeris and the Nautical Almanac, which I think every one wants to have issued and properly prepared. Why not let the Senate committee have an opportunity to examine it and consider that information, which has never been presented to the committee before?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I say, it is simply proposed to restore the present appropriation. After all, this will go to the Senate, and the Senator from Washington, Mr. JONES, is an able Member of that body. He has the report, which was prepared at his instance, and he can take it before the committee, and they can thrash it out there.

Mr. MANN. These matters are disposed of in conference, and the details of this matter can be gone into by the House conferees when the conference takes place. The Senate committee makes very little investigation of these matters. Of course, if the gentleman wants to avoid that responsibility, I shall not insist.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman does an injustice to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. It has been my observation in the last year or two that they give these matters more attention than the gentleman seems to think.

Mr. MANN. Well, it has been my observation for 18 years that they do very little investigating.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is it not a fact that last year the Senate struck out this item, and that it was reinserted at the instance of the House conferees?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not recall, I am frank to say to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of this committee a question for information. You have reduced it, according to the statement made by yourself and other members of the committee, from $7,000 last year to $3,000 this year. Will you kindly tell the committee why you have made that reduction? As business men, legislating for this work, we should know. Now you are offering an amendment for $7,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They asked in the estimates only for the lump sum of $3,000 to be appropriated.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then why not stick to it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Hold on. In the preceding paragraph of the bill, in another place in the bill, they have asked for $4,000 more.

Mr. GOULDEN. Did you grant it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. So that when we refused to give them the two men they asked for in another part of the bill it made it impossible, they say, to do the work on the lump sum of $3,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], based upon a report which seems to me a very recent one, made to a distinguished Senator, I certainly hope the committee will accept the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], because I shall vote against the amendment to increase the item as unnecessary and not in the interest of the service.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, one moment. If the reports that are before the House show—and I do not know whether they do or not—that the work of getting out this almanac can be done by the men who are on the statutory pay roll in this office without any additional appropriation for piecework, it ought to be done that way, and there is not any reason on earth why we should add to the $3,000 that is appropriated for piecework if there is any record anywhere to show that it is not needed.

Now, if the committee can postpone the amendment suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina until they can ascertain the truth of the statement made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], based upon these reports, it may be possible not only to save the $4,000 which they propose to add, but the $3,000 also which is reported in the bill; and it seems to me that that is the best way to look at this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery, furniture, newspapers, plans, drawings, drawing materials, horses and wagons to be used only for official purposes, maintenance, repair, or operation of horse-drawn, passenger-carrying vehicles, street car tickets not exceeding $250, freight, expressage, postage, typewriters and computing machines and exchange of same, and other absolutely necessary expenses of the Navy Department and its various bureaus and offices, $40,000; it shall not be lawful to expend, for any of the offices or bureaus of the Navy Department at Washington, any sum out of appropriations made for the Naval Establishment for any of the purposes mentioned or authorized in this paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 88, in line 14, after the word "purposes," insert the word "purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Office: Commissioner, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,750; forester, $3,000; financial clerk, $2,250; chiefs of divisions—1 $2,250, 1 $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; expert accountant, $2,000; private secretary, $1,800; examiner of irrigation accounts, $1,800; draftsmen—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200; clerks—20 of class 4, 31 of class 3, 38 of class 2, 2 at $1,500 each, 68 of class 1 (including 1 stenographer), 32 at $1,000 each (including 1 stenographer), 34 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each; messenger; 4 assistant messengers; 4 messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $325,550.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the following, on page 93, line 24: "Second assistant commissioner, who shall perform the duties of." There is no law, Mr. Chairman, organic law or any other law, except the appropriation bill of 1910, that authorizes any such office.

I do not make the point of order upon the words "chief clerk at $2,700." There was a law which provided a chief clerk, and the act of last year provides that the salaries fixed for offices established by law should be the salary; but the act, which I will read, does not provide that the offices shall be the same as those contained therein. I will read to the Chair. The legislative act approved July 16, 1914, contains this provision:

That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act are repealed, and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.

To obviate the difficulty that the House then had, because of points of order made with reference to salaries which had been in existence, some of them for 30 years or more, the Congress, upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], at the end of the conference report upon this bill last year, passed this last section in the act of 1914. Has the Chair that section before him?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the appropriation act before him.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is the last section in the bill. So it will appear that while the House—I do not know whether wisely or unwisely—did say that the salaries fixed by that bill for the offices contained in the bill should be the rate of compensation or salaries of officers or employees therein appropriated for, and whereas that constituted the rate for offices now authorized by law, and the salaries fixed in the act for 1914 could not be attacked on the ground that they were not the salaries in the organic law, the act did not undertake to say that the offices contained in the bill should thus be recognized as being fixed by law. I do not think my colleagues will dispute that what I state with reference to the law was correct.

Up to 1910, Mr. Chairman, the offices in the Indian Bureau were a commissioner, an assistant commissioner, and a chief clerk, under the organic law. I hope if I make any misstatement with reference to this I will be corrected by my friends on the committee or by anyone else. In 1910 the legislative appropriation act for the first time, and the only place where it was contained up to that time, inserted these words:

Indian Office: Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,000; second assistant commissioner, who shall perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,250.

That was subsequently increased to $2,750. I apprehend I need not recall to the attention of the chairman the fact that an office which for the first time is carried in an appropriation bill, even though thereafter appropriated for, does not become an office authorized by law so as to escape being subject to the point of order that it is not existing law and that it can not be appropriated for. If the Chair has any doubt upon that proposition, I will undertake to supply him with authority upon it. That is, no matter how long or how often you appropriate for an office in an appropriation bill, without using the words "hereafter" or "there shall be established" in such a division or department a particular office, the mere appropriation of money for an office created by an annual appropriation bill does not make that permanent law.

Up to 1910, therefore, we had nothing, either in the organic act or in any appropriation bill, which made this a permanent office; and in 1910 we had for the first time in an appropriation act a provision for a—

Second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,250.

So that the authority to appropriate for this office at all is not to be found in the organic law establishing the Indian Bureau, nor is it to be found in any statute establishing or creating the office of second assistant commissioner. It is only to be found in the legislative appropriation act, which at no time undertook to make it a permanent office. So that since 1910 it has simply been carried in the annual appropriation bill. True, the salary can not now be attacked as not being fixed by law, although it is far above the salary fixed in the statute.

I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that office of second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,750, is not authorized by law. I do not undertake to make a point of order against the chief clerk, but simply against the "second assistant commissioner, who shall perform the duties of." That is a new office; there are new duties to be performed, and there is no authority of law existing anywhere except in the annual appropriation bills to justify the appropriation.

Further, Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that a bureau whose duties ought to be diminishing ought not to have a useless office, created, I apprehend, not so much for the duties necessary to be performed as for the purpose of creating an office for some one. I make no such charge as that, but it looks that way. As we have increased the salary of this man since 1910 from $2,250 to $2,750, let them go back to the original organic law, and if we are to appropriate money, let us not appropriate it for useless offices and for extravagant salaries. If the Chair is in doubt about that proposition that this is not permanent law, because carried in an appropriation bill without any terms that fix it as permanent law, I hope he will give me an opportunity to present the authorities upon that subject. However, I do not think anyone will dispute that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia make the point of order upon the words "second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of"?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the remainder of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order on the entire clause.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have no desire to contest the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I wish to contest the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am disposed to make the point of order on all of it, but I was afraid I was going to run up against this proposition in reference to the amount of the salary having been carried heretofore in the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. If any portion of the clause is subject to a point of order, the entire clause is subject to it.

There is no doubt whatever that under the law and the rules existing prior to the passage of the legislative act of last year the mere carrying of an office in an appropriation bill was not to be considered as permanent law to authorize it to be inserted in an ensuing appropriation bill; and I take it to be true—I think the gentleman so asserted, and his assertion is good—that there is no permanent law in the form of an enactment providing for a second assistant commissioner in the Indian Office. That is also true, I believe, of the various financial clerks, of various chiefs of division, law clerk, of assistant chief of division, expert accountant, private secretary, examiner of irrigation accounts, draftsmen, and various other officials, and I shall make the point of order on all of them if this is sustained.

Let us find out where we are at. Last year, because of the fact that most of the items in the legislative bill were subject to a point of order, and because of the fact that it is practically impossible in one year to name all the officers in the different departments of the Government for permanent employment without there being an opportunity to increase the number next year, because most of the places named in the legislative act were subject to a point of order under the rules as heretofore construed, Congress provided in the legislative act in section 6, which my friend from Georgia has already quoted, as follows:

That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act are repealed, and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.

The Chair is called upon now to make a very important ruling, and the question is whether where Congress fixes a salary for an office it thereby authorizes the office itself. That is the only question involved here.

Suppose we should pass a law directly providing that hereafter the salary of the Second Assistant Commissioner of Patents shall be $2,750. The law itself only provides directly for the fixing of the salary, does it also authorize the office? Is it to be said that where Congress directly fixes the salary of a particular office, it does not warrant the office itself? I contend, Mr. Chairman, that by this provision of the law where Congress says that the rate of salary provided for a certain office shall be the rate hereafter, that they thereby provide for the office itself and make that permanent law until it shall be changed either by permanent legislation or by the annual appropriation bill; that if we leave it out of the annual appropriation bill, that office would be abolished; and that when we provide for an office and fix a salary for the office we authorize the office itself. That was the design of this amendment, that was the design of that provision in the legislative bill of last year. Without it we are not much better off under the rules of the House than we were before. The Chair will remember that last year paragraph after paragraph providing for whole offices went out of the bill on a point of order in the House. It was subsequently restored by unanimous consent, and the very purpose of section 6 of the legislative act of last year was to give the House control over these appropriations. When we provide for an office this year and fix the salary for that office, that item is in order next year under the rules of the House. Of course, it might have been made plainer. I appreciate that. But it could not have been made plainer without fixing it as permanent law, which could not be dropped out.

Now, if we fail to make an appropriation for an office, the officer can not bring a claim in the Court of Claims. If we specifically provided by legislation for the office of Second Assistant Commissioner of Patents at $2,750 a year and failed to make the appropriation, the Second Assistant Commissioner of Patents could bring a suit in the Court of Claims, and we would have to pay the salary. This section 6 was carefully prepared, and it gives to the House the right this year to treat as permanent law any office the salary of which was fixed in the legislative bill of last year. But if we drop it out this year, it does not give the officer any chance to make a claim in the Court of Claims.

If the Chair holds that while we fix the salary for the office we do not authorize the office, the legislative bill becomes the whim of any one Member of the House. You can not provide by law that there shall be so many clerks, so many other officials, so many law clerks, so many private secretaries, so many chiefs of division, as permanent law without tying the hands of the House, which primarily makes the appropriation for the departments in Washington. I hope the Chair will overrule the point of order made by myself, as well as the point of order made by my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair remembers distinctly when this matter was before the House in reference to the points of order made against increase of salaries on appropriation bills above that fixed by law. The Chair thinks and believes that it was the intention of Congress that the salary of all offices which were provided for by law and which were authorized to be provided for in appropriation bills should be permanently fixed according to the appropriation bill of 1914 of last year.

Now, the Chair does not take it that Congress intended in that provision to authorize all offices not provided by law, but only to fix the salaries of those offices which were provided by law according to section 6 of the act of July 16, 1914, and that the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that that provision made permanent all offices provided for in the last year's appropriation bill was not the intention of Congress, and the provision in the law did only apply to salaries and not to the offices not provided by law, and so the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. On both points of order?

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia and on the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the provisions for a forester at $3,000; financial clerk, $2,250; chiefs of divisions—1 $2,250, 1 $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; expert accountant, $2,000; private secretary, $1,800; examiner of irrigation accounts, $1,800.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Illinois inform the Chair whether or not the act establishing the Indian Office provided for these offices?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is the rule of the House that it is the duty of the gentlemen in charge of the bill, or the one proposing the proposition, to submit authority of law. I do not think there is any authority of law for these places.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is no statute creating those places. It is subject to a point of order. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not make the point of order. It is a part of the force and has been organized for years.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina:
Page 94, line 11, strike out "$325,000"——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, one moment. That amendment which I sent to the desk was to correct the total if the Chair sustained the point of order in respect to the $2,750 item. If the gentleman from Illinois insists upon his point of order, we will have to still further correct the total.

Mr. MANN. I have made the point of order and it has been sustained.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the total may be corrected by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the total.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I understand this proceeding, the position of second assistant Indian commissioner has been stricken out of the bill. To my certain knowledge the gentleman occupying the position of second assistant Indian commissioner has done a great proportion of the routine work in that office for a great many years. Commissioners may come and go and assistant commissioners may come and go, of whatever party, each doing everything that he can for our Indian people. Representing as I do a district which has 19 tribes of Indians in it, I know the detail work necessary in attempting to look after the many individual complaints and troubles of the Indians is enormous. Take away the office of second assistant commissioner and the result will be to greatly overload the Indian Commissioner and his assistant—both men of undoubted ability. Why, Mr. Chairman, even the matter of the payment for a coffin, to give a dead Indian a modern burial, frequently has to be decided by an official as high in authority as a second assistant Indian commissioner, involving oft a long routine.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this is simply another effort to economize at the wrong end, and in the wrong way. This is a necessary office.

Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet I desire to say that when the committee reaches page 104, where provision is made for the Post Office Department, I shall call attention to the fact that on several western Washington star routes, newly organized on a new pay system the 1st of July, the contractors have not as yet, after five months' hard service, received a cent of pay. What system prevails in the Post Office Department that permits this? In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, each one of those star-route carriers has received three letters from a firm of lawyers in this city offering to make those collections.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to intimate that there has been some jockeying with the bookkeeping and finances of the postal department in order to show a surplus?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, I would not intimate that, or any other intimation, but I do insist it is time that those star-route carriers who haul mail by the ton over the slippery rocks of the North Pacific coast, or along the hard puncheon roads in the forest reserves, should receive their pay. I hope that the long-delayed vouchers can be sent to them this very day, so that they may be received in time for Christmas.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman inform us how these attorneys came to know that these men were not paid?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have made efforts to find that out. One high official thinks that the names get out through the supplying of lists to prospective bondsmen. Another thinks the index cards get out of the case and fail to get back. Whatever the cause of the delay, it does seem a pity when times are hard out West, when interest on money is 8 and 10 per cent, that men who bid down to the very bone to get these contracts can not get their money.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]. I agree with all that the gentleman from Washington has said with regard to the duties of the second assistant Indian commissioner, and also in respect to the splendid services of the very efficient man who has for years filled that office. The gentleman from Washington, I think, misunderstands or misinterprets what has just occurred. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] does not seem to be on duty. For some unknown reason he is absent, and is not making his usual points of order. It is necessary in the consideration of one of these appropriation bills that some parliamentary sharp shall call attention to the possibilities which the bill contains. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] having failed at this crucial moment, others come to the rescue. Of course it does not really mean anything. I want to assure the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] that these items will all be cared for and provided for, and when the bill is signed the bill will contain all these items in exactly the same form in which they appear in the bill, possibly in greater amount——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). But it is necessary that someone somewhere develop the possibilities of the bill in regard to points of order, and I am glad we have not lost the valuable services of gentlemen who are capable of doing that sort of thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Can the gentleman guarantee that the rural-route carriers of far-western Washington will receive their six months' pay in time for Christmas?

Mr. MONDELL. I regret I can not guarantee that the Post Office Department will pay adequate attention to the star-route service. My experience is that they are too busy cutting down expenditures and providing for apparent surpluses to take as good care as they should of people who live out in the sparsely settled portions of the country who are served by star routes; but I do want to assure the gentleman in regard to these items that they will all be back in the bill in due and proper form, and in the meantime we have had an illustration of the fact that, in spite of the amendment adopted last year, there are still splendid and numerous opportunities to make points of order on the items in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by placing therein one or more letters from lawyers to star-route carriers in reference to the collection of their salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to place in the RECORD certain letters, as indicated by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1916 not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions hereinabove provided for shall be filled except by promotion or demotion from among those in the classified service in said bureau. The salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as hereinabove provided for shall not be available for expenditure but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I read in the newspapers the other day, I think, a statement by the Commissioner of Pensions that there had been such a reduction in his office that he would not be able to keep up with the current business. Is that a correct statement of the facts?

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman make that statement again?

Mr. MANN. I read in the newspapers the other day a statement attributed to the Commissioner of Pensions that owing to the reduction of the force in his office he would not be able to keep up with the current business.

Mr. BARTLETT. Just the contrary of that is true, according to his report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the newspapers have made some very extravagant statements about the reductions made in the Pension Office. They were absolutely without foundation——

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman if the Commissioner of Pensions is satisfied with the reductions which have been made and with the reduction which would be caused by this paragraph?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In answer to the gentleman I want to state that not only as to this bill but in the bill for the current year we gave the Commissioner of Pensions just exactly the number of people he asked for.

Mr. MANN. I know that; but the current year also provides that where vacancies occur that not more than 25 per cent of them shall be filled. Now, it would depend upon the number of vacancies. I am not referring to the number of people appropriated for, but whether that provision that only 25 per cent of the vacancies which occur shall be filled has crippled the office.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, I think not. The truth is, Mr. Chairman, that the force is very much larger than the work requires, but for reasons of humanity, which the gentleman will understand as well as I do, we are reducing this force not as radically as we might, but about as vacancies occur.

Mr. MANN. Well, did the Commissioner of Pensions make any protest against this proviso?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, he wanted those places left open for the purpose of administration, that is all.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by "purposes of administration"?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, he claimed that he should be allowed to fill more of these lower places. That was the statement made.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is satisfied, however, that the continuation of this will not cripple the office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Absolutely, Mr. Chairman. The commissioner asked for 83 reductions.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word just in order to say a word, because I made a statement to my friend the gentleman from Illinois, and I think it is proper that I should verify it.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to accept the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will examine the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, on pages 6 and 8, he will find that he treats the subject of saving and economy in the Pension Bureau over which he has charge and the reduction of force, and gives a statement of why it is done. First, that the abolition of these pension agencies and the inauguration of the new system of pay by check in place of vouchers has saved the Government $146,261 per annum, and that they have been able by that to reduce the force, and I make this statement because on yesterday the Commissioner of Pensions was before the subcommittee having the preparation of the pension appropriation bill in charge, and he there repeated the statement that he had been before the subcommittee which had charge of the preparation of this bill, saying they had given him everything that he asked for and that it was absolutely all that was necessary.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will my friend from Georgia yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOULDEN. The Commissioner of Pensions is entirely satisfied that he is able to conduct the affairs of his office satisfactorily and without any decrease in efficiency?

Mr. BARTLETT. Absolutely——

Mr. GOULDEN. That is all I desire to know.

Mr. BARTLETT (continuing). And if the gentleman will read the report, he will find that the commissioner has got all he asked for and all that he can reasonably expect to expend.

Mr. GOULDEN. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patent Office: Commissioner, $5,000; first assistant commissioner, $4,500; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk (who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner), $3,000; 4 law examiners, at $2,750 each; 3 examiners in chief, at $3,500 each; examiner of interferences, $2,700; examiners of trade-marks and designs—1 $2,700, first assistant $2,400, 6 assistants at $1,500 each; examiners—one of classification $3,600, 43 principals at $2,700 each, 63 first assistants at $2,400 each, 73 second assistants at $2,100 each, 88 third assistants at $1,800 each, 110 fourth assistants at $1,500 each; financial clerk, who shall give bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,250; librarian, $2,000; 6 chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; 3 assistant chiefs of divisions, at $1,800 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the commissioner, $1,800; translator of languages, $1,800; clerks—9 of class 4, 9 of class 3, 17 of class 2, 130 of class 1, 90 at $1,000 each; 3 skilled draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 4 draftsmen, at $1,000 each; messenger and property clerk, $1,000; 90 copyists; 50 copyists, at $720 each; 4 messengers; 25 assistant messengers; laborers—14 at $600 each, 42 at $540 each; 40 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $1,322,390.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph carrying the Patent Office. A large number of these places are not provided for by law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is the item?

Mr. MANN. The whole paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You want to make a point of order against it?

Mr. MANN. Yes. I want to show the absurdity of the contention that you make.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Illinois shown that these places are not provided for by law?

Mr. MANN. There is no way of showing the negative. The gentleman from Wyoming ought to have learned before this that when you prove a thing you prove the positive and not the negative. Unless the Chair desires me to read all the Revised Statutes and the Statutes at Large clear through, there will be no other way of demonstrating there is no law on the subject.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has not claimed that these places are not provided for by law other than by making the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I made the statement that a large number of them were provided for by law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Of course, the gentleman knows that if there are places in this paragraph not provided for by law it is fatal to the whole paragraph. And, I tell you, that a number of these places have been carried in the appropriation bill year by year and not provided for by law. Most of them have been created by the administrative officers of the bureau.

Mr. MANN. I think they ought to be carried by law. Of course, I do not think the sustaining of the point of order will take them out of the bill in the end. I think if the law passed last year was not sufficient, we ought to pass one that makes these items in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We were dealing with salaries last year.

Mr. MANN. We were dealing with places. Last year the point of order was made against the places, and they went out of the bill, and it was for the purpose of correcting that that section 6 was put in the bill. I am not going to quarrel with the ruling. I just exercise my privilege under that ruling.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman made the point of order and got a ruling in accordance with his suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman say that the items are subject to the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. There are items in there that are not provided for by law.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Education: Commissioner, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,000; specialist in higher education, $3,000; editor, $2,000; statistician, $1,800; specialist in charge of land-grant college statistics, $1,800; 2 translators, at $1,800 each; collector and compiler of statistics, $2,400; specialists—1 in foreign educational systems and 1 in educational systems, at $1,800 each; clerks—4 of class 4; 4 of class 3; 5 of class 2; 8 of class 1; 7 at $1,000 each; 6 copyists; copyists—2 at $800 each; 1, $720; 2 skilled laborers, at $840 each; messenger; assistant messenger; laborers—3 at $480 each; 1, $400; in all, $75,200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. It contains various places not provided for by existing law, and hence contrary to the rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigation of rural education and industrial education, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and no salary shall be paid hereunder in excess of $3,500 per annum, $30,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman from South Carolina explain what is proposed to be done by the expenditure of this $30,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir. They are spending $30,000 in making investigation of rural and industrial education, a small part of it being used in the District of Columbia for clerical services.

Mr. MOORE. Is this new work?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no. This work was begun several years ago. This is not a new item in the bill at all. This is the current law. There is no change.

Mr. MOORE. I notice that later on in the bill——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that the item was put in on the floor of the House after a full debate two or three years ago.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman explain in a word of just what this investigation consists?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; I can not. As I stated to the gentleman, this appropriation was begun by action of the House itself. It was inaugurated on a small scale, and the House increased it two or three years ago.

Mr. MOORE. We have provided for certain lines of agricultural education in the Lever-Smith bill. Later on we propose to have a census of agriculture, which in a way will be educational; and I would like to know if the gentleman can tell just how this money is apportioned and what results are acquired as the result of the investigation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not answer that question.

Mr. MOORE. And yet the appropriation has been regularly made heretofore. Is it for the purpose of imparting information to schools and colleges, for instance?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir; they have experts who travel and confer with and cooperate with the schools of the country.

Mr. MOORE. Industrial education is spoken of here. Does that mean an examination of manual-training schools?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; they send people to these industrial centers, and they confer with those who are in charge of industrial schools and give them such information as they can and such suggestions as they are able to give in regard to their methods and the improvement of their methods.

Mr. MOORE. That is to say, the National Bureau of Education, through this investigation and by these visitations, aids in disseminating information to rural schools and industrial schools?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir; that is the purpose of the appropriation, and that is the way they claim it is expended.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman give us any idea of the nature of the reports that are printed in regard to this investigation? Is he familiar with the printed reports with reference to it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He makes a report every year covering the entire operations and activities of the Bureau of Education, not only this particular item but all other activities of his bureau. I think the gentleman will find the reports interesting reading.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman regards this as necessary work, does he?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, Congress thought so.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the chairman of the committee yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SLOAN. In this behalf is it not true that the Bureau of Education during the last year has employed two or three of the leading educators of the United States, especially versed in rural education, and do they not travel through various parts of the United States gathering such information as they can and cooperating with the rural teaching forces of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am satisfied that is true.

Mr. SLOAN. I happen to know one or two of the people so employed, and I know them to be persons eminently qualified to do this kind of work from the results following.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman explain what it is that they do? That is what I am trying to get at. It is easy to say they travel and visit these schools.

Mr. SLOAN. The rural schools, I will say to the gentleman from Philadelphia, are country schools in the rural communities, and not schools in the metropolitan parts of the country.

Mr. MOORE. Of course I understood that very well, and, knowing the characteristics of the section of the country the gentleman comes from, I would assume he was versed in those matters.

Mr. BRYAN. How would the gentleman know he comes from that part of the country?

Mr. MOORE. By looking at him. [Laughter.] But the gentleman from Nebraska has not answered my question.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not given me an opportunity. If the gentleman will give me time, I will proceed. I may say I obtained my time from the chairman, and if the gentleman will indorse the chairman's action, I will proceed. [Laughter.] In numerous States there are highly developed specialists in particular lines of education, and they are all interested in rural education. So is the National Bureau of Education. These activities are based upon and grew out of the movement on the part of various civic organizations throughout the country known as the "back to the land movement." There is a movement "back to the soil" for the purpose of popularizing country life. Part of country life, of course, is its educational system. The various States of the Union through their educational authorities have worked up excellent systems of rural schools. Some of them have special merit. Some of them develop special features.

It was thought by the educational forces of the country, as I understand it, that the cooperation of the Federal Government with these various educators in all the States, bringing to bear what is found to be good in each of the States and what is found to be good by the national educational authorities, can not help, when coordinated and published to the world, accompanied by the advice given by these experts who have given their life work to rural or industrial education who are now in the employ of the Government, to work out good for the general development of these educational systems throughout the country. The best in each State is sought to be brought into other States; and the best obtained by the bureau from foreign countries to be disseminated among the States.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Suppose a school in the gentleman's district desired to have one of these specialists and desired to benefit from these investigations. How would they go about it? Would they communicate with the Commissioner of Education and ask him to send to them one of these specialists?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. That is the method. It is designed to bring about a cooperation with the rural and industrial educational authorities. It is not limited to the rural school systems. It extends also to industrial systems. The bureau has an industrial specialist. This appropriation provides for a specialist on school building and sanitation, one on administration, one on courses of study, one for primary work, and one for domestic science.

Mr. MOORE. I am very much interested in industrial education, and that is the reason why I asked the question whether the services of these trained men would be available to cities as well as to the country.

Mr. SLOAN. That is my information, and the text of this paragraph would also indicate it. Nor are the villages neglected in this general plan.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman has thrown more light on the subject than the members of the committee have done, and I should like to ask him whether, in his judgment, this appropriation should continue, and whether those services are really worth the price we pay for them?

Mr. SLOAN. I can assure the gentleman they are well worth it. They are one of the most helpful features of rural education in the United States. The appropriation should be continued, and as this work goes on future Congressmen will gladly vote more liberal appropriations for this, one of the best and most salutary educational enterprises.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word. If the gentleman from the great city of Philadelphia had had the time to look over the hearings which were held by the subcommittee having under consideration the preparation of this bill a year ago he would have found a very full and elaborate explanation on the part of the very able and efficient Commissioner of Education as to exactly what was being done and what was expected to be done by the Bureau of Education under this appropriation. I do not care to take up the time of the committee to read it, unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania or some other member of the committee desires it, but if the gentleman wants the information he can find it on pages 458 and 459 of those hearings. I am going to ask permission to insert those pages in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. MOORE. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that statement in these very voluminous hearings, and I shall be obliged to him if he will put it in the RECORD, because I think it is very valuable information.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In explaining how the particular appropriation asked for a year ago was to be used and what it was expected to accomplish, the commissioner said:

> The four specialists in rural education that this bureau now has can do only a small fraction of the work needed in this division. They can not respond to one-fourth of the requests from State, county, and local school officials for information, advice, and assistance. The additional amount asked for will enable the bureau to respond to the more important and urgent of these demands. There are in the United States about 250,000 rural-school teachers and approximately 10,000,000 rural-school pupils. The work of these schools is badly planned, poorly organized, and ineffectively done. With an adequate force of rural-school specialists, this bureau could give much valuable help. Investigations and reports should be made immediately on rural-school consolidation, increase in length of school term, supervision, and the better adaptation of the courses of study to the needs of rural communities.
> Of this increase, $31,700 will be needed for the investigation and promotion of industrial education. The most important demand on our schools and our systems of education is for such extension and readjustment as will enable them to give the industrial and vocational education needed and demanded by modern industrial life. Many requests come to this bureau for information and help which it is unable to give. There is need for a careful and fundamental study of the problems involved. This bureau is the proper agency for such study. The amount estimated will enable the bureau to make the study and to give the help needed when requested. If this appropriation is made, the chief specialist mentioned in the note should serve as the head of the division, and, with his assistant, should give his immediate attention to the problems of trade schools and vocational education in the city schools. The three remaining specialists mentioned in the note and their assistants should be assigned to the investigation and promotion of agricultural education in secondary schools, education in home economics, and commercial education.
> Of this increase, $9,800 will be needed for the investigation and promotion of school hygiene and sanitation. The health of the children is an important interest to the Nation. The establishment of health is the first principle in education. Every community is interested in the proper structure and sanitation of schoolhouses and in the hygienic conduct of its schools. Hundreds of requests come to the sanitation and hygiene division of this bureau for information, advice, and direction which it is unable to give. Part-time service of one special agent is wholly inadequate. The sum estimated will enable the bureau to give much valuable help. Of the two specialists mentioned in the note, one should be an expert in school architecture and sanitation, and one should be a physician with sufficient medical knowledge to give expert advice in regard to the medical inspection of children in the schools and other means of preserving the health of children.

I merely desire to say, in addition to what the commissioner has so well and forcibly said, that this is a very valuable work. The appropriation is abundantly justified by the work which the commissioner and his able corps of assistants are performing. I for one have felt that it would have been advisable to have granted a slight increase in behalf of rural and industrial education. Certainly the current appropriation should be continued.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Office of Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds: Superintendent, $6,000; chief clerk, $2,000; chief electrical engineer, $3,000; civil engineer, $2,400; 2 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; compensation to disbursing clerk, $1,000; messenger; person in charge of the heating of the Supreme Court and central portion of the Capitol, $1,000; laborer in charge of water-closets in central portion of the Capitol, $660; 7 laborers for cleaning Rotunda, corridors, Dome, and old library portion of Capitol, at $660 each; 2 laborers in charge of public closets of the House of Representatives and in the terrace, at $720 each; bookkeeper and accountant, $2,200; in all, $29,960.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BRYAN. The brief remarks I desire to make, perhaps, ought to be made under "Public buildings and grounds" rather than under the "Capitol Building and Grounds," but I will consume but a very little time, and I hope there will be no objection, even though it is slightly out of order.

A committee of workmen employed in the public parks, consisting of L. E. McGowan, J. F. Essig, and H. S. Reese, called on me the other day and presented to me a copy of a letter that had been written to the Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and stated that Mr. FITZGERALD had sent them to me. I did not understand why he sent them to me, unless he was perhaps somewhat facetious; but a little later they showed to me in conversation the names of those to whom Mr. FITZGERALD had referred them, and among them was the name of Congressman J. W. BYRNS, rather than my own name. Nevertheless they left a letter with me, and I am going to place it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and call attention to the matter which they presented.

These workmen showed that President Wilson, according to newspaper reports, had taken up the question of trying to get an increase of wages for the laborers working under the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and that he asked Secretary Tumulty to take up the matter with Chairman FITZGERALD, of the House, with a view to increasing the pay of these men.

The communication shows that they receive $1.60 a day, and that they are paid every 30 days; that they have no chance of promotion; that they are laid off in bad weather; and that they would like an increase to $2 per day and would like to be paid twice a month, as workmen are paid in other departments. The letter shows a scale of wages in other cities; for instance, New York, $2.50 a day, paid weekly; Richmond, Va., $2.25, paid twice monthly; Baltimore, Md., $2.50 per day, paid weekly; Chicago, Ill., $2.25 a day, paid twice a month. It is shown that the Government departments, except this office of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, pay better wages and pay twice a month, and that these men are not receiving, according to their view and what appears to be the view of the President and others, a fair and just consideration.

I spoke to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] about the matter, and he said the appropriation was made in a lump sum, and it was up to the local officer who disbursed that money to raise their wages if he felt he could do it; and the gentleman added that he believed that the wages ought to be raised. But this committee informed the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. FITZGERALD, through their communication, that they have been to the local officer who has charge of the matter, Col. Hartz, and he has informed them that he can not do anything without an additional appropriation.

I think that matter is something that ought to be considered, and that arrangements ought to be made to give to these men more adequate consideration. One dollar and sixty cents a day certainly does not pay them for the work that they do.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Considering the present condition of the country, caused by Democratic legislation, when millions of men are now seeking a chance to earn 50 cents a day, or any other sum, does not the gentleman think that these men are lucky to have a job at all?

Mr. BRYAN. They may be lucky to have a job at all. That may be true; but that is not an economic reason for reducing the wages of those who are working. I do not believe the wages of those who are working ought to be held below an amount necessary for the sustenance of life merely because there are a good many unemployed. I do not believe that is the right solution. Of course, as the gentleman from Illinois says, they may consider themselves lucky in having a job at all; and of course the gentleman from Illinois agrees with me as to the payment of adequate wages by the Government, whether times are good or bad.

The letter I referred to follows:

DECEMBER 1, 1914.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
House of Representatives.

SIR: We, the undersigned, park employees of the Public Buildings and Grounds, respectfully petition an increase in salaries from $1.60 per diem to $2 per day, and we appeal to Congress through you.

Under the existing circumstances we can not be promoted, hence we appeal to you for justice, as we are not protected by the classified civil service, but are paid from an appropriation from Congress, in which the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds pays the said employees. We also ask to be paid twice monthly, like most of the other departments.

We just recently petitioned Col. Harts, who is in charge of the public buildings and grounds, and he informed us that he can not do anything without an appropriation from Congress.

There are about 300 men in this department, the majority of whom are married and have families to support.

Following is the wage scale per day paid to park employees in several other cities: New York, $2.50 per day, paid weekly; Richmond, Va., $2.25 per day, paid twice monthly; Baltimore, Md., $2.50 per day, paid weekly; and Chicago, Ill., $2.25 per day, paid twice monthly.

This is the minimum wage scale for park employees in these cities, while in the Capital City the minimum wage scale is $1.60 per day, and we are paid only once a month. It seems to us employees that we are unjustly discriminated against. Ours are the most beautiful parks in the world, and yet we are paid less for caring for them than any of the employees in the other cities.

We hereby submit a list of salaries paid in the different departments of Washington:

Department of the Interior: Salaries for unskilled laborers, $480, $540, $600, and $660 per annum. The payments are made twice monthly, and 30 days of both annual and sick leave of absence are allowed.

Department of Agriculture: Salaries paid to unskilled laborers, $40 to $70 per month, paid twice monthly; 30 days annual leave and 15 days sick leave.

National Zoological Park: Salaries paid to unskilled laborers, from $1 to $2.25 per day, according to age and ability and the character of the work for which they are employed. They are paid twice monthly, receive pay for legal holidays, and are allowed annual leave for not more than 30 days. Temporary laborers are allowed leave for 1 and 1¼ days per month when employed 9 months.

Government Printing Office: Salaries paid to unskilled laborers are at the rate of 25 cents per hour. They are paid biweekly and are allowed 30 days annual leave of absence. No sick leave is allowed.

These facts have been furnished by various chief clerks of these departments.

So we appeal to Congress for justice, and hope you will take the matter under consideration at once.

Respectfully,

L. E. MCGOWAN,
J. F. ESSIG,
H. S. REESE,
Committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RUSSELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 55.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn December 23, 1914, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Tuesday, December 29, 1914.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arizona: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $10,000; contingent expenses, $1,500; in all, $14,500.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The estimate for the surveyor general's office for the State of Arizona was $17,800, $3,000 for the surveyor general, $13,000 for clerks, and $1,800 for contingent expenses. The clerks' item has been reduced to $10,000 and the contingent expenses to $1,400. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why that reduction was made. I do not find anything in the hearings with regard to those items. I find that in nearly every case the appropriation for clerk hire and contingent expenses in the offices of the surveyors general has been reduced below the estimates. There is but one or two exceptions. Why was that done? There were no hearings on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. Arizona last year had $13,000 for clerk hire and they expended $9,346. We give them $10,000 in this bill, which is $700 in excess of what they expended last year. For incidentals they spent last year $1,418, and we give them $1,500 in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. But the subcommittee did not interrogate the commissioner with regard to these items, as to their necessities for the coming year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We thought what they actually expended was a pretty safe guide for what they needed.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in these cases it is not necessarily any guide at all. The necessary expenditures under these appropriations in the offices of the surveyors general depend entirely upon the amount and extent of the surveys. The department knows to what extent the surveys have progressed, and the department estimates with a view of giving the surveyors general a sufficient force to work up the pending surveys. If that is not done, these surveys will in a short time get far behind. There are some of the States now where the surveyor general's office is several years behind in its examination of surveys. The gentleman will recall that last year the suggestion was made by the department that these appropriations for clerks and for contingent expenses should be in a lump sum, in order that they might be transferred from one office to another. The committee did not see fit to do that. I think it should have been done, but the committee continues to appropriate in this way. Now, in this condition of affairs it is inevitable that there will be a surplus in some of these offices, but I do not believe the committee can safely appropriate without investigation an amount below that which the department asks for; and I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is nothing that disorganizes the Public Land Service to such an extent as delay in the offices of the surveyors general. We are not only making many original surveys, but we are making many resurveys, and during the period of those surveys the land titles in the region are tied up. No entries can be made. No final proofs can be made, and it is exceedingly important that these surveys be worked up in the surveyor general's office promptly and sent on to the department here, so that the surveys can be accepted or rejected, as the case may be. It seems to me that without any investigation of the matter at all the subcommittee is certainly not justified in cutting down these items. Not only this one, but most of the items, including California, Colorado, Montana, and half a dozen other States, have been reduced below the estimate without any investigation by the subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 102, line 11, by striking out the figures "$10,000" and inserting the figures "$13,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 102, line 11, strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert "$13,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, one of the things that it has always been difficult for me to understand is why, as the public lands of the United States become less and less, so much more money is called for to administer them. This office of the surveyor general in Arizona in 1906 was able to get along with $4,500. In 1912 this was jumped from $8,000, the amount at which it had stood for a number of years, to $13,000. And what is true with respect to Arizona is true with respect to all the public-land States, only some of them have had larger increases than Arizona.

The departments always ask for every possible dollar that they can spend. They want more money than they can spend.

This committee had before it the very best possible information upon which to base this bill, and that is what they actually expended last year. Last year they had just what they are asking for next year. According to their own estimates, they did not contemplate that their work would increase any over what they had to do last year, because they are asking for only $13,000. So we base this appropriation, not only in Arizona but in all these public-land offices, on the amount they actually expended. They had $13,000. They expended $9,346. We give them $10,000, or about $700 more than they expended last year; and I hope that the Committee of the Whole will keep this amount at what the Committee on Appropriations fixed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 12, page 102, by striking out the figures "1,500" and inserting "1,800."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 102, line 12, strike out the figures "1,500" and insert "1,800."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They spent $1,400 last year, and we gave them $1,500, a little margin.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee cut this item without any knowledge or information whatever, without making any efforts to secure information as to the necessities of the service. They assume that because the service last year used a certain amount——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Not until I have finished this sentence—they assumed that because the service last year used a certain amount that therefore two years later it will need the same amount. Well, it might need more and it might need less, as everyone knows who knows anything about the character of this service. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York wish to interrogate the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not now.

Mr. MONDELL. If the subcommittee had made any investigation into this matter, there would have been no reasonable ground for criticism. There has been no investigation. There was simply an examination of what was spent last year, with an assumption that no more will be needed and no less than was needed two years prior to the period we are appropriating for. That is as curious a theory on which to base appropriations as I ever heard of anywhere. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not care to ask any question now.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well. There are some of these States where the work of the surveyor general's office is two or three years behind. This is or has been true in the State of Utah. You have not reduced the appropriation for the State of Utah, because they used all of their appropriation last year. They would have used more if they had had it. There are settlers in that State who have been waiting two or three years to get their patents because the work has not been done. What ought to be done with these items is to lump them. There is no sense in carrying items for clerk hire and contingent expenses in surveyor general's offices in separate items. It necessarily results in a surplus in some cases and a failure to perform work, by reason of lack of appropriation, in other cases. The committee has reduced the appropriation in my own State for the surveyor general's office, and yet I frequently have appeals to have the work in the surveyor general's office expedited. There is complaint of delay in the examination of surveys after the surveys have been made in the field. We have township after township entirely withdrawn from entry and where it is almost impossible to make land transfers because men do not know with regard to their survey. And yet there is a reduction here without examination, without information, simply on the theory that the office will need no more than it had two years before the time when these appropriations are to be available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming may have some secret method by which he would obtain information on these matters other than that possessed by the committee, but I do not believe his information would be of any value, or of as much value as that which the committee had before it. For instance, in the case of which he is complaining the department last year asked that $13,000 be appropriated for clerk hire in the surveyor general's office in Arizona. Thirteen thousand dollars was appropriated, and yet only $9,346 was expended.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman talking about the current year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not the current year, because we have not finished the current year. No one can submit an estimate with accuracy as to just how much will be expended, and no one is able to tell with accuracy how much will be needed. Judgment must be based upon something; the committee bases its judgment upon the facts and experience of the past rather than upon fanciful imaginations concerning the future. That is a basis that is frequently adopted by gentlemen in trying to determine how much money should be appropriated for a service in which they are interested. One class of men take the record and experience of the past and arrive at a conclusion, while others try to anticipate the future and base their estimate upon what they fancy may be necessary.

In the item under consideration $1,500 is recommended instead of $1,800, because last year $1,400 was the total expenditure. It may be of some value to call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming to the situation in his own State, which he criticizes. For the fiscal year 1914 the department asked $22,300 for clerk hire, and $20,000 was appropriated. All that was expended was $12,365; the service could not possibly expend, within $8,000, the amount the committee allowed.

Merely in the hope that in some way some one will devise some means to expend all the money that is appropriated is not sufficient justification to grant requests for appropriation. Then the gentleman from Wyoming must remember that his side of the House has been criticizing this administration so violently for making large appropriations that he should be one of the last to complain when some effort is made to curtail appropriations. The trouble is—and it is illustrated by the gentleman from Wyoming—everyone preaches economy, but no one is willing to have it practiced at the expense of the particular service in which he happens to be interested.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman from New York in view of what he has said will not leave the Hall, but will be here when we reach a provision in the bill where it is attempted to appropriate $3,000,000 for a new project, an entirely useless object. He can prove himself a real economist.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am here during the consideration of this bill, and when the provision is reached to which the gentleman refers I shall be here, and I may give the gentleman the shock of his life. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that does not alter the fact that for the recommendation in this bill there is ample justification and no excuse to increase this particular provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

California: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $10,000; contingent expenses, $1,400; in all, $14,400.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The estimate for California was $16,400, and the amount appropriated for the surveyor general's office is $14,400. There has been a reduction below the amounts estimated in practically every one of these States. I think there are only two exceptions. I do not think the committee had sufficient information upon the subject. The Land Office ought to be able to determine with a great deal of accuracy how much money they need. I will tell the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] how in the year he refers to the surveyor general's office in Wyoming failed to use its appropriation. A new surveyor general was appointed. There were two widows and an unmarried woman in the office force who had long been employed in the office, and it seems to have occurred to the new surveyor general or some one in authority that it would be a very excellent idea to deprive those good women of their jobs. One of those ladies, all of whom were efficient clerks, was the widow of a man long known in our State as an active, influential Democrat. But neither character, service, or efficiency counted, and these women, dependent upon the money that they earned in this office for a livelihood, one of them, at least, having children dependent upon her, long in the service, faithful and efficient, were discharged. Of course that left the force of the surveyor general's office reduced. It is true they did not use the entire amount of the appropriation that year. It is also true that the work of the office was not promptly taken care of, but that is not any reason why this appropriation should be cut down below the estimates without information as to the amount needed. I shall not offer amendments to the other items—Idaho, Nevada, Washington, and other States—until I reach the item for my own State, because I realize how useless it would be.

The committee evidently has determined not to increase these items without regard to the evidence as to the necessity for an increase, and that being the case I do not desire to take up the time of the committee discussing these matters. I have, however, no sort of question but that these items will all be restored, and gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol will get the credit for providing for the public service in a proper way. Let me suggest again that this method of making these appropriations is evidently not the best method. Clerk hire and contingent expenses in the surveyor general's office should be appropriated for in a lump sum, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office should apportion it as it is needed. Of course that would not in every case please the surveyors general. It would not give them the control that they now have over their funds, but it would be in the interest of public business, because the department can estimate with reasonable accuracy the total amount needed, and it can be used where it is needed to bring this work up and make and keep it current.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wyoming: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $12,500; contingent expenses, $500; in all, $16,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, on page 103, line 9, I move to strike out the figures "$12,500" and insert "$20,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what his record is as to the amount expended the last fiscal year in the surveyor general's office in Wyoming for clerk hire.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Twelve thousand three hundred and sixty-five dollars and thirty-four cents.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have explained to the committee why more of that clerk-hire money was not expended. I know that in Wyoming this amount is needed. I will not say the work of the surveyor general's office is badly in arrears, but it is not current, and we are making such surveys as will necessitate the use of as large a sum of money as is appropriated, if the work is to be kept current. There is no branch of the public service that is more important to our people than this matter of having surveys, after they have been executed in the field, examined in the surveyor general's office, platted, and made ready for the commissioner and for his approval. While these lands are being resurveyed—and that is the character of the surveys in our State, mostly—no entries can be made. It is difficult to make transfers, because the land lines and the land corners depend, of course, upon the new survey, and during that period settlement is retarded. Settlers can not make proof on their entries and transfers are difficult.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if he can tell when the new surveyor general for Wyoming was appointed or assumed office?

Mr. MONDELL. Something less than two years ago.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman remember the month?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not. It is not quite two years ago. It was very soon after the new administration was inaugurated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Several months must have intervened, I take it, after the inauguration of the new administration.

Mr. MONDELL. Not much time was lost, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That has not been the case in some other matters.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not criticize the appointment or the fact that it was made promptly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the gentleman stated a while ago that the fact that there was so little money used during the fiscal year 1914 was due to the fact that there was a new surveyor general appointed. I am unable to say how that could affect the proposition when the new surveyor general could not possibly have come in and assumed office until about the time or possibly after the fiscal year had closed.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no. The discharge of clerks and the fact that their salaries were not paid and new clerks were not immediately appointed of course reduced the amount used, but clearly the gentleman from Tennessee has the wrong year in his mind. If he will recall the new surveyor general would have been in office nearly all the year to which he refers.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MONDELL. However that may be, I do know the situation of the surveyor general's office in Wyoming. My understanding is that he is going to use all the money that he has this year, and it is on the basis of this year's appropriation and not of last year's appropriation that this should be provided. In view of the fact that I have some real information on the subject I hope the committee will accept my amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman misunderstands me. I understand the gentleman to give as the reason for the amount of money that was spent during the year 1914 the fact that a new surveyor general had been named and that he discharged certain clerks?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; that is one of the reasons.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, the expenditures to which the gentleman refers and which he was seeking to explain were made during the fiscal year 1914, and the new administration did not come into power until March, 1913, only three months before the close of that particular fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has got the wrong year in his head.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is generally very clear, but he is just a year off in his statement.

Mr. MANN. The fiscal year 1914 did not commence until July 1, 1913, four months after President Wilson was inaugurated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like, if I can, to get a little information. I notice under this Wyoming item the contingent expenses are $5,000. The appropriation for clerk hire was $12,500, and the total expenses of that office are $16,000, including the pay of the surveyor general. What do these contingent expenses consist of?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are put down here as incidentals. We appropriated in 1914 $1,200. They spent—and that corresponds with what we call here in the department miscellaneous or contingent expenses—$400. Out of the $1,200 appropriated they spent $400 and——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from South Carolina naturally this year, under the circumstances, has no greater information on the subject than I have. Here is a curiosity. Here is Wyoming with a surveyor general's office with a total appropriation of $1,600. It has $500 contingent expenses, while Colorado, with a total appropriation of $27,250, considerably less than twice as much, has a contingent expense item of $3,250, more than six times as much as the Wyoming office.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They may have rented a building out of that; I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Well, I say the gentleman does not know. If they have to rent a building in one place, they have in another place probably.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Not necessarily, because we have public buildings in some places and we have not them in others.

Mr. MANN. We have a public building at Denver, Colo.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But we may not have a building for a Government land office.

Mr. MANN. For Arizona there was a total appropriation of $14,500; contingent expenses, $1,500, three times as much as over in Wyoming, though the total expense of the Wyoming office is greater than the one in Arizona. California is the same thing, and the same thing is true in Idaho, and the same thing is probably true in New Mexico. South Dakota, with a total appropriation of $5,600, has contingent expenses of $500 only, the same amount as in Wyoming where they have three times the appropriation. Evidently somebody somewhere is trying to cut very close on contingent expenses or somebody somewhere is very extravagant with contingent expenses.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. All the gentleman says is true, and I hope the General Land Office will inquire and report to the Committee on Appropriations why there should be any such difference in the contingent expenses of the various land offices.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman from South Carolina will accept my amendment in this case, in view of the fact that I am informed with regard to the needs of this office. The surveyor general of our State is a good Democrat. I do not desire to see him embarrassed in the performance of his duty by reason of the fact that he is not given a sufficient appropriation. I am constantly importuned with regard to surveys; I am posted in regard to the condition of our surveys, and I know that if our people are to be properly served the surveyor general must have the amount which was estimated. While I am not able to say in regard to the other States, I do know in regard to Wyoming that the surveyor general ought to have this amount if he is to do promptly the necessary work.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we have treated Wyoming just like we have all the other land offices. We have inserted in this bill an amount in excess of what they expended during the fiscal year 1914.

Mr. MANN. But you cut closer than in any other place.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that the year he refers to was a year of transfer from one surveyor general to another. There was a reduction in force. The work was not kept current. Of course they did not use as much money as they need next year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I will call the gentleman's attention to another thing. He says in his estimate he does not expect to use as many people in 1916 as he had in 1914.

Mr. MONDELL. Not the surveyor general of Wyoming; he does not say so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I mean the estimates that came to us.

Mr. MONDELL. By and large, that is what the Land Office may say in regard to the entire field; but I am talking about Wyoming.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But I am talking about Wyoming, too; and he does not ask for as many clerks in the land office in Wyoming for the fiscal year 1916 as he had, according to his detailed statement, in 1914, when he expended $12,365.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman understands this, that he may not have or expect to have more clerks than he had altogether during the fiscal year of 1914, but quite a number of those clerks were temporary and not in the office the entire year. I have explained to the gentleman there were some vacancies that were not filled, and while the total number of clerks may be no larger or less the clerks will be employed the entire year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He is asking for 10 clerks less now than he had in 1914, when he expended only $12,000.

Mr. MONDELL. It is possible, of course, that office has clerks that are not paid out of this appropriation at all. Frequently a considerable force in the surveyor general's office is not paid out of this appropriation, but is paid by parties seeking mineral surveys.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, well, that is an entirely different matter. We are appropriating for a particular force. Now, the gentleman tells us that he has another force. But we should not pay for them.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, now, the gentleman wants to be fair——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). And if the surveyor general made any suggestion about the reduction of 10, the number of people in his office, he could not have had in mind his regular force paid out of this appropriation. That was impossible. If he is making any estimate of such reduction as that, it must be on the theory that his other force will not be as large, which is not paid out of this appropriation. I reiterate what I have said, and I desire to emphasize it, that I know the condition of that office and know that it will be necessary for them to have these clerks; that the estimate provides for totaling $20,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman is looking at page 101 of the estimates?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am looking at page 293 of the skeleton bill. It is the same thing.

Mr. MANN. I notice under the heading of those intended to be employed at this office that they intended to employ 16 persons, and the estimate is $20,000. The gentleman says that is a reduction of 10 persons. I notice in the other column corresponding, employed during the fiscal year 1914, 26 persons. It will be a reduction, but the 26 persons received $12,365 salary, and among the 26 persons were 8 draftsmen, each at $1,200; 2 clerks, each at $1,400; 2 clerks, each at $1,200; 5 temporary draftsmen, each at $1,200. And I have only enumerated a few of the 26. Those which I have enumerated call for salaries of a total of more than $20,000. So that the gentleman will see that while they employ 26 persons, that did not mean continuous employment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. There is no reduction in the number of employees at all. There is an increase that is asked for in the number of employees in the office. In other words, the eight draftsmen at $1,200 each did not mean that they had eight draftsmen at $1,200 each at all. If the surveyor general can not do work in his office any better than this kind of statement means, he is inefficient and ought to be removed from office. The gentleman will agree to that, I am sure. That would lead anyone to believe that they had 26 persons, whereas they had one person employed one day, and another person another day, and a third person employed the third day, on the same job, and he calls it three persons at $1,200 each.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think there were 26 people who were employed at some time during that year, but they were not employed all the time. That is what I think it means.

Mr. MANN. No doubt. Twenty-six persons, all with as high salaries as the 16 persons. He figures up the 26 persons at $12,000 and 16 persons at $20,000, although there is no increase in salary. So the gentleman's argument rather falls to the ground.

Mr. JOHNSON or South Carolina. The condition is this: The report for 1914 states what he actually paid out to these people. For 1916 he is stating what he expects to pay out, and he contemplates employing those 16 people at that salary all the time. And that is $20,000.

Mr. MANN. I am with the gentleman. I voted with the gentleman on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]; but I felt the gentleman from Wyoming was making a pretty strong case, and I think my friend from South Carolina thought it until, I think, he got an erroneous impression from this statement that there was a reduction in the number of employees from 26 to 16, when there is no reduction intended in the number of employees. The statement would lead anyone to believe that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There would not be as many people employed temporarily; there would be fewer people employed all the time. That is the difference.

Mr. MANN. There would be as many people employed at any one time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Possibly so.

Mr. MANN. That is the way we count. We say that there are 435 Members. We do not say that in one Congress there are 445 Members because some of them have resigned and have had successors appointed; but this fellow would.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I think we have provided ample funds for all these offices. Let us vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. It ought to be noted that all but 4 of the 24 who voted in the negative came out of the catacombs. There were only four Democratic Members on the floor during the discussion. The rest voted as they usually vote, without knowledge or sense. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 103, line 9, the figures "$12,500" and insert the figures "$18,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 103, line 9, by striking out "$12,500" and inserting "$18,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, it strikes me as hardly fair on the part of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] to call in from the cloakrooms enough of his people who have not heard a word of the discussion on this item to vote down the amendment which I offered.

If the gentleman does not think the Democratic surveyor's office of Wyoming ought to have $20,000, I think we have made it very clear indeed that it is entitled to more than the committee gave his office.

I want again to remind the committee of the fact that there was no investigation whatever of this matter. The department that has it in charge asked for $20,000. The committee went back to the period of a year ago and found that only about $12,000 had been expended and reduced the sum to $12,500. The surveyor general of Wyoming did not expend as much in the fiscal year 1914 as he should have expended. The result was that the public service suffered, and these surveys can not be taken care of at this rate.

I would like to ask the gentlemen on the other side whether they desire to have the people of my State know and understand that this Democratic House has got to cheeseparing to the point where it is not willing to appropriate to have these surveys provided for in order that our people can settle on the public lands—surveys provided for in order that those who own the lands and want to transfer them can do so by having the surveys accepted.

There have been many townships in my State withdrawn from entry for three or four years. Not a proof and not an entry has been made in that length of time over considerable areas because the lands were withdrawn pending resurvey.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Has not that land all been surveyed at public expense at one time?

Mr. MONDELL. Most of our surveys are resurveys.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now you are coming back asking the Government to resurvey. Why do you want a resurvey anyway?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman can not lead me off on that tangent. We are providing for resurveys all over the country, and the gentleman from South Carolina knows why they are necessary. They are no more necessary in Wyoming than they are elsewhere.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman mean to say that when his party was in power all the money they expended to have this land surveyed was wasted, and that the work was worthless and that we must now do it all over again?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not stated anything of that sort.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Something of that sort must be true. Either the original survey is worthless or else it is good.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, that indicates that the gentleman does not know any more about surveys than he does about this appropriation. A great many of these surveys were very well executed in the way that the law provided for their execution at that time. The country was overrun constantly with great herds of buffalo and was full of game of all sorts. The game always pawed around places and spots where the soil had been removed, and land monuments afforded them an opportunity to tear up the soil and obliterate the monuments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Between the buffalo bulls and the winds and the occasional trapper who came along and needed a stake to fasten his trap and found a land corner stake would serve that purpose, and some fellow who would pick up a land corner stone to shy at a coyote, in those various ways in the passage of time these corners became obliterated. It is true there were some fraudulent surveys, but the greater part of these surveys were executed in the way that the law contemplated at the time. But the passage and incidents of time obliterated those surveys, and resurveys are necessary. Our settlement will be retarded by reason of the fact that the surveyor general's office is not properly provided for, and I hope that the committee, if it will not give us $20,000, will at least give us within $2,000 of what the office asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 36.

Mr. MONDELL. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. MONDELL to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 39, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 103, line 10, by striking out the figures "$500" and inserting "$1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 103, line 10, by striking out "$500" and inserting "$1,200."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] called attention a moment ago to the fact that the item for contingent expenses in the surveyor general's office in Wyoming was reduced to a larger degree in proportion than the items for the other States. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the State of Washington, for which the total appropriation is only $12,500, receives $1,500 for contingent expenses, while Wyoming is allowed only $500.

I do not know on what theory this sum is based, and I would be very glad if the gentleman from South Carolina would tell me. If it cost $1,500 for contingent expenses to run the surveyor general's office in the State of Washington, that will only spend $12,000 in all, I do not understand how we can expect the surveyor general's office in Wyoming to be run for $500 in the matter of contingent expenses when the total expenses are $16,000. As a matter of fact, it is impossible to provide for the contingent expenses of the office by any such sum as this. There is no reason why the committee should not allow the amount asked for.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on the face of it, it looks a little strange that we should appropriate $1,500 for incidental expenses of the land office in the State of Washington and only $500 for the great State of Wyoming. But the truth is this: The gentlemen who represent Wyoming in the House and Senate are always active, as Members can testify. I believe a year or two ago they had supplied a public building to every town that could be called a town, and a little place called Sundance got a national reputation because, with a population of 198 souls, they got an appropriation of $50,000 for a public building.

Mr. MONDELL. They almost got an appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. So in every town in Wyoming that is big enough to have a post office they have a public building, and, of course, we do not have to rent offices for the surveyor general. I see that in the State of Washington in 1912 we provided $1,500 for incidental expenses, which included rent of office, pay of the janitor, furniture and repairs thereto, and so forth. So, Mr. Chairman, all this spiel is for nothing. There is no office rent to pay in Wyoming, and they only spent $418 in the last fiscal year when they were permitted to spend $1,200. We have given them $500 for next year, and it is ample.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, he proposes to punish the surveyor general of Wyoming because he was economical in 1914. Now he has estimated that he needs $1,200 the coming fiscal year. He is a good business man, and I bear testimony to the fact that he is not disposed to spend the public money recklessly, and he probably knows how much he needs.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman has testified before the committee this afternoon that the incumbent of that office is a good Democrat and that he will not waste the money, and we will risk his getting through on $500. Of course a Republican would need $1,200. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Office Postmaster General: Postmaster General, $12,000; chief clerk, including $500 as superintendent of buildings, $4,000; private secretary, $2,500; disbursing clerk, $2,250; bookkeeper and accountant, $1,800; 2 stenographers, at $1,600 each; appointment clerk, $2,000; assistant to chief clerk, $2,000; confidential clerk to Postmaster General, $2,000 (formerly assistant superintendent in charge of mail equipment, Fourth Assistant's Office); chairman board of inspection, $2,000 (formerly assistant superintendent in charge of inspection of supplies, Fourth Assistant's Office); printing clerk, $1,800 (formerly clerk of class 4, Fourth Assistant's Office); clerks—4 of class 4 (1 transferred from Fourth Assistant's Office, 1 from Division of Post Office Inspectors, and 2 to First Assistant's Office), 6 of class 3 (2 transferred from First Assistant's Office, 1 from Fourth Assistant's Office, 2 to Third Assistant's Office, 1 to Division of Post Office Inspectors, and 1 to Division of Purchasing Agent), 10 of class 2 (1 transferred from First Assistant's Office, 2 from Second Assistant's Office, 1 from Third Assistant's Office, 1 to Division of Purchasing Agent, and 1 to Division of Solicitor), 6 of class 1 (1 transferred from Division of Post Office Inspectors), 3 at $1,000 each (3 transferred to Division of Post Office Inspectors and 1 to First Assistant's Office), 8 at $900 each (1 transferred from Second Assistant's Office and 2 from Fourth Assistant's Office); telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; messenger in charge of mails, $900; 3 messengers (1 transferred from First Assistant's Office and 1 from Third Assistant's Office); 3 assistant messengers (1 transferred from Division of Post Office Inspectors); pages—2 at $480 each (1 transferred from Second Assistant's Office and 1 from Third Assistant's Office), 3 at $360 each (1 transferred from First Assistant's Office and 1 from Fourth Assistant's Office); engineer, $1,400; 8 assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; electrician, $1,400; 2 assistant electricians, at $1,200 each; 3 dynamo tenders, at $900 each; fireman, who shall be a blacksmith, and fireman, who shall be a steam fitter, at $900 each; 10 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 17 firemen; carpenters—1 $1,200, 1 $1,000, 2 at $900 each; captain of the watch, $1,000; additional to 2 watchmen acting as lieutenant of watchmen, at $120 each; 24 watchmen; foreman of laborers, $800; 47 laborers (2 transferred from Fourth Assistant's Office); plumber, $900; awning maker, $900; female laborers—1 $540, 3 at $500 each, 5 at $480 each (2 transferred from Fourth Assistant's Office); 45 charwomen; in all, $201,210.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There are places appropriated for that have never been created by law. The paragraph is subject to the point of order, if the gentleman wants to mutilate the bill and reduce the activities of the Postmaster General.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the Postmaster General will be unduly or injuriously affected in the end. I hope not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., new post-office building: Three assistant engineers, at 900 each; 3 assistant electricians, at $900 each; 10 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 oilers, at $720 each; 12 watchmen; additional to 1 watchman acting as lieutenant of watch, $120; 15 laborers; assistant plumber, $720; 2 female laborers, at $480 each; 15 charwomen; in all, $38,700.

Mr. MANN. There should be a dollar mark inserted before the figures "900" in line 15.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office Second Assistant Postmaster General: Second Assistant Postmaster General, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500; Division of Railway Adjustments—superintendent $3,000, assistant superintendent $2,250; Division of Foreign Mails—superintendent $3,000, assistant superintendent $2,000; superintendent, Division of Miscellaneous Transportation, $2,000; clerks—13 of class 4, 23 of class 3, 18 of class 2 (2 transferred to Postmaster General's Office), 15 of class 1, 12 at $1,000 each, 7 at $900 each (1 transferred to Postmaster General's Office); messenger in charge of mails, $900; 4 assistant messengers; page, $360 (transferred from First Assistant's Office); in all, $145,590.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. It contains items for several offices not provided for by law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is true, Mr. Chairman. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in place of the paragraph stricken out the following:
"The officers and employees of the United States whose salaries are herein appropriated for are established and shall continue from year to year to the extent they shall be appropriated for by Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from South Carolina, that by unanimous consent that amendment be inserted as section 6 of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment just adopted be placed in the legislative part of the bill as section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the amendment just adopted be inserted as section 6 of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Third Assistant Postmaster General: Third Assistant Postmaster General, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500; Division of Stamps—superintendent $2,750; Division of Finance—superintendent (who shall give bond in such amount as the Postmaster General may determine for the faithful discharge of his duties) $2,250; Division of Classification—superintendent $2,750; Division of Registered Mails—superintendent $2,500; Division of Money Orders—superintendent $2,750, chief clerk $2,250; clerks—19 of class 4, 34 of class 3 (2 transferred from Postmaster General's Office), 50 of class 2 (1 transferred to Postmaster General's Office), 62 of class 1 (2 transferred from Fourth Assistant's Office, 1 to Postmaster General's Office), 40 at $1,000 each (2 transferred from Fourth Assistant's Office); 21 at $900 each (1 transferred from Fourth Assistant's Office); 2 messengers; in all, $316,330.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Reverting to the matter of mail carriers in the far West who have received no pay whatever for the past five months, I desire to make it clear and to have the statement go out in the RECORD that no employee of the Post Office Department need hire lawyers in order to collect his money. I am putting it in this form so that it can be printed in the newspapers devoted to the Rural Delivery Service. Since I addressed the House a few moments ago I have gone a little further into this matter and have learned there are about 300 cases in which errors of some kind have been made which can not be easily discovered; numerous cases where mistakes in payment have occurred, causing other Members of Congress, I presume, the same as myself, to receive letters something like this:

PACIFIC BEACH, WASH., November 30, 1914.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I am inclosing the third letter from a law firm in Washington, asking me to give them my legal work in connection with my mail contract here on the beach. Mr. JOHNSON, I don't intend to need any legal work in connection with this mail contract. I was the lowest bidder. My contract was duly signed and sent by registered mail, and I have the return of the card that same was received. Now, why do you suppose I can't get any money? My pay is now five months in arrears. In fact, I have never received anything since commencing the work. Have not even been able to receive a reply to a courteous letter asking why my pay was being held up.

In view of these facts I am still on the job and am expected to be on the job, buying horse feed, keeping up equipment, and enduring the hardships one is obliged to endure in the fulfillment of this contract.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are trying to get through with this bill as speedily as possible in the hope that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] may call up the Post Office bill. The matter to which the gentleman refers will be entirely appropriate in the consideration of that bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. These appropriation bills are prepared in advance by experienced members of great committees, and the only way in which other Members can call attention to these matters is during these five-minute speeches. This man has had no pay for five months, and I have other cases. The department has promised to get three months' pay off by to-day's mail to this carrier, whose name is Calvin Perry. He needs all of the money that is due him. I dislike to delay this committee, but it will do good to let western star-route carriers know that they need pay no attention to such letters from lawyers as this one:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 23, 1914.

CALVIN PERRY, Esq.,
Pacific Beach, Wash.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your contract for carrying the mails, we beg to offer our services before the Post Office Department in any matter pertaining to the same.

Differences and disputes between mail contractors and the department sometimes occur, and in such matters it is advisable for the mail contractor to have the advice and assistance of a representative in Washington familiar with the rules and practice of the department, in order that their case may be presented in person to the authorities and their interest properly protected.

Having had more than 20 years' experience in practicing before the Post Office and other departments, we can be of much assistance to mail contractors in their business relations with the Government, and shall be glad to represent you generally or in any particular matter before the Post Office Department.

We charge an annual retainer for general services or a reasonable fee for particular services rendered from time to time.

Very truly, yours,

_____.

Mr. Chairman, I was told the 1st of December by an official that this carrier, Mr. Perry, and other carriers had received three months' pay. In fact, it was suggested that I telegraph the man that three months' pay had been sent and the rest was on the way. I did so. I also wrote to him, saying that the department was not to blame, and finally, after 15 days, the carrier wired me:

Your telegram and letter received, but no money.

No one can say why or how this and other mistakes have been made or why the cards are out of place. We are dealing with the appropriation for clerks, transferring them from one department to another—fourth to the third and the third to the fourth; from the third to the second, and so on. I believe it would be wise to leave some of these clerks in their places long enough for them to straighten up these things in order to prevent these mistakes. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to say on this matter at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office Fourth Assistant Postmaster General: Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500; Division of Rural Mails—superintendent $3,000, assistant superintendent $2,000, chief clerk $2,000; Division of Supplies—superintendent $2,750, assistant superintendent $2,500; assistant superintendents, Division of Equipment—superintendent $2,750, chief clerk $2,000 (transferred from appropriation "Labor, mail-bag repair shop, Postal Service"); clerks—14 of class 4 (2 transferred to Postmaster General's Office, 1 to Division of Solicitor), 28 of class 3 (2 transferred to Division of Solicitor, 1 to Postmaster General's Office, 1 to Division of Post Office Inspectors, 1 to Division of Purchasing Agent, and 1 transferred from First Assistant's Office), 47 of class 2 (1 transferred to First Assistant's Office, 1 to Division of Post Office Inspectors), 77 of class 1 (2 transferred to Third Assistant's Office, 1 to First Assistant's Office, 1 to Second Assistant's Office, 1 to Division of Solicitor), 53 at $1,000 each (2 transferred to Third Assistant's Office, 1 to First Assistant's Office, 1 to Division of Purchasing Agent), 23 at $900 each (2 transferred to Postmaster General's Office, 2 to First Assistant's Office, 1 to Third Assistant's Office, 1 to Division of Purchasing Agent); skilled draftsmen—3 at $1,800 each, 4 at $1,600 each, 6 at $1,400 each, 5 at $1,200; map mounter, $1,200;

assistant map mounter, $720 (1 transferred to Division of Purchasing Agent); mechanic, $1,000; map copyists—6 at $1,000, 1 $900; 4 messengers (1 transferred to Division of Post Office Inspectors); 13 assistant messengers (1 transferred to Third Assistant's Office); 28 laborers (2 transferred to Postmaster General's Office); 3 female laborers, at $480 each (2 transferred to Postmaster General's Office); in all, $395,060.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting information. I want to ask the gentleman why there are so many transfers in these appropriations. I see there are 15 or 20 in the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General alone, and there seems to be a great many transfers from one department to another. Why are these made?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this bill shows upon its face just exactly where every man is employed in the Post Office Department. For years men have been carried on the rolls of one division when they were really working in some other division. We use the expression "transferred" to show where he came from. After this year that language will be dropped.

Mr. GOULDEN. As an illustration, I notice, on page 112, line 1, there are two female laborers out of three named transferred to the Postmaster General's Office. Why is that done? What reason was there for it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is a certain force under the Postmaster General.

Mr. GOULDEN. I know that. Then there is a transfer from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. Why not appoint them directly to the Postmaster General's Office, or wherever they are to go, instead of going through all this circumlocution?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We do that in this particular bill to show how the change came about. The language will be dropped in subsequent bills. The purpose of the language is to show where the people are working and where they came from. The Postmaster General informs me that there is not a person in the Post Office Department working in any other place than that provided for under this bill.

Mr. GOULDEN. I think it rather confusing to find the transfer to the Postmaster General's Office, and I did not see why they could not be appointed direct. To a business man it does not seem to be a good system.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will look on page 106, he will see a statement made in the paragraph referring to the Postmaster General's Office that the two females who are transferred from this Fourth Assistant Postmaster General are transferred to the Postmaster General's Office.

Mr. GOULDEN. Why transfer them back and forth, apparently? So far, in my judgment, no business reason has been given.

Mr. TOWNER. They are not; one says "from" and the other says "to." The record is complete.

The Clerk read as follows:

Census of agriculture: For taking, compiling, and completing the census of agriculture required by section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, providing for the thirteenth and subsequent censuses, including the employment, in addition to the regular force of the permanent Census Office, of not to exceed 1,000 temporary clerks at a salary of not to exceed $1,000 per annum for a period not to exceed two years, the Director of the Census being empowered to fix the compensation of such temporary employees engaged in the compilation and tabulation of statistics by the use of mechanical devices on a piece-price basis; the employment of special agents at a salary of not to exceed $6 a day, with actual and necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of not to exceed $4 a day in lieu of subsistence pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914; an appropriate allowance to such special agents as may be deemed necessary, and previously authorized by the Director of the Census for actual expenses of clerk hire, rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia, light, heat, rental of typewriters, telephone and telegraph services, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses; the compensation of enumerators, which shall be fixed by the Director of the Census at least two weeks in advance of the enumeration, and which may be on a piece-price basis of not less than 20 or more than 50 cents for each farm reported; a mixed rate of not less than $1 or more than $2 a day of eight hours' work, in addition to an allowance of not less than 15 or more than 30 cents for each farm reported; or on a per diem basis of not less than $3 or more than $6 per day for eight hours' work, no payment to be made for any time in excess of eight hours in any one day; the employment of interpreters to assist enumerators in their respective districts in the enumeration of persons not speaking the English language, the compensation of such interpreters to be fixed by the Director of the Census in advance at not to exceed $5 a day for each day of eight hours actually and necessarily employed; the actual and necessary traveling expenses of the various employees of the Bureau of the Census, including an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4 a day pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, and necessary incidental miscellaneous and contingent expenses in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, including advertising in newspapers, purchase of manuscripts, books of reference and periodicals, and the expenditures necessary for the compilation, printing, publishing, and distributing of the results of the census, and the purchase of necessary furniture, paper, and other supplies, and the purchase, rental, construction, repair, and exchange of mechanical appliances, and other expenses necessary thereto, to be available during the fiscal years 1916 and 1917, $2,286,100.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The paragraph, I think, would be in order if it was made as an appropriation to carry out existing law. But this paragraph should be read, as far as the law is concerned, "for taking, compiling, and completing the census of agriculture required by section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, providing for the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses, $2,286,100." The rest of the two and a half pages is legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think that where we are appropriating as large a sum of money as we are here to carry out an existing law that these limitations in the way of legislation are not of place, and that they are better than it would be to appropriate a lump sum of two millions and a quarter dollars?

Mr. MANN. I think it was entirely appropriate for the committee in proposing the expenditure of this sum of money to guard it by legislative provisions. But that makes it subject to a point of order; but I hoped that if I can strike the item out of the bill on a point of order, even if an amendment be agreed to in committee, that we would be sure of having a roll call in the House, and that there might be such a feeling come over the conscience of Members that we would save the $2,000,000 we are extracting from the people through the stamp tax. At any rate the provision that the Director of the Census is empowered to fix the compensation of employees engaged in the compilation of statistics by the use of mechanical devices on a piece-price basis is legislation. And if the chairman desires me, I will read the rest of the legislative provision. There is nothing but legislation in it. The provision for the compensation of enumerators is legislation, both as to piecework and as to the daily allowance. I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have the act which provides for the taking of the Thirteenth Decennial Census. Section 31 of that act provides:

That there shall be in the year 1915, and once every 10 years thereafter, a census of agriculture and live stock, which shall show the acreage of farm land, the acreage of the principal crops, and the number and value of domestic animals on the farms and ranges of the country. The schedule employed in this census shall be prepared by the Director of the Census. Such census shall be taken as of October 1 and shall relate to the current year. The Director of the Census may appoint enumerators or special agents for the purpose of this census, in accordance with the provisions of the permanent census act.

Mr. Chairman, this provision is inserted in the bill in compliance with section 31 of the census act of 1909. The law provides that this census of agriculture and live stock shall be taken in the year 1915 and every 10 years thereafter. It provides that the schedules shall be arranged by the Director of the Census and that he may appoint enumerators or special agents for the purpose of the census in accordance with the provisions of the census law. There is not a thing in this paragraph that is in violation of the law. We give him $2,286,100 for the purpose of taking the census required by law. We have a right to limit the number of clerks that he can employ with that money. We have a right to limit the compensation that he shall pay those clerks. The law authorizes him to appoint clerks, but does not fix the compensation. It authorizes him to appoint special agents, but does not fix the compensation, and we have undertaken in this paragraph, in carrying out the law, to limit him in the expenditure of this vast sum of money. I do not believe that there is a line in the paragraph that is not a proper limitation and that can be construed as permanent law.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it the gentleman's contention that the law specifically authorizes him to appoint clerks for this purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I just read it.

Mr. LENROOT. As I understood the gentleman, he said enumerators and special agents.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, the gentleman used the word "clerks."

Mr. MANN. Enumerators, or special agents.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The word "clerk" is not used in the organic law. Of course, Mr. Chairman, it would be idle to gather facts and not provide for compilation. We are limiting the gathering of the statistics and the compiling of them. Compilation is a necessary incident of field work.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, section 31 of the act providing for the agricultural census is a very simple proposition, and under it Congress would be authorized to appropriate such a sum of money as it pleased for the purpose of taking a census of agriculture and live stock for this coming year, as of the 1st of October. The act provides that the Director of the Census may employ enumerators or special agents in accordance with the provisions of the permanent census act. That legislation fixes what employees may be employed by the Director of the Census and how they shall be employed, and he could employ them under an appropriation which we make; but the Committee on Appropriations in reporting it, whether wisely or unwisely, and I would not say unwisely, has attempted to have Congress define what the act, as far as it goes, would give to the Director of the Census to define, and then covers a lot of other things besides. For instance, this provision endeavors to provide that there shall be allowed not to exceed 1,000 temporary clerks at a salary of not to exceed $1,000 per annum. That is legislation. Further—

The Director of the Census, being empowered to fix the compensation of such temporary employees engaged in the compilation and tabulation of statistics by the use of mechanical devices on a piece-price basis—

That is legislation. Under the original census act the Director of the Census very likely could fix the annual or monthly salaries for these enumerators and special agents, but this is legislation. There is a great deal more of legislation all of the way through, as, for instance, the following provision:

The compensation of enumerators, which shall be fixed by the Director of the Census at least two weeks in advance of the enumeration, and which may be on a piece-price basis of not less than 20 or more than 50 cents for each farm reported; a mixed rate of not less than $1 or more than $2 a day of eight hours' work, in addition to an allowance of not less than 15 or more than 30 cents for each farm reported; or on a per diem basis of not less than $3 or more than $6 per day for eight hours' work, no payment to be made for any time in excess of eight hours in any one day.

All of that is legislation. That is not an appropriation. That is an authorization or requirement that the Director of the Census shall have the power to do certain things or shall do certain things in a way fixed by Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is not that rather a limitation upon the amount that he shall pay?

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. BARTLETT. As to the amount?

Mr. MANN. There is no limitation about fixing it at not less than 20 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks that in view of this provision, and construing this provision in connection with the census act of 1909, while this provision does partake somewhat of the character of a limitation, yet, in the judgment of the Chair, it is not really a limitation but is legislation, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to this paragraph after we have prepared an amendment which we will offer, which we think will not be subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to return later to this paragraph. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 119, after line 11, insert the following:
"Census of agriculture: For taking, compiling, and completing the census of agriculture required by section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, providing for the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses, $2,286,100."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire to be heard now?

Mr. BARTLETT. We offer the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. I wish to oppose the amendment. I did not know whether the gentleman wished to say anything first or not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not just now.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the House have been criticized occasionally by the other side when we have suggested that they were not exercising proper economy because we did not point out specific instances where they might economize.

Now, it is difficult ordinarily to select specific economies by amendment, because they ought of course to be provided by the committees and not be prepared upon the floor of this House. The bill which the committee provides can not as a rule be very wisely reduced on the floor, but here is an instance where it seems to me there is opportunity for a specific economy, and therefore I oppose this amendment. I do not deny that such a census may be desirable. I do not deny that it might be useful. All I claim is that in the present stress of our finances it is no time to indulge in anything except absolute necessities, and it seems to me, desirable as a census of agriculture may be, it is a luxury rather than a necessity and ought not to be paid for now. If I had control of expenditures and appropriations in the present condition of the Treasury, I not only would refuse to appropriate for a census of agriculture, but I would strike out the appropriation for the census of manufactures which comes this year. Hardly any of that has been spent. I believe there is $200,000 carried in this bill and over $400,000 that has not been expended, so that if that were stricken out and this were stricken out there would be a saving of $3,000,000 for what can not be considered a necessity, no matter how useful it may be.

Now, the estimates admit that there would be a deficit of about $35,000,000 this year; that the estimated expenditures exceed the estimated revenues by about $35,000,000. But the administration subtracts from that the $60,000,000 sinking fund, and it hardly lies in our mouth to criticize that, because nothing has been put in the sinking fund for several years—and that makes a surplus of $35,000,000. But that surplus has already been wiped out, because to make that surplus the Secretary of the Treasury estimated that the Post Office appropriation bill would only be $297,000,000—an estimate which, in my opinion, he had no right to make, because it was based upon the theory that the existing law would be changed and that rural routes would be supplanted by the contract system. Originally he had no right at all to make such a supposition, and it has already been contradicted by the report of the Post Office Committee which has come in; and instead of appropriating $297,000,000 the appropriation will be $322,000,000, leaving in the carrier system. So there is $25,000,000 that is taken out of his surplus, and there is not any surplus at all. Then, in order to make an apparent surplus, it is claimed that the $18,000,000 which are estimated for the Panama Canal will not be paid out of the revenues, although the Republican administration paid double that year after year, but that it will be paid by issuing bonds. But even if we issue bonds, and so make again a nominal surplus of about $19,000,000, that surplus of $19,000,000 will be wiped out if the supplemental appropriations this year are as big as they were last year, for last year those were $19,000,000. This year, apparently, they will be more, because on the very first day of the session supplemental estimates were introduced of over $4,000,000; and, moreover, the estimates in the sundry civil bill have no public-building estimates. I do not believe this Democratic majority is going to be so self-denying or patriotic as to deny themselves all public buildings this year. So that surplus is not only wiped out, but a deficit is already created. Now, under those circumstances, a deficit staring us in the face, and with the unsettled condition of trade and finance the world over, with the estimates of revenues falling much below what is needed, I think now is the time to economize strictly instead of indulging ourselves in such luxuries as this census, desirable as it might be in a time of plenty and prosperity.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that gentlemen on the other side oppose this provision for the taking of an agricultural census. The political party to which the gentlemen on the other side belong has always posed as a friend of the farmer, but I have observed that through the long series of years when they were in power there was very little, if any, legislation enacted for the direct benefit of the farmer or the agricultural classes. Their action in opposing this particular provision is but another striking evidence of their want of sympathy with the agricultural classes of this country. Eleven years ago a Republican Congress and a Republican administration provided for a quinquennial census of manufactures, and an appropriation was made for the purpose of taking that census. A year ago, under a Democratic Congress, another appropriation of $75,000 was made for a similar census, and we heard no word of objection from any gentleman on the other side.

When the proposition was up to take a census of manufactures we did not hear the plea of economy raised which we hear now when it is proposed to take a census on behalf of and for the benefit of the farmers of this country. I do not criticize the action in taking a census of manufactures. It doubtless has resulted in great good, but there are equally good reasons why an agricultural census should be taken.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; not just now. I will yield in a moment. Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the provision that is proposed in this bill? In 1909 a law was passed providing that in the year 1915 a census of agriculture should be taken showing the acreage of farm lands, the number of acres devoted to the cultivation of the principal crops, and the number of domestic live stock in the country. That bill was passed, as I say, in 1909, and the Appropriations Committee have simply brought in here a provision which will enable the proper officials to carry out and administer that law which was enacted in the interest of the agricultural classes of this country. I regret that gentlemen upon the other side saw fit to make a point of order against the provision as it was proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, for we thought it desirable to limit those who are to take this census and to make specific provision as to what salaries should be paid.

But owing to the point of order made by gentlemen on the other side that provision has gone out. And it has been necessary to offer an amendment simply making an appropriation of the amount actually necessary to carry out the provisions of the law of 1909, without limitations as to either the number of employees or the salaries to be paid.

Now, I have said that this provision is for the benefit of the agricultural classes of this country. The same reasons that can be given by any gentleman for the taking of a census of manufactures will apply to the taking of the census of agriculture. If it was wise when the gentlemen upon the other side provided for a census of manufactures in 1905, or in 1914, when they did not utter a protest against taking the census of manufactures—I say if it was wise then to make an appropriation sufficient for that purpose, then it is wise to-day in the interest of the general good of the country, and particularly in the interest of the farmers, to make an appropriation for the purpose of taking the census of agriculture. The committee knows that from year to year the Department of Agriculture makes estimates as to the number of acres planted to various crops in this country. Those estimates are at the outset based largely upon the facts disclosed by the decennial census. If an error creeps into the compilation of the facts gathered under the decennial census, then it is carried into these estimates from year to year, and by the time the next decennial census is held, or certainly as the end of the decade approaches, the estimates made by the Department of Agriculture may be worth little, if anything. Therefore Congress in its wisdom in 1909 decided that it was to the interest of the farmer, who wants this information, and who ought to have this information, that an accurate census should be taken in the year 1915 which shall be devoted only to three main questions, namely, the number of acres of farm land, the number of acres devoted to the cultivation of the principal crops, and the number of domestic live stock in this country. And I hope that the Committee of the Whole will adopt this amendment, because, as I said, it was proposed at the outset in favor of the farmers, who have had less direct benefits from legislation than any other class of citizens in this country. [Applause.] It is particularly important at this time that the farmers shall know the acreage of the various principal crops. Conditions in Europe will doubtless bring a change in the growing of certain crops in some sections of the country, at least for the time being; and the farmer should know how much wheat, or corn, or tobacco, or cotton is being produced in any year, in order to know how he can best cultivate his lands for the next year so as to bring the greatest return for his labor. Such information will also enable him to determine with some degree of accuracy what he ought to receive for the product of his year's toil. The taking of this census will furnish this information. If it was thought important in 1909, when the law was passed, there is, as I have said, a still greater reason now why it should be thought important and necessary for the farming classes.

Mr. GILLETT and Mr. GOOD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment in the way of a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 119, line 12, insert:
"That section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, is hereby repealed."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to make the point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. GOOD. Of course it is new legislation, but it comes under the Holman rule, and will save $2,200,000 a year. The amendment I offer is a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as has been suggested, there is quite a difference between an amendment reducing an appropriation in a bill and one absolutely repealing the law.

Mr. GOOD. We repealed the mileage law the other day simply to reduce the amount of mileage to Members.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The amendment showed on its face that there would be a reduction of the amount carried in the bill. Now this, Mr. Chairman, does not undertake to reduce the appropriation that is sought to be made by the amendment, but absolutely repeals the law.

Mr. MANN. It reduces the amount carried by the bill and the amendment a little over $2,000,000 and repeals the law. It does reduce it. The item in the bill on mileage the other day did not say anything about the amount carried in the bill. Still that was held in order because it reduced the expenditures of the Government. The item of appropriation was a separate item in the bill. There was a separate item on mileage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, which provides for taking the agriculture census, was an amendment, so I am told, suggested by the present Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson, who forced the Committee on the Census to accept it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] became quite eloquent in his plea in behalf of the farmer. He went to the extent of claiming that it was necessary to take this census in 1915 for the farmer's benefit. I represent one of the greatest agricultural communities in this country, and I would not do a thing that would in any way injure in the slightest degree the agricultural industry. But this appropriation will not aid the farmer. This law provides that this census shall be taken to ascertain the acreage of farm lands, the acreage of the principal crops, and the number and value of domestic animals on the farms and ranges. I hold here the Agricultural Yearbook for the year 1913, and that yearbook gives all of the information with regard to the principal crops, and not only the principal crops but the minor crops as well. It gives the acreage, and it gives the amount that is raised per acre in each State in the Union.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. For a brief question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if he was not aware that those figures were based largely on estimates instead of the actual facts?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; largely on estimates gathered by a large corps of experts in the Department of Agriculture that we appropriate for every year, and I want to say to the gentleman that when we compare these estimates with the Federal census that is taken every 10 years, we find they are practically the same for those years for which we take the census, which shows the estimates are nearly correct. Besides this agricultural census, if we appropriate $2,280,100 for it, will result largely in an estimate. Where is the farmer who can report exactly the amount of hay or corn which he raises? Let us see what information we have in this Agricultural Yearbook. Now, take 1913 on corn. The number of acres was 105,000,830; the yield per acre was 26.1 bushels; the total production was 2,446,888,000 bushels; the value was $1,692,002,000. And it gives the lowest price and the highest price paid by the year, and by going through these reports you will find the same information on wheat, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, potatoes, sweet potatoes, hay, clover and timothy seed, cotton, tobacco, flax, rice, hops, beans, peas, sugar, coffee, turpentine, rosin, oil seed, and oil meal. We find the same provision with regard to all domestic animals, not only in regard to the total number, but we find the information is given by States. One hundred and forty-five pages of this book are devoted exclusively to the very detailed information with regard to the production upon the farms and the number of farm animals upon the farms, together with their value. Talk about duplication of work! Never again on that side should anyone say anything with regard to spending money for duplication of work if we pass this item granting $2,280,000 for this useless undertaking—for an undertaking where we already have all the information at our command which the Director of the Census can possibly secure.

Now, I can well conceive, if we did not know these things, that it would be important for the country to have the knowledge that is contained in this census that has already been taken; and which is published annually; but when we have this information, which is absolutely reliable, I do not see the use of spending a single penny in order that another Government official may take it. If you want those thousand men for political henchmen, take them; take them in the name of the Democratic spoilsmen, but do not ask for them in the name of the American farmer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The farmer does not want them. The farmer has no need of that information, when he already has all that information at his command. Oh, yes; you want a thousand men to turn loose on the communities, and you want the people of the United States, who are now being taxed more heavily than ever before in the history of this country, to go down into their pockets to buy tax stamps for this useless census, to pay for an absolutely useless thing—useless except for the salaries of these thousand men that you are going to employ for political purposes. You may need them for political purposes, but the farmers do not want to pay taxes to secure information already in their possession. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina and Mr. BARTLETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, what a change has come over the spirit of the dream of my friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]! In 1909, when the Republican Party was in full control of the Government and the political goose hung high, his clarion voice for economy was not heard. It was silent as an oyster on that subject. When the provision contained in the census bill of 1909, prepared by a Republican Committee on the Census and voted for by a Republican majority, launched out to become permanent law, to take the agricultural census of this country; when a Republican President had just been inaugurated and there was no cloud upon the political sky——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course; I always yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] just told us that the Democrats had passed this bill; that the Republicans never did anything for agriculture. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman misunderstood.

Mr. GILLETT. I knew it was a mistake.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the provision was proposed by a former Member of this House, now a member of the Cabinet, the Postmaster General.

Mr. MANN. It was proposed by a Republican committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. Be that as it may, it was in 1909, when the Republicans had the majority, and they had had it for about 16 years. I think you had about 60 majority in the House then. You had the power to defeat it. If we had said to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], or any other gentleman on that side, that they would turn loose on the country the Republican spoilsmen, they would have held up their hands in holy horror.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman point out a single bit of information that could be obtained by the expenditure of this money—information that has not already been obtained by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will allow me to make my speech, I will gratify him. But the gentleman can not divert me by a remark of that kind from an expression of my admiration of the consistency he displayed then, considering the position he takes now. The gentleman would undoubtedly have remained "in innocuous desuetude" in reference to this matter [laughter on the Democratic side], and his clarion voice would not have rung out in this Hall to-day if it were probable that these spoilsmen that are to be imposed on the agricultural interests of this country were to be appointed by a Republican Director of the Census. But it so happens that if a census shall be taken of the agricultural interests, these thousand places may, perchance, be filled by Democrats, and therefore a spasm of economy comes over the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and over the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. Not only a spasm of economy, but a spasm of opposition to the appointment of spoilsmen to office.

Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I support this measure because it is required by law, and because it is deemed necessary by those having in charge this work. In justification of it, I desire to call attention to a letter addressed to the chairman of this subcommittee by the Director of the Census, which I will put into the RECORD, in which he says there is absolutely no question as to the extreme desirability of taking a census of agriculture in 1915 and every five years thereafter. I read:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, December 15, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES L. BARTLETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE BARTLETT: I am sending you herewith a copy of my letter, together with copies of Exhibits 1 and 2 which I have just sent to Hon. JOSEPH T. JOHNSON, chairman of the subcommittee on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Any assistance you may render us at this time will be greatly appreciated.

Very truly, yours, WM. J. HARRIS, Director.

DECEMBER 15, 1914.

Hon. JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: In reply to your inquiry of yesterday, I desire to submit the following information concerning certain work of this bureau:

(1) CENSUS OF AGRICULTURE.

There can be no question of the extreme desirability of taking a census of agriculture in 1915 and every five years thereafter. The Department of Agriculture bases all of its crop estimates upon the figures secured by actual enumeration by the Bureau of the Census. Without such an enumeration of the principal facts with regard to the farms of the country and their products the estimates made by the Department of Agriculture and by private individuals from year to year necessarily become increasingly wide of the mark. With a five-year enumeration these estimates, based on actual enumeration, will become more nearly representative of the actual conditions.

In the second place, the rapidity with which changes in agricultural conditions are taking place and the bearing of those changes upon the problem of the cost of living and other fundamental economic problems make it essential that an agricultural census should be taken more frequently than once in a decade. At this time it is especially important that such a census should be taken for the year 1915 because of the great changes in crop acreage and crop production to be brought about as a result of the European war. It is important for this country to know as early as possible just what these changes will be, especially with reference to grain crops, crops for the export trade, and the live stock of the country. This country is being drained of its horses and mules, as well as its food cattle, for war purposes abroad. It is more than probable that the United States will not only have to feed but also to clothe a large percentage of the stricken population of Europe during the next few years.

My estimate for the census of agriculture in 1915 calls for $2,286,100. For the segregation of these items please see Exhibit 1, which gives a statement showing the cost of the 1910 census of agriculture as compared with the estimate for 1915. In making up the estimates for 1915, compared with corresponding items for 1910, it was necessary in a few cases, which have been indicated on Exhibit 1, to make very careful estimates of the amount spent for agriculture in 1910. Some of the items, of course, include population expenditures, because in the rural sections of the country the same enumerator reported both population and agriculture. However, the estimated cost of the population end of the inquiry has been eliminated as far as possible.

In 1910 there were approximately 70,000 enumerators, of which 40,000 were in the rural districts. In 1910 they enumerated 6,361,502 farms, at an average cost of approximately 36 cents per farm. In the estimate submitted for the census of 1915 I have estimated that the total number of farms will be 6,750,000, and that I can enumerate these farms at an average cost of 28 cents per farm. The agricultural schedule used in 1910 contained more than 500 inquiries, while the schedule which I propose to use at this census will be very brief and will call for only the general items of acreage in farms, acreage of principal crops, and number and value of live stock.

The largest item of my estimate is for the employment of enumerators. You will note that I ask for $1,900,000 to employ between 10,000 and 12,000 enumerators to report the statistics of the farms in the United States. The corresponding item in 1910 was $2,306,000. The estimate for 1915 is a very close estimate and was figured with great care. Even with a much shorter schedule than the bureau used in 1910 there still remains the principal factor of any canvass, which is the travel from farm to farm. In fact, the distance at this census will be greater than it was in 1910, because there will be approximately 400,000 more farms for the enumerators to visit. While I will have to enumerate approximately 409,000 more farms than were enumerated in 1910, I propose to do the work for more than $400,000 less than the actual enumeration cost in 1910.

You will also note the item of $200,000 which I have estimated for temporary clerical assistance. The corresponding expense in 1910 was $1,002,140. In 1910 the temporary clerical force was paid from $600 to $1,200 per annum; in my estimate I propose to use a less number of clerks and to pay them smaller salaries—that is, from $600 to $900 per annum.

You will also note that I am asking for only $54,000 for the employment of special agents for supervisory and other field work. In 1910 the corresponding item for supervisors and supervisors' assistants was $1,080,000. This item for 1910 included the cost of the supervision of the population work. It is impossible to segregate it so as to show agriculture alone. I know, however, that my estimate is very much less than the proportion which should properly be charged to agriculture.

My estimate for travel, subsistence, office expenses, etc., is approximately one-third of what it was in 1910. My estimate for interpreters is one-third of what it was in 1910. You understand, of course, that it is necessary to have interpreters in sections of our country where we have a large number of foreign-born population. These immigrant farmers have not been in this country long enough to become thoroughly familiar with our language; hence it is necessary to reach them in the language of the country of their birth.

The general office expenses, as you will note, are considerably less, item by item, than the corresponding items for 1910. I wish to particularly call your attention to the item for machines ($10,000). In 1910 the corresponding item was $129,000.

I ask for only $3,000 for the employment of one chief statistician, who will be an expert on agriculture and who will give his entire time and attention to the agricultural census.

Furthermore, I propose, if Congress gives me the appropriation, to make no extravagant expenditures but to practice economy in every item possible. Rather than stretch the agricultural census over two or three years it is my intention to complete the work within 12 months after it actually begins. I will supply the Department of Agriculture with its actual figures in time to make its crop estimates for the year of 1916. I will also complete all of the tabulations and print the final results in a few small handy publications rather than in the large and ponderous volumes of the Thirteenth Census. It will be my endeavor to make this census of agriculture the very best census of its kind that has ever been made in the United States. I propose to do the work quickly, both in the field and in the office, and to have all the results published at a much earlier date than has ever been done before.

(2) ECONOMIES.

In this connection I desire to call your attention to the fact that I have endeavored in every way to introduce economies in all of my expenditures. The appropriation for the fiscal year 1914 amounted to $1,122,820; later $2,500 was appropriated for tabulating machines and $50,000 was reappropriated out of the unexpended balance for the preceding year. This gave me a total appropriation of $1,175,320. On July 1, 1914, I had to my credit an unexpended balance of $39,794. While this item may appear small in comparison with the total appropriation, yet it is the result of small savings and represents only a beginning in the line of economy in the Census Bureau under my administration.

Wealth, debt, and taxation: I am just now completing our decennial inquiry on wealth, debt, and taxation. Ten years ago the work on this inquiry started March 1, 1903, and it was not finally completed and results ready for distribution till May 7, 1907—more than four years from the beginning of the field work. I began my inquiry on March 21, 1914, and expect to complete the work and issue the final report within a year and a half after beginning the work. I have made a very considerable saving in the cost of my investigation compared with that of 10 years ago, which is due in part to the fact that some 15 or 20 per cent of the statistics collected at the present inquiry were obtained from published reports of the various governmental units and the work done here in the office at Washington, rather than by personal canvass in the field.

While I am unable to make any comparison of the cost of the two investigations because of the lack of any cost accounting 10 years ago, I am satisfied that my saving on the present investigation has been at least $150,000.

Census of manufactures: I desire to call your attention to the complete statement concerning the census of manufactures for 1914. This is marked Exhibit 2. Kindly note the fact that, while the number of manufacturing establishments in the United States has increased during the last five years, I propose to secure the reports at less cost each than was paid in 1910; that is, the cost per schedule at this census will be considerably less than at the previous census.

The detailed statement concerning the census of manufactures also shows that there has been a considerable saving in a number of items. At this time we have saved at least $1,000 by borrowing city directories from the Library of Congress and others instead of purchasing them outright, as was done in 1910. We will also save at least $2,000 by securing quarters for our local offices in Government buildings, rather than paying rent for quarters, as was done in a number of cases in 1910. Local agents will be employed at 20 per cent less salary than in 1910.

I propose to make this the best census of manufactures that has ever been taken in the United States. With that end in view we have consulted manufacturers' associations, chambers of commerce, boards of trade, etc., in all sections of the country, and have secured the cooperation of practically all of these bodies.

Any other information desired by you or by any member of the committee will be gladly furnished by me.

Very respectfully, yours.

WM. J. HARRIS, Director.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will put into the RECORD a table that the director has prepared and submitted to the committee as to the cost of taking this agricultural census under a Republican administration and the amount that will be required under this administration. I am not making any charges about improper administration, but figures are given as to what it would cost to take this same kind of census in 1910 and what he proposes to do with the money appropriated. The sum of it is that in 1910 it cost the Government $4,943,121, and under the items that he submits it will cost now only $2,126,100.

I say it, not in any boasting spirit at all because the Director of the Census is a Georgian, but the administration of that office has been run economically and the expenses have been reduced very much during his administration.

Now, one word more. We have seen fit to provide for the taking of the census of the manufactures of this country. We have not until this time——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. We have not heard from my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] or from my good friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] any objection until now to the taking of the census of manufactures; but now appears this great idea, that out of this appropriation will come 1,000 appointees, presumably Democrats, to carry out the law, and therefore they raise their voices in behalf of economical administration. Gentlemen, it would have been well for you to have thought of economy and the avoidance of useless expenditures when the money was being expended under a Republican administration and the places were being filled by Republican appointees.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may be permitted to print as a part of my remarks the letter of the Director of the Census that has been sent to us, transmitting the other letter and the exhibits accompanying it. I will insert them here:

EXHIBIT I.

Statement showing the estimated cost of the 1915 census of agriculture as compared with the estimated cost of the 1910 census of agriculture.

	1915	1910
1 chief statistician (2 years in 1910)	$3,000	$6,000
Clerks, at $600 to $900 per annum for from 1 month to 12 months (paid $600 to $1,200 in 1910)	200,000	1,002,140
10,000 to 12,000 enumerators (approximately 40,000 enumerators engaged on agriculture in 1910)	1,900,000	2,306,000
Expert special agents for office work	.....	15,000
Special agents for supervisory and other field work (includes supervision and clerical assistance for population in 1910)	54,000	1,080,000
Travel, subsistence, office expenses, etc., of clerks and special agents (includes expense for population in 1910)	35,000	99,204
Interpreters (includes population in 1910)	12,500	37,349
Printing	.....	95,452
General office expenses: Purchase, rental, repair, and exchange of adding and calculating machines and typewriters	10,000	129,000
Furniture	5,500	12,000
Folios for schedules	2,000	8,000
Telegraph and telephone service (includes population in 1910)	6,000	21,476
Schedules, result slips, circulars, and other forms	20,000	60,000
Paper and stationery	10,000	20,000
Shipping cost, including boxes, paper, twine, etc	5,100	8,000
Forms and miscellaneous supplies for enumerators and special agents	3,000	7,000
Enumerators' badges	.....	1,500
Miscellaneous expenses (rent of offices, janitor service, light, etc.)	20,000	35,000
Total	2,286,100	4,943,121

NOTE.—In 1910, 6,361,502 farms were enumerated, at a cost of approximately 36 cents each; in 1915 it is estimated that 6,750,000 farms will be enumerated, at an average cost of 28 cents.

EXHIBIT II.

DECEMBER 14, 1914.

The census of manufactures of 1910 was taken in connection with the census of mines and quarries, and it is impossible to make an exact separation of the statistics for the two branches of work. We, however, have prepared a careful estimate, and it appears that the total cost of the work approximated $1,476,736, of which $676,736 was expended for field work and $800,000 for office work. The work extended over a period of three and one-half years.

The expenses of the office work for the census of manufactures of 1914 will, of course, be met by the regular annual appropriation for the salaries of persons holding statutory positions. There will be no temporary office force employed. The work therefore differs very materially from the work for the census of 1910, when a large temporary force was employed for a considerable time. We also hope to virtually complete the field work of the census during the present fiscal year, but it is impossible to state in advance whether we will be able to secure returns from all of the manufacturing establishments by June 30, 1915. Therefore I have estimated that an additional sum of $190,300 be appropriated for this work for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. This is necessary because, if the work is not finished by June 30, 1915, and there is no provision made for continuing the canvass, all of the work done prior to June 30, 1915, would be of no use whatever, as it would not enable us to publish the totals for the manufactures in the United States.

There has been appropriated and set aside for the census of manufactures of 1914, $470,000, to be expended for field work during the fiscal year. It has also been estimated that the office work during the year ending June 30, 1915, on this branch of the census would amount to approximately $380,000, making a total expenditure for the present fiscal year of $850,000.

The Director of the Census has endeavored in every way possible to effect economies in the conduct of his bureau, especially in the field work incident to the collection of statistics. In taking a census of manufactures, however, there are unavoidable delays incident to the impossibility of some manufacturers preparing their reports promptly. A large proportion of the manufacturing establishments of the country do not keep accurate books, and many of them keep no account of the year's operations from which they can prepare census reports. It is necessary, therefore, for the agents to visit many establishments a number of times and to make repeated requests for the statistics, also for the agents to devote considerable time in the compilation of the statistics that the manufacturers have not prepared in advance of their visit. The director has endeavored in every way to overcome this condition; he has conferred with a large number of manufacturing organizations, chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and other organizations throughout the country. He has had these associations pass resolutions recommending that their membership cooperate with the Bureau of the Census and that they make returns promptly to the bureau, so as to avoid the expense of sending a special agent to collect the returns. He has also mailed the blank schedules to all of the manufacturers with a request that they be prepared and returned to the bureau promptly by mail.

In appointing the field force of agents it has been his policy to appoint special agents who will be employed in collecting the statistics at lower salaries than were paid for the census of 1909. He hopes in these various ways to effect economies that will result in a material saving; but in view of the experience of the bureau at past censuses, he does not feel warranted in materially decreasing the estimate which he has submitted. He has found that at prior censuses considerable amounts were paid for the rent of offices in the different cities. He has arranged to save this by securing office accommodations in the Federal buildings.

He also found that it had been necessary to purchase directories to be used in compiling the lists of the names and addresses of manufacturers, although the directories for all the cities were on file in the Congressional Library. After considerable correspondence he was able to effect a cooperative arrangement with the Librarian so as to borrow the directories from the Congressional Library for the temporary use of the Bureau of the Census. In these two items alone he has effected a saving of between $3,000 and $4,000. It is his purpose to continue to effect economies of this character.

The appropriation for the present fiscal year provides for the census of manufactures, and the additional amount is what it is estimated should be appropriated in order to insure its completion. It would be detrimental if this sum of $190,300 were not appropriated and the Bureau of the Census were therefore unable to make any use of the statistics which they had already collected at a cost of about $500,000.

It is the purpose of the Director of the Census to virtually complete the field work on the census of manufactures during this fiscal year; but it is absolutely necessary for him to make provision for any contingency, and therefore the estimate of $190,300 is made to complete the field work on this census during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. There will, of course, be considerable office work to be done in compiling the statistics of manufactures after June 30, 1915, but the director is quite confident that he can do this work with the regular employees of the bureau, and therefore does not make any increase in his estimate over the regular annual appropriation that is made for the office work of the bureau. As far as can now be estimated, the total cost of the census of manufactures of 1914 will approximate $1,340,300, as compared with $1,476,736 for the same piece of work at the census of 1910.

The director thus estimates that he will be able to take the census of manufactures for $136,436 less than it cost in 1910, although there has undoubtedly been a considerable increase in the number of establishments to be enumerated, and the statistics in many respects are much more in detail than they were at former censuses.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that the object of taking this census is to benefit the farmer. A census so taken is no more for the benefit of the farmers of the United States than it is for the benefit of the inhabitants of Mars.

Let us consider when this census shall be taken and when the report would be made. If taken at all, as I understand, it will be taken some time during the summer of the next year, and the report will be printed from it some time from three to five years afterwards. Now, it may be that farmers in the districts represented by the gentlemen who are supporting these paragraphs are hunting up statistics after the expiration of three to five years to determine the amount of acreage or production, but they certainly do not do that in my district. As soon as the wheat crop of the United States is sown the farmer takes his newspaper and finds the amount of acreage estimated, and a little later he gets from the Department of Agriculture, if he wishes, a more accurate estimate made by the experts who report for that department. Later on, as the wheat crop is harvested, the threshers are no sooner at work than he gets an estimate of the amount which the yield is going to be. Later he gets a very accurate statement, in that same year, of the amount which the crop has been. He never takes down his 5-year-old report, gathered by these census enumerators, to ascertain what it was five years ago, unless he does it simply as a student for purposes of general information. This census is of no value whatever to any farmer for farming purposes. If he is a student of such matters, he may want to read the report when it comes out, as it will probably come out along about the year 1920, but he will never look at it in any other way.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman's estimate as to the time when this report will be printed is based on the time when the reports of the census of 1910 were printed, is it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is based on past experience. I think that is a very good guide.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has evidently overlooked the fact that this census is a very simple matter, confined to a few items, and not nearly as complicated as the census of 1910, so that no one will have to wait many years before it is printed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will pardon me, he is entirely mistaken. I have not overlooked that fact, and I have not overlooked the fact that only the same proportionate number of employees will be put on this work, and consequently there is no reason to expect that it will be completed any earlier.

With reference to the census of manufactures, concerning which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] spoke, there is a very different reason for taking that. There is no other way in which the information can be obtained. For that reason it is much more important that the census should be taken, although I think its value is somewhat exaggerated.

Now, I do not mean to say that the census which is proposed by this amendment is of no value whatever. It is of value in the same way that general statistics of that character are of value, but it is of no use to the farmer, and it is idle to stand here and say that the proposition is solely for his benefit, for it is not. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and I think it is extremely fitting that an amendment to repeal this law should come from the other side of the main aisle.

My reason for supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman is not the same reason which he offers. In the five minutes that he occupied it was easy to be seen that the principal objection that he had to this provision in this appropriation bill was that it would provide a few places for Democrats.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken. My reason for offering it was that the very information is obtained by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I know the gentleman said that, but he placed very much less emphasis on that part of his speech than he did upon the fact that there are a thousand places to be filled by Democrats.

Mr. GOOD. I merely made that argument in answer to remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman desires to ask a question, I will yield to enable him to do so.

Mr. GOOD. I will state to the gentleman that my sole object and motive was to prevent duplication of work and the useless expenditure of money.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman had only that purpose, why did he interject so much opposition to this because of the fact that it would make places for a few Democrats? The gentleman is so politically biased that he can not see straight. This is not the first time that he has displayed that fact upon this floor. The Republican Party placed this law upon the statute book. Why did you not say, then, that there was no necessity for an agricultural census?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was not here at that time.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will not be interrupted. Why did you not say then that it did not accomplish anything for the agriculturists in this country? You admit by your very argument that you are making a horseplay with the agriculturists of America. Now, when you can not name the men who are to fill the offices under this appropriation, you are against the appropriation.

That is not an unusual attitude during these last two years. We stand in the matter of this appropriation as we have stood in a great many other things since we came into power two years ago, charged with extravagance, because we have inherited from an extravagant Republican administration mandates of law for the accomplishment of things.

Mr. BUTLER. But our extravagance will not justify your extravagance, will it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman's argument is that we must disregard the law that you placed upon the statute books; and, strange to say, you come in and repudiate the law which you passed, which requires this appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman recall that many of us, at the time of the passage of the act, regarded it as an experiment, and some of us questioned the feasibility of it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It was a very worthy experiment when the gentleman from Iowa thought a Republican administration could name the officials to conduct it, but it is, in his opinion, a very undesirable experiment now that a Democratic administration is in power.

Mr. STAFFORD. There were some on this side who disputed the feasibility of having the census taken.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I know a gentleman here and there did, but you on that side of the House can not escape the responsibility for this law. It was reported to this House by a Republican Census Committee. It was passed by a Republican House and a Republican Senate and signed by a Republican President.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think this is an unwise law?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think the whole business of taking a census as it has been taken under Republican administrations had just as well not be taken, because they are so imperfect.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, if the gentleman wants my frank expression as to the advisability and the benefit that comes from it, I think that it will be very small indeed, because I agree with the gentleman from Iowa in the statement that he made—that this is not for the benefit of the American farmer. I think there is a benefit coming from it. I think there is a benefit from knowing how much wheat is to be grown, how much corn, how much cotton, how much live stock; but the class that will take advantage of this information is not the farmer, but the man who is speculating in products of the farmer.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman does not think it a wise law, it is not imperative to have it enforced.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I said in the beginning of my remarks that I favored the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may be permitted to continue for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I was not aware that I had any more time. Certainly I will yield.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman remember how this provision got into the law?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I am frank to say that I do not.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman remember whether the House passed it originally or not?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not.

Mr. MANN. I thought I heard the gentleman say that the Republican Party and a Republican House passed it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I did say that, because both a Republican House and Senate were in existence.

Mr. MANN. That is neither here nor there. Does the gentleman remember what the facts were, whether a Republican House and a Republican Senate passed it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think there was no roll call on it. The gentleman from Illinois will admit that his party was in power in both branches—the House and the Senate—and that that party must have taken the responsibility of the legislation. I do not think the gentleman can deny that at this time.

Mr. MANN. I assume that the party takes the responsibility for it, although you are largely engaged in shirking responsibility at this time.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that he never will find the gentleman from North Carolina now occupying the floor trying to shirk responsibility for action taken when his party is in control of the legislation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, very frequently you do that; but that is neither here nor there. I want to know whether the gentleman remembers whether the House ever had this provision under consideration.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It was passed through the House; how much it was discussed I do not remember.

Mr. MANN. Very often a man admits a thing which is not true. The Postmaster General has admitted before the Committee on Appropriations that he inserted the provision in the law. It is safe to make such an admission, because no one can disprove it, but it is not true.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Certainly the gentleman does not deny, however this provision may have been put in the law, that it was passed in 1909, and he can not deny that in 1909 the Republican Party was in full control of both branches of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Of course I do not deny that, nor will I deny that it will be in full control in 1916. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman is going into the realms of prophecy. I think the gentleman has a much better memory for facts than he has ability for prophecy. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I think I have proved myself to be very good at prophecy so far.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman has not been very profuse with his prophecies lately.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some agreement to close debate, and I move that debate close on this paragraph in 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. I want some time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have discussed this paragraph at some length now.

Mr. MANN. I think there can be no charge that the House has wasted time on this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time do you want?

Mr. GOOD. I think that we ought to have at least 15 or 20 minutes on this side.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and 15 by myself.

Mr. MANN. That amount of time does not include any for me. In view of the fact that I made the point of order and that every Democrat that has spoken so far has jumped upon me, can not I have some time? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I also want 5 minutes, and I am opposed to the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask that debate be closed in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COX). The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 40 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and 20 minutes by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, if I should ask any Democrat before me this afternoon this question, "Do you believe that a business man who at the end of the year found that his income largely exceeded his expenditure was justified the next year in making expenditures that were desirable but not necessary?" each one would say "yes." If I followed it up by asking you if at the end of the year the business man had found his expenditures had largely exceeded his income, would he then be justified in making an expenditure the next year exceeding those of the last for objects that were desirable but not necessary, each one of you would say "no."

That is applying common business sense to business matters. But when it comes to applying that rule to the Government of the United States, every one of you—no; I am glad to say that is not so—but a majority of you refuse to apply these business principles to the Government of this country.

Why, you point to this law as a Republican law. Be that as it may, when that law was passed there was an overflowing Treasury, there was a surplus over expenditure, and we were justified then as you can not possibly justify yourselves to-day with the condition that your Treasury is in. Mr. Chairman, if the Republican Party was in power to-day and a Republican committee was preparing this bill, if the Treasury was in the condition which it now is—which it never would have been—there would have been no such appropriation as this reported in the bill.

On the contrary, not only would the appropriation not have been reported, but the appropriation for the census of manufactures would have been eliminated. There would have been economy practiced. The expenditures of the Government would be kept down within the income of the Government, because business principles would be applied. The responsibility is now upon you Democrats to apply those principles or take the consequences. Much has been said about the benefit to the farmer. Mr. Chairman, there is not a farmer whose production will be increased one bushel, whose price will be increased one penny, or whose cost of living will be reduced one nickel by the expenditure of this $2,286,000. It can not be justified when you have on the statute books at the present time a war tax.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] was severely criticized because he referred to the fact that this would furnish a thousand jobs to Democrats. He put the number entirely too low. It will be nearer three thousand than one under the bill, but gentlemen on the Democratic side do not get the point of the criticism of the gentleman from Iowa. Gentlemen need not smile. There are 1,000 clerks which have been provided for in the provision which has just been stricken out, and in addition to those clerks there will be thousands of enumerators and special agents to appoint, and the gentleman from Iowa is trying to impress on the Democratic side of the House that if it were not for these proposed appointments which are to be received by Democratic Members of the House they would look upon this proposition impartially, upon its merits, where now they are more or less likely to be influenced by the fact that the passage of the amendment will carry patronage to them. You on that side, I say to you, can not afford by your vote on this question to do anything of this kind, and there will be a roll call upon it, you may rest assured, if it is agreed to now. You can not afford to get patronage by such means, and I say that it will cost you much more than it will benefit you if you succeed now in putting it into the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have no applications for time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the arguments against this provision on the ground that it will furnish patronage to the Democratic Party are without merit. The paragraph does not contain the provision which the Republicans invariably inserted in such laws—that the appointments should be made without regard to the civil-service regulations. The only justification for the statement that the Democrats will receive all of the positions is the absolute conviction on the part of the Republicans in the House that the Democrats are so much better equipped that they would pass such superior examinations that they would be reached for certification in place of the Republicans.

But, Mr. Chairman, if it were true that the Democrats would get the places to be provided, it would be the only argument that would be persuasive enough to induce me to be in favor of the appropriation. I am opposed to making the appropriation, not because I believe it was unwise to pass the law when it was enacted, not because the information might not possibly be of some value to some person here or there throughout the country, but because I believe the condition of the Federal Treasury at this time does not justify appropriations for any activities of the Government unless they are imperatively demanded. In the Book of Estimates transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury on the opening day of this session the regular annual estimates for the fiscal year 1916 are stated in the sum of $1,090,775,134.38. It would be a matter of gratification to this side of the House if that statement accurately and properly represented the estimates submitted to Congress at this time; but it does not. It is $32,031,593 less than the estimates for the conduct of the Government during the fiscal year 1916 now actually before Congress.

The Post Office Department submitted estimates aggregating $297,355,144. The Treasury Department states that the items, as computed by the Treasury Department, aggregate $299,211,014. Those estimates were based on certain changes of law requested by the Postmaster General. The Post Office Committee has reported the Post Office bill, and it states in the report accompanying the bill that the estimates for the department, if submitted to Congress in proper sum, instead of aggregating $297,355,144, are $325,129,614, or an increase of $27,774,000 over the sum stated in the Book of Estimates. In addition, there have been submitted since the first Monday in December certain supplemental estimates aggregating $4,257,000, so that the total estimates of one billion ninety million and odd dollars are increased by $32,031,000. These sums do not include an indefinite sum of about $6,000,000 which must be appropriated for the construction of public buildings, for which no estimate has yet been submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can I have a few minutes more?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the gentleman can yield the time. There was no agreement that the time should be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes without regard to the agreement entered into respecting time.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has already yielded him five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He has not the time to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be permitted to continue for five minutes, without regard to the time fixed by the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report points out that the condition of the Treasury is such that it is unfortunate that the war-tax revenue act terminates on the 31st day of December, 1915. He expresses the belief that it should be extended in order to provide the necessary revenues to conduct the Government. With the condition that exists in Europe because of the widespread war, with our markets abroad completely demoralized, with the producers of foodstuffs and cotton and manufacturers throughout the length and breadth of the land unable to find markets for their products, and compelled for that reason to permit labor to remain idle, with increasing difficulties everywhere encountered to finance their operations, it seems to me that it is an imperative duty of this Congress to refrain from appropriations for any activity of the Government or for any service of the Government unless it be absolutely essential. Only those things that are imperatively required for the conduct of the Government should receive any consideration at the hands of the Congress. Where are the public funds to be obtained to finance all of the operations suggested? Of how much real value to the farming interests of the country will be the information proposed to be obtained. The census which was taken in 1910 of the very products of which it is proposed to take a census now was not available completely until 1914.

The first bulletin was published in 1912 and complete reports in 1914. Those who urged that this census be taken at this time, based the need upon the ground that it was necessary to have accurate information taken through the census upon which the estimates of the Agricultural Department might be founded so as to revise out any error; yet, if the information can not be available inside of two years at the best, of what particular advantage is it. How advantageous is it to the farmers of the country at this time to know whether the wheat crop is to be between two or three million bushels of the estimate of the Department of Agriculture? The raisers of foodstuffs and of cotton and the manufacturers of the country are not so particularly interested in knowing how many bales or how many bushels or how many tons of material are to be produced as they are in the obtaining of markets where their products can be sold and some return obtained for their labor. I believe it to be a grave mistake, Mr. Chairman, to propose to expend at this time public funds upon activities of the Government, highly desirable, if you please, when the Treasury is in a condition to permit it, beneficial in many respects when we are able to do the work without imposing a great burden upon the people, but absolutely indefensible when the people are suffering under the burden of an irksome, detestable, and unpopular war-revenue law. [Applause on the Republican side.] There does not seem, in my opinion, to be any prospect of the clearing of the situation in Europe which will result in the very near future in largely increasing imports into this country. Unless we are to have an increase in our imports our customs receipts necessarily will not reach the level anticipated when the customs law was enacted. The revenues must be supplemented in other ways, such as from the war-revenue law. At the next session of the Congress, in all probability, we will be called upon either to extend the war-revenue act for another year or else devise some other method of obtaining the moneys necessary to conduct the Government. In all sincerity let me urge my Democratic colleagues to make the difficulties as light as possible. Do not increase the burdens to be faced in the next campaign. We must economize. Here is an opportunity to do so. We should not miss it. We will regret our failures quickly unless we appreciate what the country demands and resolutely meet the situation. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I will leave to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to state particularly how this section got into the bill, as I think he will. I want to call the attention of gentlemen, however, to the very patent fact that it could not have been well considered. Let me call the attention of gentlemen to the first section of the act of 1909, which provides that a census of the population, agriculture, manufacturing, and mines, and so forth, of the United States shall be taken by the Director of the Census in the year 1910 and every 10 years thereafter. I want gentlemen particularly to note that it provides in the very first section of the bill that a census of agriculture shall be taken in the year 1910. Now turn to section 31 of the bill, one of the very last sections of the bill, and it is provided that there shall be in the year 1915 and once every 10 years thereafter a census of agriculture, live stock, and so forth. Now, there could have been only one of two grounds or reasons for the provision of taking a census of agriculture—one decennially or every decennial period and the other every five years thereafter—so it must have been thought necessary to take a census every five years, or it must have been thought best to take an agricultural census not then but in five years thereafter. Now, however, we have this condition: The most complete, the most elaborate—in fact, the most complete and elaborate—census of agriculture that was ever taken by any country in the world was taken in the year 1910 and thereafter, and we have had only now within a year's time the result of that, so that we have now here before us the result of the census that was taken in the year 1910. But now again we are asked to take a census in the year 1915. I submit to gentlemen on the other side that in the condition of the Treasury there is certainly no possible justification for doing such a thing as that, and the question has not been met that was suggested by my friend and colleague from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], that now there is being taken every year by the Department of Agriculture a census every whit as complete as is demanded by the terms of this act, and which is given to the people fresh every year.

So that the necessity for the things that are suggested is not only not apparent but it is absolutely shown to be entirely unnecessary. It is suggested that these reports are made and estimates are made upon the basis of the census of 1910. Only to a very limited extent is that true, I will say to the gentleman, because the reports of the Secretary of Agriculture are now made from reports that are taken both by the States and by the Nation that are transmitted to him; that they are the result of specific inquiries directed to farmers themselves with regard to the amount of acreage in crops and the amount of production for that particular year. So that we have exactly the same information now, derived every year, that could be obtained from a census of agriculture, because the enumerators will have to go to these farmers and will have to have from them these reports just as they are now being reported, not only to the United States Agricultural Department directly but also to the State departments of agriculture. So it is absolutely useless that we should make this expenditure at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am very positive in saying, and very glad to say, that I do not agree with my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that the American people are paying 1 cent more public taxes under Democratic administration than they paid under Republican administrations. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There has been a loss of taxes paid on imports, it is true. We Democrats believe that we have demonstrated to the American people that tariff taxes are the most burdensome and expensive taxes that any people can pay. They have been supplanted in part by direct taxes, which reveal exactly how much they produce to the Treasury. No part of it is going indirectly into the pockets of any favored class in this country, as is the case with tariff. I do not agree that there is any unusual burden on the American people at this time.

And I want to clear up another situation here which seems to have caused some debate in this House, and that is, that this proposition is permeated with spoils. Why, my colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has pointed out that these thousand clerks must be appointed, unless specially exempt, under the civil-service system. All this talk about spoils is entirely a false issue raised in this case.

Now, the question is as to what is the need of an agricultural census at this time. We had before us the gentleman who claimed to be the author of this provision. He said he had the collaboration of the Republican chairman of the Census Committee, the former Member from Indiana, Mr. Crumpacker. He said further:

> Prior to the final bill introduced by Mr. Crumpacker, of Indiana, providing for the Thirteenth Census, I had made an effort to secure a quinquennial census of the acreage in the United States, planted to the principal crops, and of the number of domestic animals and their value. I had attempted to enumerate those crops. The original bill provided for the acreage planted to corn, wheat, oats, cotton, tobacco, and hay. After some discussion, Mr. Crumpacker finally suggested that potatoes were a valuable crop, one of the principal crops, and should be included. We eliminated all designations, and used the expression "the principal crops grown in the United States."

Thus it appears this proposition was accepted by the Republican committee with full knowledge that it called for an agricultural census in 1915.

Now, the claim has been made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that no farmer can benefit by this census, and that the only person liable to benefit by it is the speculator.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. In just a minute. I want to first preface that, but I will yield to the gentleman in just a minute. He based his proposition upon the result of the census of 1910, which was the most unsatisfactory and expensive census the American people have ever had taken. It is true that a large amount of the material then gathered was not available for the farmer or anybody else, and never will be. It is true that the statements submitted to the farmers at that time contained 102 questions on one sheet, and could not be answered by a farmer unless he kept a double entry set of books. This is a very simple census, confined to three propositions, and there is no reason on earth why it can not be gotten out in a reasonable time after it is collected.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wish to say that the gentleman is partially incorrect as to what I stated. I made no allusion to speculators. As a matter of fact, it will not be a benefit to them. I did not make my statement strong enough, because I should have added another year to the time that will intervene.

Mr. BORLAND. That will make the gentleman just that much further wrong.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. These crops will be the crops of 1914.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, let us see. I will read:

> Mr. BORLAND. * * * I was going to ask this further question: Do not the local officials attempt to compile some statistics like that?
> Mr. BURLESON. They are mere estimates. The purpose of this is to get away from estimates and to get an actual enumeration, so as to have a more definite basis of comparison. When it is a mere estimate they start in one year with a knowledge of the actual number of acres planted to cotton, and the next year it is a guess or an estimate, and the next year, of course, certain elements of chance enter into it, and they result in error, and the next year these are carried forward and the error becomes greater, until the last year before the decennial period arrives it is, I will not say of no value, but it is of very much less value than it was the first and second years, whereas if we could have a standard every five years it would be very much more valuable to the agriculturists of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, whether the party now in the minority is responsible for or is to be credited with this piece of legislation is immaterial. I think the man who claims credit for its enactment recognized then an existing state of facts. We of the minority are compelled to recognize now a different state of facts. There had been at that time passed, or was all ready for passage, a tariff law which protected nearly every agricultural product in the United States; so that the amount of farm products raised in this country was expected to have a definite relation to the 90,000,000 consumers we had at that time. In other words, the American producer was to have control of the home market. The farmer, seeing consumption and production rapidly approximating each other, could know the large source of demand, and a census would aid him in estimating the sources of supply.

Since that time, however, there has been enacted by the present majority of this House a new and entirely different tariff law. That law places upon the free list, or practically upon the free list, nearly all our agricultural products, including crops and live stock, which the farmers would be interested in knowing about and which a census might reveal. In the latter state of affairs the farmers of this country are interested in knowing not so much the statement of crops and live stock in this country as they are the crops and live stock of the countries which compete with us at this time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

So, with the multiplied millions of farm products, including crops and live stock, that are coming into this country free, the farmer has not the interest in knowing these facts that he would otherwise have, because he has lost control of the American market. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If you want to do something for the farmers laboring under the burdens and disadvantages of the present tariff law in order to give them some information upon which to base their estimates as to how much they ought to seed of grain or other crops and what live stock to raise and what not to raise, you ought to take an agricultural census of the world, including Argentina and Canada, Mexico and Australia. Then you would give them information of value. As it is now, with the hundreds of millions of increased crops and live stock annually shipped into this country, this information would be of little value to the farmer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, it is really amusing to us on this side who remember how gentlemen on the other side enthusiastically supported this proposition in 1909, when they were in control of the House. This was a good proposition then. But whenever you break the tie that binds a Republican to the power of patronage you break his heart. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Republicans flourish in rank luxuriance when holding on to the public pap. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Sever his connection with patronage and he is hard to enthuse on anything that will help the farmers of the country. Now you have the opportunity to help the American farmer, but you refuse to do so. You talk economy when it comes to expending money in the interest of the farmers of America. You were in control of the Government for 16 years, and you made appropriations for Army and Navy purposes.

We have not been in control of the Government quite two years, and yet you are telling us that the Army and the Navy are not in condition to fight a foreign foe if we should become involved in a foreign war. What has become of all the preparations growing out of the vast sums of money appropriated for that purpose during all those years? I suggest that a grand jury should inquire into the appropriations made by the Republicans for Army and Navy purposes during the 16 years in which they were in power. Gentlemen on that side are so anxious to play party politics that they are driven to the miserable extreme of misrepresenting their country's preparedness for war. I did not believe, Mr. Chairman, that in their efforts to oppose Democratic legislation that they would oppose this measure in the interest of the agricultural classes of this country. I am utterly surprised at my friends from the West, Republicans over there, standing up here and preaching economy when we are trying to gather information that will be of benefit to the humblest farmer in this country. Oh, we can spend millions of money to carry the mails across the ocean; we can spend more than $50,000,000 to carry mails on railroad trains; but an appropriation designed to benefit millions of farming people in this country—your oppose it and excuse yourself on the ground of economy.

And one gentleman on that side suggests that Democrats will be appointed to fill these places. I told you at the outset that the question of patronage was always uppermost in the mind of the Republicans. You take a Republican away from the pie counter and he is in an awful fix. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Your only reason for opposing this provision is that you fear that Democrats would fill these places. Let me warn you, gentlemen, when some fellow gets you properly arraigned before your constituents and asks you about your conduct this afternoon, when we are fighting here for a proposition to gather statistics that will be of benefit to this great class—the most-imposed-upon class of people in this country or in any other country in the world, the farming class—he will ask you why you favored getting up statistics for manufacturers, and why you smiled when that was done, and when we ask that some money be expended in the interest of the toiling masses of this country you pleaded economy as an excuse for your failure to aid the farmer. Quit this miserable political play, gentlemen, and join us and help us to secure this much-needed legislation for the farmers of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, we have one more speech on this side. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, after all, there ought not to be any politics in a matter of this sort. This provision in the law was passed in the law of 1909. It was in the bill as introduced in the House. It was not referred to in debate. I do not think anybody in the House, practically, knew it was here. That bill was the result of a veto by President Roosevelt of a bill passed in the prior Congress. The bill as passed was passed at the special session at which the tariff law was enacted. In the previous Congress this paragraph was not referred to in debate in any way whatever.

Gentlemen who are familiar with the Census Office will recall the fact that in 1902 we had provided for a permanent Census Bureau, with very little to do. The Census Bureau had to find something to give an excuse for its continued existence. They largely prepared the bill which President Roosevelt vetoed at the end of the Sixtieth Congress and which, slightly modified, was passed in the Sixty-first Congress.

It is all right for the minority at any time to charge the majority with responsibility for legislation, but there was no party division on that bill at any time. The Census Office was constantly and continuously claiming that if they were given this extra work to do between the decennial censuses they could do it with a very slight increase in their force; that they would be busy on the decennial census until toward the end of the five-year period, and then when the five-year period came they could take the manufactures census and the agricultural census with almost no additional expense. Well, I did not believe it then, and I am convinced now that it is not correct, because here is a proposition which comes from the Census Bureau, properly made to the House under the law, in which they propose to appropriate money for a force necessary to take a new census almost as though there was no permanent Census Office in existence.

Now, everyone will admit that if an agricultural census were necessary every 10 years, or every 5 years, or every year, the Government ought to make it. Agriculture is the great field of activity of more of our people than any other. But, as a matter of fact, the 10-year agricultural census—and that is the only one we have ever made—has worked well in the past; and with the work of the Agricultural Department, making its estimates of crops, we are quite convinced in the present, as in the past, that we know from year to year practically all of the statistics about agriculture. I remember when the agricultural census was made in 1900 and again in 1910. An agricultural census made by enumerators is a guess. There is not one farmer in ten who can tell how many bushels of corn he grows, if he grows much corn. It is a guess. Well, we take the guesses because they are all we can take; but the Agricultural Department, with its experts, having the figures of the Census Office one year, can estimate with an accuracy almost equal to that of the Census Office the amount of farm land cultivated the next year. We have the statistics practically accurate. Now, is there occasion at this time to take this agricultural census? In my judgment the people of Chicago get more benefit from the agricultural census than the people of any other district in the United States. My colleague [Mr. MADDEN] and myself probably have more members of the Chicago Board of Trade living in our districts than live in all the rest of Chicago. It is there where the men work over statistics, and if I thought the agricultural statistics would be of value to the farmer I would know that they would be of more value to the board of trade operators. But they will get along without them. We have got to cut expenses somewhere. We can not keep on making appropriations. Every time the question arises we may say, "Oh, well; we will make this appropriation and save some other time"; but the only time when the Lord lets a man save is at the time when the opportunity is presented. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, during Mr. Roosevelt's administration the Republican Party passed a law providing for the taking of the decennial census. It provided for the appointment of the employees by the spoils system. President Roosevelt vetoed that bill. You waited until another President came in, and then you passed the census bill under which the decennial census was taken, and you provided for a noncompetitive examination, which was the old spoils system.

Now our friends are talking about economy. The farmer from Chicago [Mr. MANN], leading you men from the West, talks about cutting down expenditures when it comes to taking a census for the American farmer. When you came into power in 1897 this legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill carried $21,000,000. When you went out of power, after 16 years, you had increased it to $36,000,000. And what is true with respect to the legislative bill is true with respect to all the other appropriation bills. Here at the last session of Congress, in every case when a motion was made to increase the amount proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, you could always count on practically a solid vote on that side of the House to overrule the committee. Yet in the fall of the year you went out to the country and criticized the aggregate of the appropriations. And so it is here. It is not economy that our friends are concerned about.

When you were in power you provided for this census. You supposed that your people were to take it. There was no talk of economy then; but now, when somebody else is in power, when somebody else is to appoint the men who are to take the census, you have a spasm of economy. Gentlemen from the great agricultural States of the Middle West are following the farmer from Chicago. Of course, the gentleman from Illinois—the distinguished leader on that side—knows nothing about farming. He lives in an atmosphere where farming and farmers do not flourish. But surely the Representatives of the true farmers of the country are not going to deny to the people an agricultural census.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have not time. I gave you people 30 minutes and took only 20 minutes myself.

Mr. COOPER. I merely wanted to ask you a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The census of 1910 cost $15,000,000, of which $4,000,000 was spent in gathering agricultural statistics. A Democratic Census Director proposes to take the agricultural census for the people for $2,286,000, or a little more than half what the Republicans spent in taking the agricultural census in 1910.

We propose to take a census that will be worth something to the people. The census of 1910 was so complicated and scientific as to be absolutely worthless. We propose to go to the country with a few simple, direct questions and get the information and print it in available form, quickly, for the benefit of the people.

Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], and then the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee:
Page 119, after line 11, insert the following:
"Census of agriculture: For taking, compiling, and completing the census of agriculture required by section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, providing for the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses, $2,286,100."

Substitute offered by Mr. GOOD:
Page 119, at the end of line 11, insert:
"That section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, is hereby repealed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were 57 ayes and 60 noes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. GOOD and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 72 ayes and 59 noes.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completion of investigations incident to the establishment of units and standards of refrigeration, and the determination of the physical constants of materials used in the refrigeration industries, such as ammonia, aqueous ammonia solutions, carbonic acid, brines, etc., and the determination of the thermal conductivities of materials, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $15,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 130, line 21, after the word "for," strike out the words "completion of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "continuing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioners of conciliation: To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor, and to appoint commissioners of conciliation, for per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4 pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, and traveling expenses, including an executive clerk at $2,000 in the District of Columbia, $50,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 135, line 9, after the word "Columbia," strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment the most important work of the Labor Department is that of conciliation and mediation or adjusting labor troubles. The report shows that they have prevented about 30 different labor disputes between employer and employee in the industrial world, meaning a saving of probably millions of dollars to the people. This work is something that may in times past have been considered as in the experimental stage, but this is no longer so. It has been proven that it can be of great service, and due to that fact, in my opinion, there will be a much greater demand for services in that line in the next fiscal year than there has been in the past.

Therefore, in my opinion, it is important to appropriate this money which the Secretary asks for in his estimate. For fear that some one might misunderstand me again, I want to assure gentlemen that this effort to increase this appropriation has not been suggested to me by the Secretary of Labor or by anyone in that office. My information, as far as that is concerned, is that the Secretary is willing to submit to the position of the committee on it, and so far as I know has not asked anyone to make any effort in that direction.

I am offering the amendment because I know the great importance of the work. I have had a wide experience in the industrial world, and I know the cost of industrial wars. I know that anything the Government can do to prevent industrial wars is of great importance and benefit to all of our people, because industrial wars affect more than those immediately concerned in them; they affect business throughout the whole country whenever they occur.

The Secretary reports that there have been 30 settlements made satisfactorily to employers and employees, and very few failures. There is no doubt that there has been some good work in every effort that has been made along that line. I think that no Member of this House ought to withhold his consent to giving $75,000, so that if it is necessary it may be used either on the work of conciliation and mediation or, if necessary, in arbitration, so that the work may not be obstructed by lack of funds.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just a word. Last year we appropriated for this purpose $25,000. For the current year we have doubled the amount, giving $50,000. There is nothing in the testimony that leads the committee to believe that $50,000 is not ample, and a like amount for the next year would be ample.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois) there were 20 ayes and 44 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk proceeded with and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the items stricken from the bill on a point of order, as indicated in the written memorandum I have sent to the desk, be restored to the bill. That will restore all of the items in the bill except the language to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] made the point of order. I ask that the memorandum be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the paragraph, on pages 93 and 94, covering the Indian Office, be restored, omitting therefrom the words "second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of"; also restore to the bill paragraph, pages 96 and 97, covering the Patent Office; paragraph, page 98, covering the Bureau of Education; paragraph, pages 104, 105, and 106, covering the Postmaster General's Office; paragraph, pages 108 and 109, covering the Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the items just read by the Clerk be considered as not having been stricken out of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19909, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments thereto, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, 11 o'clock is a very inconvenient hour for Members to come here to answer to a roll call. We have had several 11 o'clock meetings this week, and a good many Members have expressed a desire for an opportunity to be in their offices.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The reason for making the request was that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, very kindly consented that this bill should take precedence over the Post Office appropriation bill, and he desired that we should get through with this bill so that he could take up his at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. It will not take long to-morrow. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], in the nature of a substitute, repealing the law of 1909 providing for an agricultural census.

Mr. ADAMSON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw an objection which I interposed yesterday to a request made by my amiable friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] trying to effect an exchange of days. I objected—something that I have not done in 18 years—and I desire to leave the bright escutcheon unmarred by any such conduct. I therefore desire to withdraw the objection.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that request has passed into ancient history.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BROWN of New York, indefinitely, on account of death in family.

To Mr. ASHBROOK, for five days, on account of the death of the wife of his business partner.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 18, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the president of the Board of Commissioners of the United States Soldiers' Home upon the financial and other affairs of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., together with copies of reports from the commanding officer of that prison and the commanding officer of the Pacific branch, United States military prison, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 1418); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers United States Army, report upon a preliminary examination, plan, and estimate of cost of improvement of Fivemile River Harbor, Conn. (H. Doc. No. 1419); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication of the Librarian of Congress submitting a proposed provision of law which he desires to have included in the urgent deficiency bill (H. Doc. No. 1420); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chairman of the Commission on Industrial Relations, transmitting its first annual report; to the Committee on Labor.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 18, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, Almighty God, that with the pressing cares that bind our thoughts so closely to the temporal Thou hast still kept alive within us the grasp of the spiritual. By the slow processes of our human investigation Thou art unfolding to us the uses and purposes of the life about us; Thou art also giving to us that divine impulse which reaches out after the immortal, the never ending, the eternal. And so our friendships never die, every duty takes on an eternal significance, and life presses on the upward path, the path of the righteous that shines more and more unto the perfect day. Let the grace of God lead us in this path this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1914, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

COMMISSION ON RELATIONS WITH JAPAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following communication, which will be read.

The communication was read and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

[Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, national office, 612 United Charities Building, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York.]

AN APPEAL TO CONGRESS AND THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES FOR AN ADEQUATE ORIENTAL POLICY.

The awakening of Asia and her rapid acquisition of imported elements of occidental civilization inaugurates a new era in world history in which Asia is to play a new and increasingly important rôle. Whether that rôle shall be one of peace, good will, and mutual cooperation or one controlled by increasing suspicion and fear between the East and the West will depend largely on the attitude of the western nations themselves.

It has seemed to many of our citizens who have become familiar with the questions raised by this more intimate and ever-increasing contact with the Orient that the United States might well adopt a more adequate oriental policy. Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Commission on Relations with Japan, appointed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America urge upon Congress and upon the people of the United States the importance of adopting an oriental policy based upon a just and equitable regard for the interests of all the nations concerned, and to this end suggests that the entire immigration problem be taken up at an early date, providing for comprehensive legislation covering all phases of the question (such as the limitation of immigration and the registration, distribution, employment, education, and naturalization of immigrants) in such a way as to conserve American institutions, to protect American labor from dangerous economic competition, and to promote an intelligent and enduring friendliness among the people of all nations.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6061) for the relief of Robert W. Thompson, submitted an adverse report (No. 845) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. TILLMAN. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back the bill (S. 6866) for the relief of Vilhelm Torkildsen, because it was referred to that committee by an error. It is a bill which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], had it referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. He thought it belonged to the Naval Committee. There is a lot of drudgery on that committee, and therefore he dumped it on us. I ask that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred back to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the bill will be rereferred to the Committee on Claims.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. FLETCHER. I report back favorably from the Committee on Commerce without amendment the bill (H. R. 6867) to increase and fix the compensation of the collector of customs for the customs collection district of Omaha, and I submit a report (No. 844) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the report.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the compensation of the collector of customs for the customs collection district of Omaha from $2,500 per annum, as provided in the plan of reorganization of the customs service promulgated by the President on March 3, 1913, to $3,500 per annum, and provides that compensation at the rate of $3,500 per annum shall be paid to the said collector of customs from and after June 30, 1913.

Mr. OVERMAN. Should not that matter go into the regular appropriation bill we are soon to consider—the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is a bill which was passed by the House of Representatives under the recommendation of the department, and is intended to correct an error which was made when the customs offices were reorganized. By that error the collection district of Omaha was placed down in the $2,500 class. An effort has been made constantly since that time to correct that error, which was probably a typographical one.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the bill proposes to increase the salary over the present one, but that the present salary was fixed by an error.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is merely a nominal matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator think this matter ought to be considered in the regular appropriation bill? We take care of such matters in the legislative appropriation bill. That bill will soon be before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator that this is a change of the law, and it has no place in an appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand it is a change in the law; but if we pass these separate bills, we will never be able to tell where we are. We have to pass the general appropriation bill in which all these offices are provided for. In that bill we provide for all the customs offices, and why should we select one? Why not let this go in the regular way? I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, however.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator that, to my mind, it would be objectionable in an appropriation bill to undertake to change a fixed law. The salary was fixed by an error when there was a general revision. This is a unanimous report from the committee. It is recommended by the department. It was unanimously reported by the committee in the House and unanimously passed the House of Representatives. It is merely to correct what should have been corrected more than a year ago.

Mr. OVERMAN. It would be subject to a point of order on the appropriation bill in the House of Representatives but not here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would be a legislative act on an appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is done, as far as that is concerned, nearly every year. This provides for an increase of the statutory salary, and that is desired in nearly all the offices. I shall not object, however, at this time, but hereafter all bills which provide an increase of salary must go to the Committee on Appropriations, because in passing hundreds of separate bills here we do not know how to provide for them on the appropriation bill. This ought to go through the regular channel.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this bill really does not provide for an increase of salary. It is, as the Senator from Nebraska has said, to correct an error plainly admitted by the department. It was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and it was properly referred to the Commerce Committee, and was reported from that committee, which has to do with customs offices. It is simply to correct an error in that office.

Mr. OVERMAN. As far as an increase of salary is concerned, I do not know whether the Committee on Commerce has anything to do with that. It should be properly considered by the Committee on Appropriations in the general appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. This bill simply corrects an error in the organization which, by mistake, fixed the salary at $2,500 when it should have been fixed at $3,500, as it belongs to that class.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand there is no appropriation in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is merely to correct that error.

Mr. JONES. I wish to suggest that this bill does not carry an appropriation. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if that is not the case.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To tell the truth, I am not familiar with that point. I suppose it will have to pass through the hands of the Committee on Appropriations at the proper time.

Mr. JONES. What I wish to call to the attention of the Senator from North Carolina is that the bill simply changes the law and fixes the salary, and then the Committee on Appropriations will provide for the salary in the appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. If that is all, I have no objection. The Senator misunderstood me. I asked him if it increased the appropriation, and I understood him to say that it did.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no appropriation in the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report a joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 213) authorizing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for month of December, 1914, on the 22d day of said month, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and considered, as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1914, on the 22d day of December; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on said day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowance for clerk hire for said month of December.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 6982) granting an increase of pension to Francis E. Smith (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 6983) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Haggerty (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6984) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Rudrauff (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 6985) granting a pension to Isaac Clark (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6986) granting a pension to Hannah H. Ahlstrom (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 6987) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to the city of Shelbyville, in the county of Shelby, State of Indiana, four condemned bronze or brass field-pieces, with a number of cannon balls;

A bill (S. 6988) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to the city of Vincennes, in the county of Knox, State of Indiana, two condemned bronze or brass field-pieces, with a number of cannon balls; and

A bill (S. 6989) for the relief of Charles W. Townsend; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 6990) granting an increase of pension to John J. Calkins (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 6991) granting a pension to Percy A. Farrar (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6992) granting a pension to Jennie O. Collins (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 6993) granting an increase of pension to James L. van Allen (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6994) granting an increase of pension to Joanna Swander (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE (by request):

A bill (S. 6995) for the relief of the Buffalo River Zinc Mining Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6996) granting a pension to William A. Taylor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WORKS submitted an amendment proposing to appoint a commission of five persons, to be known as the "house commission," in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 19422), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

BANKING AND CREDIT.

On motion of Mr. LEWIS, it was Ordered, That Bulletin No. 90, special agents series, Department of Commerce, entitled "Banking and Credit in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, and Peru," be printed as a document.

RATES FOR OCEAN TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 504) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce be requested to furnish all available information in relation to the increased rates for ocean transportation which have taken place since July 1, 1914, and any and all other facts relating to ocean transportation which adversely affect or injure American commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will be glad to have the resolution read once more. I did not catch the first part of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be again read.

The resolution was again read, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

INDIAN LAWS AND TREATIES.

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 505), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,000 copies of Senate Document No. 719, Sixty-second Congress, second session, Indian Laws and Treaties, part 3, for the use of the Senate.

TEMPORARY AND SPECIAL COMMISSIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 506), which was read and referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Librarian of Congress is hereby directed to furnish to the Senate a report, to be prepared in the legislative reference division of the Library, showing what temporary or special commissions are now in existence by virtue of Federal law, or of concurrent or joint or Senate or House resolution or Executive regulation, and by virtue of what law, resolution, or regulation the same are constituted, how long they have been in operation, and what they have thus far cost the United States Government.

Such report to be accompanied by a statement showing what they have done and are doing and how soon they expect to be done with their work, the data for such statement to be furnished to the Librarian by the several commissions, which are hereby directed to respond to requests from him for the same.

CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill 392. I do this for this reason, and I make this explanation to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. This bill has been considered on several occasions and amendments have been made to it, so that it is practically completed so far as that is concerned, and apparently is ready for the vote. It has been before the Senate, under notice and otherwise, a number of times. I am asking that it be considered now, not to supplant the regular order, which will be in order at 2 o'clock, when this bill would have to be laid aside for its consideration, but in order that we may take it up this morning and devote some time to it, with the hope of getting a vote upon it. Therefore I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are two notices of speeches for this morning to follow immediately after the morning business—one by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and the other by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is one of the questions that is not debatable, and the Chair is required to enforce the rule. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Still, Mr. President, I do not think that would prevent me from calling attention to the fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair is not making any statement adverse to the statement of the Senator from Georgia. He is simply calling attention to the rule that a motion to take up a bill during the morning hour is not debatable.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Gallinger	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Gronna	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Hardwick	Page	Smoot
Bryan	Hughes	Perkins	Sterling
Burton	Jones	Pittman	Stone
Camden	Kenyon	Poindexter	Sutherland
Catron	La Follette	Reed	Swanson
Chamberlain	Lane	Robinson	Thomas
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Root	Thompson
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Shafroth	Townsend
Crawford	Lodge	Sheppard	Vardaman
Culberson	McCumber	Sherman	Warren
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Weeks
Dillingham	Nelson	Simmons	Williams
du Pont	Norris	Smith, Ariz.	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 392.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I shall not vote.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As that Senator is not in the Chamber, I will withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. On that account I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I inquire if that Senator has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. Then I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has not voted. I have a pair with him, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CATRON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], but by an agreement between us while we are both in the city either one is authorized to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], with whom I am paired, is out of the city. Under those circumstances, and not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROOT. I inquire if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. ROOT. I have a general pair with that Senator, and because of his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should feel constrained to vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state with reference to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] that he is absent from the city, and, if present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the pair of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Borah	Gallinger	McCumber	Sherman
Brandegee	Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Bristow	Hitchcock	Nelson	Sterling
Burton	Johnson	Norris	Sutherland
Catron	Jones	Oliver	Thompson
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Page	Townsend
Clapp	Kern	Perkins	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Pittman	Works
Crawford	Lee, Md.	Poindexter
Cummins	Lippitt	Pomerene

NAYS—32.

Ashurst	La Follette	Saulsbury	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Stone
Camden	Lodge	Sheppard	Swanson
Chilton	Myers	Shields	Thornton
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Shively	Vardaman
Gore	Overman	Simmons	Walsh
Hardwick	Ransdell	Smith, Ariz.	White
Hughes	Robinson	Smith, Ga.	Williams

NOT VOTING—26.

Bankhead	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Fall	Newlands	Stephenson
Burleigh	Goff	Owen	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Hollis	Penrose	Tillman
Colt	James	Reed	Weeks
Culberson	Lewis	Root
Dillingham	McLean	Smith, Md.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "The Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 24, after the word "officer," the Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment to strike out "three-fourths" and to insert "one-half," so as to read:

It shall be payable quarterly, and shall not exceed, in the case of any surviving officer, one-half of the initial active pay now received by a captain in the United States Army.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I had announced that I would speak to-day after the conclusion of the routine morning business, but I understand that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is going to ask to fix a time to vote on the immigration bill. In view of the situation in the Senate and of the fact that the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has announced that he would desire to speak this morning, I shall waive my position so far as that is concerned and yield, and come in under legislative business whenever an opportunity is afforded.

Mr. SHEPPARD obtained the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like very much to make an appeal to the Senator from Texas to the effect that he allow us to proceed with the consideration of the bill that is now before the Senate. It is the matter now properly before us. The bill to which the Senator proposes to talk is not now here. It may come before the Senate, at which time, of course, ample and proper opportunity for its discussion will be given.

I realize, of course, that the Senator from Texas is not favorable to the bill which is now pending, and yet I believe he is a fair gentleman—I have always found him so—and it occurs to me that inasmuch as the Senate has expressed itself on this particular subject we ought to have a chance to consider it, and I shall feel it my duty, inasmuch as a majority of the Senate seems to be favorable to its consideration, to call it up on every occasion. I should like to have it considered now. The Senate has voted to consider it now. I believe we can reach a vote on it if Senators are willing to trust the Senate that far, and the matter can be either voted up or voted down and thus put out of the way.

For these reasons I ask the Senator if he will not address the Senate later and at a time when the matter about which he wishes to speak is before it, and allow us to proceed at this time with the matter that is now pending.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I would address the Senate to-day on this question. I shall not consume any great length of time. The matter is to be voted on in the House of Representatives next Tuesday, and is now before the country. I have no desire whatever unnecessarily to obstruct any proceedings or the will of the Senate, but I prefer to conclude my remarks now.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I thought possibly the Senator might be willing to address the Senate later in the day, when this bill would not be before it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall state to the Senator that I had made all my arrangements to deliver this speech at this time, and with his permission I shall be glad to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I send to the desk to have read Senate joint resolution 88, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for nation-wide prohibition. The joint resolution is in the form in which it is to be voted on in the House next Tuesday, and in the form in which I have requested the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee having it under consideration to report it to the full committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas exact scientific research has demonstrated that alcohol is a narcotic poison, destructive and degenerating to the human organism, and that its distribution as a beverage or contained in foods lays a staggering economic burden upon the shoulders of the people, lowers to an appalling degree the average standard of character of our citizenship, thereby undermining the public morals and the foundation of free institutions, produces widespread crime, pauperism and insanity, inflicts disease and untimely death upon hundreds of thousands of citizens, and blights with degeneracy their children unborn, threatening the future integrity and the very life of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring), That the following amendment of the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and exportation for sale therefrom, are forever prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress or the States within their respective jurisdictions shall have power to enforce this article by all needful legislation."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the question of submitting an amendment to the Federal Constitution may well embrace an inquiry into the basic principles of our system of government. During the present session an amendment depriving both Federal and State Governments of the power to authorize the liquor traffic will be voted on in the House and possibly in the Senate also.

One of the principal objections to this amendment is that it is an invasion of the rights of the States, an interference with their police powers. The makers of these objections admit that Congress is without power to adopt the amendment; that Congress may only submit it to the States for acceptance or rejection, deciding whether they may act through legislatures or conventions. They say, however, that it is such a violation of State rights that they will not permit the States to pass upon it lest three-fourths or more of the States might impose it on the remainder. In other words, they believe that as long as any State desires to authorize the liquor traffic, that most terrible menace to the Nation's happiness and prosperity, it must be permitted to do so.

I can understand how an antiprohibitionist, who believes that no unit of government should attempt to stop the liquor traffic, would oppose the adoption of the amendment after its submission. I can even conceive how extreme antiprohibitionists, who are obsessed with the idea that the disappearance of the saloon means the death of liberty, might in the vehemence of their opposition to any measure coming from the other side vote against the submission of the amendment. But how any prohibitionist, honestly desiring to see the curse uprooted, can delude himself with the idea that the right of one or a few States to harbor the liquor traffic is superior to the right of three-fourths of the States to terminate it in this Republic is a matter both of wonder and humiliation. Equally surprising and equally sad is the spectacle of a prohibitionist shielding the liquor traffic with the contention that the submission of a question to the States for their determination under methods described and sanctioned by them is a violation of the rights of the States.

Under the form of government that preceded the present system it required the consent of all the States to effect any change in the Constitution. That Constitution was called "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union Between the States," and Article XIII of that instrument read as follows:

Every State shall abide by the determinations of the United States in Congress assembled on all questions which by this confederation is submitted to them. And the articles of this confederation shall be inviolably observed by every State, and the union shall be perpetual; nor shall any alteration at any time hereafter be made in any of them unless such alteration be agreed to in a Congress of the United States and be afterwards confirmed by the legislatures of every State.

Some gentlemen seem to think that we are still living under this confederation, which went out of existence in 1789, 125 years ago. They argue that this liquor amendment should be agreed to on its merits in Congress and be satisfactory to every State before it should be adopted, and that any other view is subversive of State rights. These gentlemen belong to the eighteenth century, not the twentieth; to the confederation, not the Union; to the dead past, not the living present.

During the convention which framed the present system, the convention of 1787, there were clashes on the question of amending the new Constitution. It will be sufficient for our purposes to take up the article providing for amendments to the Constitution when it had reached the following form in the proceedings of the convention:

ART. V. The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem necessary, or on the application of two-thirds of the legislatures of the several States, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part thereof, when the same shall have been ratified by three-fourths, at least, of the legislatures of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses of the ninth section of Article I.

The first and fourth clauses of the ninth section of Article I referred to the foreign slave trade and to the mode of levying direct taxes, respectively. Mr. Sherman, a member of the convention from Connecticut, took the floor when this article was presented in the form I have quoted, and I shall now give the further proceedings in the exact language of Madison's Minutes:

Mr. Sherman expressed his fears that three-fourths of the States might be brought to do things fatal to the particular States, as abolishing them altogether or depriving them of their equality in the Senate. He thought it reasonable that the proviso in favor of the States importing slaves should be extended so as to provide that no State should be affected in its internal police or deprived of its equality in the Senate.

Col. Mason thought the plan of amending the Constitution exceptionable and dangerous. As the proposing of amendments is in both the modes to depend, in the first immediately, and in the second ultimately, on Congress, no amendments of the proper kind would ever be obtained by the people if the Government should become oppressive, as he verily believed would be the case.

I pause here to say that Col. Mason's fears as to the difficulty of securing the submission of constitutional amendments by Congress are fully borne out by the experience that millions of the American people are now having in persuading Congress to submit the liquor amendment.

Let us proceed with Madison's account:

Mr. Gouverneur Morris and Mr. Gerry moved to amend the article so as to require a convention on application of two-thirds of the States.

Mr. Madison did not see why Congress would not be as much bound to propose amendments applied for by two-thirds of the States, as to call a convention on the like application. He saw no objection, however, against providing for a convention for the purpose of amendments, excepting that difficulties might arise as to the form, the quorum, etc., which in constitutional regulations ought to be as much as possible avoided.

The motion of Mr. Gouverneur Morris and Mr. Gerry was agreed to nem. con.

Mr. Sherman moved to strike out of Article V, after "legislatures," the words "of three-fourths," and so after the word "conventions," leaving future conventions to act in this matter like the present convention according to circumstances.

Here the issue was squarely raised in the convention that framed the present Constitution as to whether the consent of every State should be required as to amendments. Returning to Madison's record we find the following:

On this motion—Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, ayes—3; Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, noes—7; New Hampshire, divided.

What! Can it be true that all the Southern States participating in that great convention, namely, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, voted down a motion requiring the consent of all the States to amendments to the Federal Constitution; that the only Northern State voting with them was Pennsylvania? What are we to think of these modern guardians of State rights in the South who talk so solemnly about the "sacrilege" of adopting any amendment "against the will of a sovereign State"?

Let us again take up Madison's notes:

Mr. Gerry moved to strike out the words "or by conventions in three-fourths thereof"; on which motion—

Connecticut, aye—1; New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, no—10.

Mr. Sherman moved, according to his idea above expressed, to annex to the end of the article a further proviso "that no State shall, without its consent, be affected in its internal police or deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

Mr. MADISON. Begin with these special provisos and every State will insist on them, for their boundaries, exports, etc.

On the motion of Mr. Sherman—

Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, aye—3; New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, no—8.

Wonderful to relate! The States of Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia voted down a motion in the convention that created the present Constitution that no State should, without its consent, be affected in its internal police; that is, in the exercise of its police powers—all the Southern States but one, that one being Delaware. What becomes of these contemporary saints of Democracy who affect dramatic poses and pretend to be outraged because of the alleged interference of the prohibition amendment with the police powers of the States?

But let us follow Madison's Minutes further:

Mr. Sherman then moved to strike out Article V altogether.

Mr. Brearly seconded the motion; on which—Connecticut, New Jersey, aye, 2; New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, no, 8; Delaware, divided.

Mr. Gouverneur Morris moved to annex a further proviso, "that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

This motion, being dictated by the circulating murmurs of the small States, was agreed to without debate, no one opposing it, or, on the question, saying "no."

Thus the right of three-fourths of the States to amend the present Federal Constitution was established by the votes of Southern States. It was so established in the face of the fact that the issue of interference with the police powers, nay, of the very existence of particular States, was specifically raised—raised not by anybody from the South, but by a northern man. Will anyone say that the southern men who helped to make the present Constitution were not as capable of preserving the true rights of the States or were not as devoted to the maintenance of their integrity as these present-day statesmen who clamor for the right of one State to block the progress of the Nation, and many of whom are using the argument of State rights as a mask for the death's head of the liquor traffic?

So deep is the reverence in which the framers of the Constitution are held that they are often referred to as "the fathers." Who were the fathers who came up from the South to aid in fashioning the mightiest written instrument ever devised by man? From Virginia came George Washington, John Blair, James Madison, Edmund Randolph, George Mason, George Wythe, and James McClurg; from North Carolina, William Blount, Richard Dobbs Spaight, Hugh Williamson, Alexander Martin, and William Richardson Davie; from South Carolina, J. Rutledge, Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, Charles Pinckney, and Pierce Butler; from Georgia, William Few, Abraham Baldwin, William Pierce, and William Houstoun; from Maryland, James McHenry, Daniel of St. Thomas Jenifer, Daniel Carroll, John Francis Mercer, and Luther Martin; from Delaware, George Read, Gunning Bedford, John Dickinson, Richard Bassett, and Jacob Broom.

These men and their associates from the other States realized that the peoples of the States were the constituent bodies of the Nation and that the structure of the Nation should always be subject to their control. They realized that the new Constitution would have to be changed from time to time to meet the changing needs of succeeding ages. They understood the principle expressed a few years later by Burke in his "Reflections on the Revolution in France," when he said:

A State without the means of some change is without the means of its conservation.

In this connection let me say that Jefferson in a letter to Madison from Paris, September 6, 1789, expressed the belief that every constitution and every law naturally expired every 34 years; that no society could make a perpetual constitution or even a perpetual law; that the earth belonged to the living and not to the dead.

Article V of the Constitution, as finally adopted by the Convention of 1787 and as it exists to-day, is as follows:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions in three-fourths thereof as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

So it develops that the amending power of the present Constitution consists to-day of three-fourths of the States, except as to the matter of representation in the Senate, while that of the confederation consisted of all the States. So it develops that the peoples of the States, in adopting the present Constitution, clothed three-fourths of the States with the right to say what changes should be made in the character of American Government, to say what powers should from time to time be conferred on State and Nation, what powers should, if necessary, be taken from them, to make such alteration in the division of governmental functions as would adapt the Constitution to the emergencies of the years. It seemed wise to the fathers to deprive any single State or even a fourth of the States of the right to oppose their will against the will of so overwhelming a majority as three-fourths. State sovereignty, therefore, means under the Constitution the sovereignty of States acting through three-fourths of their number, not of a single State acting alone.

When the amending power passed from the equal control of all the States to that of three-fourths the States, the right of a single State to reject any constitutional change imposed by three-fourths of the States, except as to equal representation in the Senate, perished. This does not mean that any single State lost the essence of sovereignty any more than that a citizen could be said to lose the character of a sovereign citizen because he may have voted in the minority at a given time. The State that votes in the minority on a constitutional amendment this year may be among the majority next year.

That the amending power clothed the States acting through a three-fourths majority with the right to go so far as to abolish the Constitution itself was clearly understood by Calhoun, one of the keenest intellects, in my opinion, that the American Senate has ever known and admittedly our foremost exponent of the doctrine of State rights. Replying to Webster on February 26, 1833, he said:

In connection with this point the Senator, to prove that the Constitution is not a compact, asserts that it is wholly independent of the State, and pointedly declares that the States have not a right to touch a hair of its head; and this with that provision in the Constitution that three-fourths of the States have a right to alter, change, amend, or even to abolish it staring him in the face.

Further on in the same address he said:

The plain state of the facts as regards our Government is that these States have agreed by compact to exercise their sovereign powers jointly, as already stated, and that for this purpose they have ratified the compact in their sovereign capacity, thereby making it the constitution of each State, in no wise distinguished from their own separate constitutions, but in the superadded obligation of compact—of faith mutually pledged to each other. In this compact they have stipulated, among other things, that it may be amended by three-fourths of the States—that is, they have conceded to each other by compact the right to add new powers or to subtract old by the consent of that proportion of the States without requiring as otherwise would have been the case the consent of all—a modification no more inconsistent with their sovereignty than any other contained in the compact. In fact, the provision to which I allude furnishes strong evidence that the sovereignty is as I contend in the States severally, as the amendments are affected not by any one three-fourths but by any three-fourths of the States, indicating that the sovereignty is in each of the States.

Calhoun shows in this masterful analysis that the doctrine of State rights justifies the cession of additional powers to the Federal Government by three-fourths of the States, although against the consent of individual States. And the Member of Congress who rushes to the rescue of the liquor traffic and says that his idea of State rights will not permit him to vote to enable three-fourths of the States to deprive any individual State, against its consent, of authorizing this infamous business is repudiating the definition of State rights by their most celebrated, their most profound, their ideal defender, John C. Calhoun.

In his Disquisition on Government, composed in 1848 and 1849, shortly before his death, Calhoun explains at length and with his usual clearness, why three-fourths of the States should have the right to bind all the States. And I shall pause long enough to say here that, in my judgment, there is nothing more finely reasoned in all the writings of men than the discourse of Calhoun on the philosophy of all government in general and the American Government in particular. In this immortal work Calhoun said in part regarding the right of three-fourths of the States to amend the Federal Constitution:

But independently of these considerations, there were strong reasons for adopting that proportion in providing a power to amend. It was at least as necessary to guard against too much facility as too much difficulty in amending it. If, to require the consent of all the States for that purpose would be in effect to prevent amendments which time should disclose to be, or change of circumstances make necessary—so on the other hand to require a bare majority only, or but a small number in proportion to the whole, would expose the Constitution to hasty, inconsiderate, and even sinister amendments on the part of the party dominant for the time. If the one would give it too much fixedness, the other would deprive it of all stability. Of the two the latter would be more dangerous than the former.

Again, he said in reference to the amending power:

It is safe, because the proportion is sufficiently large to prevent a dominant portion of the Union or combination of the States from using the amending power as an instrument to make changes in the Constitution adverse to the interests and rights of the weaker portion of the Union or a minority of the States. It may not, in this respect, be as perfectly safe as it would be in the unmodified state in which it outlined and established the Constitution; but for all practical purposes it is believed to be safe as an amending power. It is difficult to conceive a case where so large a portion as three-fourths of the States would undertake to insert a power by way of amendment which, instead of improving and perfecting the Constitution, would deprive the remaining fourth of any right essentially belonging to them as members of the Union or clearly intended to oppress them. There are many powers which a dominant combination of States would assume by construction and use for the purpose of aggrandizement which they would not dare to propose to insert as amendments. But should an attempt be successfully made to engraft an amendment for such a purpose the case would not be without remedy, as will be shown in the proper place.

So we have it from the lips of Calhoun, the greatest apostle of State rights in American history, that three-fourths of the States may be safely and wisely trusted to adopt proper constitutional changes. And yet the whisky forces have the audacity to contend that it is a violation of State rights for a single State to be deprived by three-fourths of the States of the power to license the liquor business.

The position of Calhoun in reference to the subordination of one or a few States to the will of three-fourths of the States in the matter of amendments to the Constitution is an entirely different proposition from his famous doctrine of nullification. This doctrine was aimed at the usurpation of undelegated powers by the Federal Government, and had no concern with powers delegated by three-fourths of the States to the Federal Government in the manner prescribed by the Constitution. He believed that a power usurped by the Federal Government—a power exercised by it without the authority or sanction of the Constitution—was devoid of any legal existence or effect, and that any State had the right to disregard and repudiate it.

Likewise the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions had no relation whatever to powers delegated to the Federal Government through the regular process of constitutional amendment. They denounced the assumption of undelegated powers by the Federal Government, of powers that had received no sanction from the States acting through three-fourths their number, as prescribed by the Constitution. These resolutions were provoked by the enactment in Congress of a group of laws known as the alien and sedition acts, the most offensive features of which were, first, the investment of the President with the power to remove aliens from the country on his own motion, and, second, the punishment by fine and imprisonment of "unlawfully" combining or conspiring to oppose any measure of the Government of the United States or of publishing any "false, scandalous, and malicious writing" against the Government of the United States, either House of Congress, the President, and so forth. These acts represented a deliberate usurpation by Congress of powers not only not delegated by the Constitution but, in the case of some of them, expressly forbidden by it. The Kentucky resolutions, drafted by Jefferson, introduced by John Breckenridge in the Legislature of Kentucky in November, 1798, and soon adopted, were in part as follows:

Resolved, That the several States comprising the United States of America are not united on the principle of unlimited submission to their General Government, but that by compact under the style and title of a Constitution for the United States and of amendments thereto they constituted a General Government for special purposes, delegated to that Government certain definite powers, reserving each State to itself the residuary mass of right to their own self-government; and that whensoever the General Government assumes undelegated powers its acts are unauthoritative, void, and are of no force.

Further along in the resolutions the expression occurs—

And that, therefore, this Commonwealth is determined, as it doubts not its co-States are, tamely to submit to undelegated and consequently unlimited powers in no man or body of men on earth.

In the following December came the Virginia resolutions. They were drawn by Madison, and read in part:

That the assembly doth explicitly and peremptorily declare that it views the powers of the Federal Government as resulting from the compact to which the States are parties, as limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting that compact, as no further valid than they are authorized by the grants enumerated in that compact, and that in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers not granted by the said compact the States who are parties thereto have the right and are in duty bound to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil and for maintaining within their respective limits the authority, rights, and liberties appertaining to them.

Again, say these Virginia resolutions:

That the general assembly doth particularly protest against the palpable and alarming infractions of the Constitution in the two late cases of the "alien and sedition acts," passed at the last session of Congress, the first of which exercised a power nowhere delegated to the Federal Government, etc., and the other of which acts exercises in like manner a power not delegated by the Constitution, but, on the contrary, expressly and positively forbidden by one of the amendments thereto—

And so forth.

There is not a syllable in the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions denying the rights of the States to exercise the amending function, to add, as Calhoun says, new powers or to subtract old through the action of three-fourths of their number. These resolutions were aimed at infractions of existing powers and the assumption of undelegated ones. They had no possible relation to the question of amending the Constitution. I do not believe it will be seriously contended that the limitation and distribution of powers first made by the Constitution were intended to remain forever fixed. If so, the amending clause would have been without sense or purpose, and the debates thereon in the constitutional convention without meaning. The Constitution itself would have had no means of change to meet the new conditions of the crowding years.

When the question of slavery began to divide the country, the South invoked the principle of State rights on the same theory that the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions had invoked them. The only difference was that the resolutions denounced an infraction of existing powers by the General Government, while the South denounced their infraction by a large portion of the North. In the convention of 1787 the New England States had voted with Georgia and South Carolina to continue the foreign slave trade for 30 years, and the Constitution as finally adopted by both Northern and Southern States provided that the slaves should be counted in determining the basis of representation of each State in Congress and for the return of fugitive slaves. Slavery, bad as it was, had been recognized, therefore, by the Constitution. The nullification of the fugitive slave law by the legislatures of 14 Northern States was an infraction of a right guaranteed to the States under the plain language of the Constitution. The right of the States to amend the Constitution was not involved in the controversy over slavery. The clamor rose for an antislavery Bible, an antislavery God, an antislavery Constitution, and the Constitution itself was denounced as a covenant with death and an agreement with hell. To-day we have, as we have always had, an antiwhisky Bible; we have, as we have always had, an antiwhisky God. Millions of the American people, both North and South, now want Congress to give them a chance to establish an antiwhisky Constitution. They realize that as long as the Constitution fails to prohibit the existence of the liquor traffic anywhere in this Republic it is still a covenant with death and an agreement with hell.

It should be added here that the greatest tribute to the States as the organic power in this Republic they have ever received may be found in the fact that although human slavery had been destroyed by war the victorious section never felt that its abolition had been finally and properly consummated until the consent of three-fourths of the States had been at least nominally secured to an amendment to the Constitution forever prohibiting it.

Reviewing what has herein been developed, analyzing the debates on the amending power and the votes of Southern States in the Constitutional Convention, the language of the amending section, the commentaries by Jefferson and Calhoun, the spirit of the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions, the nature of the protest of the Southern States before the Civil War against what they believed to be a violation of existing and delegated rights—it will be seen that there is nothing in southern tradition or in southern belief opposing the right of the States by a three-fourths vote to alter the Constitution in such way as to promote the material and moral welfare of the American people. The cry of State rights that has been raised to shield the liquor traffic from the anger of a people aroused and outraged is so spurious that honest and patriotic men who may be influenced by it now will be ashamed of it before this session of Congress closes. The claim that a single State may harbor an evil that both disgraces and imperils the Republic is an admission that the constituent elements of the American Nation are without the power to preserve it. A nation that can not preserve itself ought to die, and it will die—die in the grasp of the evils it is too feeble to overthrow.

The final sovereignty in this Republic rests, as I view it, coequally with the peoples of the States. They ordained the dual system embodied in the Federal and State Constitutions, and they have delegated certain functions in trust to Federal and State Governments. They have ordained that the present system may be extended or modified in accordance with the will of three-fourths of these constituent bodies. There can therefore be no more perfect exercise of fundamental rights by the States than through the amending power of the Federal Constitution. The man who votes against the submission of this prohibition amendment is opposing the exercise of one of the most sacred rights the peoples of the States possess, the right to shape the character of the Federal Government. Alexander Stephens, the gifted Georgian, expressed the situation admirably in his monumental work on the War between the States, when he said:

There is no sovereignty either in the General Government or the State governments. These are permitted to exercise certain sovereign powers so long only as it shall suit the sovereign will that they shall do so and no longer. Sovereignty itself, from which emanates all political power, I repeat, remains and ever resides with the people somewhere. And with what people? People who delegated whatever powers the General Government has ever been intrusted with; that is, the people of the several States; not the whole people of the United States as one mass, as can be most conclusively demonstrated.

The people of the various American colonies became separate, sovereign peoples when each of them renounced the authority of Great Britain. They were merely confirming this action when each of them instructed their delegates in the Continental Congress to join in a declaration of independence. In Ware v. Hylton (3 Dallas, 199) Justice Chase said:

In June, 1776, the convention of Virginia was a free, sovereign, and independent State; and on the 4th of July, 1776, following, the United States in Congress assembled declared the thirteen United Colonies free and independent States, and that as such they had full power to levy war, conclude peace, etc. I consider this as a declaration, not that the United Colonies jointly, in a collective capacity, were independent States, etc., but that each of them was a sovereign and independent State; that is, that each of them had a right to govern itself by its own authority and its own laws without any control from any other power on earth.

Chief Justice Marshall said, in Gibbons against Ogden, of the States prior to the Constitution:

It has been said that they were sovereign, were completely independent, and were connected with each other only by a league. This is true.

Under the confederation, the first form of collective government adopted by the peoples of the States, they retained their separate freedom, independence, and sovereignty, and no change could be made in the confederation without the consent of each of the States. When the peoples of these sovereign States adopted the present Constitution they decided that three-fourths of their number should make any future amendments except as to equal representation in the Senate. They decided that one or a few States not exceeding one-fourth should yield their will to the will of the remainder. In doing this they no more modified their ultimate sovereignty than a citizen of a State would modify his freedom by agreeing to abide by the will of the majority. Those who oppose the submission of the prohibition amendment are refusing the creative powers of the Republic, the peoples of the sovereign States acting through their legislatures, an opportunity to discharge their proper and historic functions.

John W. Burgess, author of one of our most important and most philosophical textbooks on political science and comparative constitutional law, has this to say regarding the amending power in a constitution:

A complete constitution may be said to consist of three fundamental parts. The first is the organization of the State for the accomplishment of future changes in the constitution. This is usually called the amending clause, and the power which it describes and regulates is called the amending power. This is the most important part of a constitution. Upon its existence and truthfulness, i. e., its correspondence with real and natural conditions, depends the question as to whether the State shall develop with peaceable continuity or shall suffer alternatives of stagnation, retrogression, and revolution.

The other fundamental part of a complete constitution Mr. Burgess denominates the "constitution of liberty" and the "constitution of government."

I wish now to direct attention to another fact. Not only will he who votes against the submission of this amendment keep the peoples of the States, acting through legislatures or conventions, from exercising their fundamental prerogative of deciding what is national and what local, but he will also deny the right of petition to millions of his fellow citizens. Seventy per cent of the territory of this country is already under prohibitory law and over 50 per cent of the American people live in this prohibition territory. A committee of more than 2,000 men and women from every section of the Republic, representing through their various organizations probably 20,000,000 of people, marched to the steps of this Capitol on a freezing day in last December and presented to Representative HOBSON for the House and myself for the Senate their request that Congress give the American people a chance to expel the liquor traffic from the country. In the face of a biting December gale, despite sunless skies and the penetrating cold, they came, the joy of a righteous movement in their souls, the cry for a clean United States on their lips. It was the most radiant and inspiring sight my eyes have ever seen. Theirs was no selfish purpose; hundreds and thousands of miles they had traveled at their own expense and at great personal sacrifice to demonstrate the power of a moral impulse. And I tell you that I would rather have been chosen by that band of consecrated men and women to present this prohibition amendment than to hold any office in this Republic.

It is safe to say that the 20,000,000 people represented by that wonderful committee are joined by 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 more in the determination that the liquor traffic shall not be tolerated on a single inch of American soil. It is not an exaggeration to say that a majority of the American people would vote today for a saloonless land and a stainless flag. Millions of antiprohibitionists who have opposed us in the States and counties on the ground that liquor could at all times be obtained from adjacent territory would vote for nation-wide prohibition. The Webb law is good, but it is based on the theory of the existence of the liquor traffic in parts of the country. It was only a step in the crusade for the traffic's final elimination. The antiprohibitionist who supported the Webb law in the hope that its passage would stop the movement for nation-wide prohibition was tremendously short-sighted. The movement can not stop, because it is grounded in the aspiration of the American people for purity in government, for righteousness in law. It can not stop until the liquor traffic or this aspiration dies. It is a conflict as irrepressible as the conflict over slavery. As long as the traffic in intoxicating liquors exists in any State it will be a challenge and an affront to the moral sense of the American people.

I repeat, that a vote against submission is a denial of the right of petition to millions of the American people. After all, the power of Congress in relation to this amendment is only a proposing power. The Constitution says that Congress whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary shall propose amendments, and so forth; that is, whenever two-thirds of both Houses deem proposal necessary. The proposing power requires only a two-thirds vote in each House, a vote which may be cast in the other House by representatives of only 17 States, while the enacting power requires three-fourths of the States. If Congress were considered a part of the adopting power the integrity of the States would be destroyed in the other House, because less than half the States might cast the necessary two-thirds vote there, and the smaller States would be at the mercy of the larger, in so far as the other House might be concerned. The final tribunal is composed of the States expressing their will by a vote of three-fourths thereof. The man who resists submission stands between more than 50,000,000 American people and the constituent powers of the Republic, the only authority that can furnish redress for this terrific grievance.

In the Confederate constitution the amending power was vested in two-thirds of the States, except as to equal representation in the Senate, and the Confederate Congress was not allowed to refuse submission. The Confederate Congress was required by the Confederate constitution to call a convention of all the States at the demand of any three States, to consider such amendments as the three States might suggest. If a majority of the States in the convention thus called, voting equally as States, agreed to a proposed amendment, it was then submitted to the State legislatures, two-thirds of which could adopt the amendment and make it a part of the Confederate constitution. The Confederate constitution was amendable against the consent of a third of the States, while the Constitution of the original Union is amendable only against that of a fourth of the States. The Confederate constitution went further in the matter of amendments against the will of individual States than the Federal Constitution. This is but another contradiction of the assertion that the right of a single State to be exempt from changes in the Federal Constitution to which it might not consent is a characteristic southern doctrine. It is also an illustration of the fact that the Confederacy regarded the submitting power of its Congress as a mere ministerial function.

The first resolution for the submission of a prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution was introduced in Congress by Representative (later Senator) Blair, of New Hampshire, on December 27, 1876, nearly 40 years ago. It was introduced by him in each succeeding Congress while he was in public life, and he has thereby earned the admiration of posterity. It was favorably reported by the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate, after he was elevated to that body, in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses. While studying the unanimous and favorable report made by this committee on the prohibition amendment in the Fifty-first Congress I was struck by the fact that its members deemed it the duty of Congress to submit the resolution to the States regardless of their personal views as to the merit of the proposed amendment. After giving the view of those members of the committee who favored the addition of the amendment to the Constitution, the report said:

Your committee, whether unanimous or otherwise, in the holding to this view, are of the opinion that the resolution should be favorably reported, and should be submitted by Congress to the action of the States for another reason; it being a fact that a very large proportion of the American people are anxious that the National Constitution be amended in accordance with the resolutions, we believe that they have a right to be heard in the forum of the State legislatures, where alone the question can be decided whether the National Constitution can be amended.

I knew that the ranking Democrat on this committee was George, of Mississippi; I knew that he was among the very ablest men the South had ever sent to Washington; that his devotion to southern traditions and State rights could not be questioned. To make doubly sure of his position, I addressed a letter to Senator Blair and asked him specifically regarding George's attitude toward the nation-wide prohibition amendment. He favored me with an illuminating reply, which I now give:

COLORADO BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., November 16, 1914.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of recent date, referring to resolution for national prohibition, introduced by me in the Forty-fourth Congress, and in each Congress following while I was in public life, and specially inquiring as to the position of Senator George, of Mississippi, upon the question of the submission by Congress of a joint resolution to the legislatures of the States with a view to the ratification or otherwise of said resolution as a part of the Constitution of the United States, was duly received. Said resolution is found in Senate Report No. 1584, of the Fifty-first Congress, first session, where it was unanimously and favorably reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I was chairman. Senator George, of Mississippi, had long been a leading member of said committee, taking great interest in all measures coming before it, including the one in question. I did not understand that he was committed to the ratification of the amendment as a part of the Constitution, but he was, with the rest of the committee, of the opinion that it should be submitted to the legislatures of the States for action for the reasons set forth in the report, an extract of which is herewith incorporated.

You will observe that the report, which is dated August 13, 1890, sets forth the views of those who favored the ratification of the resolution, closing the brief review of arguments in support of their views with these words at the end of the fourth page: "Such is the line of argument, briefly stated, of those who believe that this joint resolution should be made a part of the Constitution." It then proceeds to state the reasons for the "unanimous" recommendation that the resolution be favorably reported and submitted by Congress to the action of the States through their legislatures:

"Your committee, whether unanimous or otherwise, in the holding to this view, are of the opinion that the resolution should be favorably reported, and should be submitted by Congress to the action of the States for another reason; it being a fact that a very large proportion of the American people are anxious that the National Constitution be amended in accordance with the resolution, we believe that they have a right to be heard in the forum of the State legislatures, where alone the question can be decided whether the National Constitution shall be amended. That Constitution points out definitely the manner in which a change in its provisions may be effected. The Constitution of the country must be amended from time to time to correspond with the evolution of the Nation itself, for it is impossible to fetter the growth of the Nation in any direction. It will grow, peacefully or otherwise. The Constitution must yield here and there, corresponding to the necessities of the times and of the people, and the necessary changes be peacefully made, in accordance with the methods of amendment pointed out in the Constitution itself, or revolution and bloodshed will perform their work. The Constitution and the spirit of the age must be one. Whenever any considerable and respectable portion of the American people (and no considerable number can fail to be respectable) desire changes in the fundamental law, and ask respectful consideration of their propositions by the Nation at large, we hold it to be the duty of the Congress to give them a status in the court provided by the Constitution for its own amendment.

They have a right that their contention be placed in proper form before the local legislatures and the people before they have demonstrated that they are able to secure its ratification by three-fourths of the States. That ratification, if it comes at all, will come as a result of agitation and discussion of the very proposition which they ask to have submitted. The true question for Congress to consider is not whether three-fourths of the States will ratify, after discussion and agitation, but whether the subject concerns the public welfare, and whether those who desire the submission of the resolution be of sufficient number to relieve the proceeding from the charge of triviality and inconsequence. Deciding upon grounds like these, your committee are impressed by the overwhelming importance of the subject to the Nation and to the world, and by the vast number, not to say the majority of the moral and intellectual forces of the country, which demand the submission of this joint resolution to the consideration of the States. We therefore report it favorably and recommend its passage."

There was a majority report in favor of the resolution, Senate Report 15631, first session, Forty-ninth Congress, and a unanimous report in favor of submission to the legislatures of the States for action upon the question of ratification, Senate Report 1727, first session, Fiftieth Congress, but in the latter there is an ambiguity which is entirely removed in the report of the committee in the Fifty-first Congress, which is cited above.

The committee was unanimous in recommending the submission of the joint resolution to the legislatures of the States for action upon the question of ratification as a part of the Constitution.

The Committee on Education and Labor in the Fiftieth Congress consisted of Blair (chairman), Bowen, Palmer, Wilson, George, Call, Pugh, Payne, Sawyer (excused), and Riddleberger, appointed February 16, 1888.

Fifty-first Congress, first session: Blair, Wilson of Iowa, Stanford, Stewart, Washburn, George, Pugh, Payne, and Barbour.

You inquired specially for the position of Senator George, of Mississippi, and I have substantially answered above. He was a member of the committee (Education and Labor) for about 10 years, and we were closely associated as friends and in the work of the committee. He favored the submission of the resolution to the legislatures of the States, as, in fact, did the whole committee in the last report ever made on the subject. It was at no time debated in the Senate. I moved for its consideration the day before the close of a session, but the pressure of business and the fact that extended debate was unavoidable defeated the effort. The members of the committee did not consider that by recommending submission to the legislatures they were pledging themselves to favor ratification by the legislatures of the States. I think both Senators George and Pugh had no superiors as lawyers or statesmen in the Senate at that time.

Truly, yours,

HENRY W. BLAIR.

Mr. President, if Democrats like George, of Mississippi; Pugh, of Alabama; Payne, of Ohio; and Barbour, of Virginia, believed that the people desirous of having the prohibition amendment submitted were of such number and such respectability that they had a right to expect Congress to submit it, and were willing so to vote regardless of their individual views a quarter of a century ago, ought Democrats of the present, whether pro or anti individually, to hesitate when the proportionate strength of the elements desiring submission is so much greater now than then?

In the report in the Fiftieth Congress the Committee on Education and Labor uses this language:

The method provided in the Constitution for its own peaceful amendment would be destroyed by failure to submit the proposition for amendment in cases of great moment involving the approval and prayers of multitudes of the people, for where the remedy sought is admitted to be without the jurisdiction of the fundamental law the petition is really addressed to the only tribunal which can enlarge that jurisdiction; that is to say, to the States themselves. Should, then, Congress in such case refuse to submit the proposal to the States, such refusal would constitute a substantial denial of the right of petition itself.

Although the decision as to the merit of this amendment belongs fundamentally to the States, let us examine it briefly. They tell us that the liquor traffic is a local problem, a home affair. Experts have figured that the present European war will destroy seventy billions of wealth. The drink bill of the United States is now about two and a half billions every year. In one brief generation the liquor traffic will waste as much wealth in this country as the most terrible and extensive war of history will consume. In addition, the human wreckage of the liquor traffic will far exceed the toll of war. The records show that the annual consumption of intoxicating drink in the United States equals 23 gallons for every individual. Add to these things the fact that alcohol is the principal source of crime, disease, immorality, hereditary deformities, both mental and physical, insanity, inefficiency, poverty, and it will be seen that the very life of this Nation is imperiled. Mr. President, the Member of Congress who claims that the overthrow of the liquor traffic by the united action of State and Nation as contemplated in this amendment so violates the underlying principles of the Republic that he will refuse by his vote to permit the people to consider and determine the matter for themselves will undoubtedly have trouble in explaining such a position to his constituents. The liquor problem is essentially a national one, and every unit of government must be directed against it.

But they say that national prohibition will mean the overrunning of the State by a swarm of Federal officials. When these officials swarm into the States to attack the cattle tick or the boll weevil or the foot-and-mouth disease, it is all right; but it is a sacrilege, a destruction of all the State holds dear, if they interfere with the saloon. So far as I am concerned, they can not send too big an army against the liquor traffic to suit me, and I do not care whether it is Federal or State, or both.

The States, acting together, formed this Nation for the specific purpose of cooperating for the common good. If they can not cooperate through the regular channel of an amendment to the Federal Constitution for the purpose of abolishing an evil like the liquor traffic, they had as well dissolve the Union and each return to a separate government of its own.

Let me say here that the traffic is so firmly intrenched in some States that they will never be able to destroy it by their own unsupported action. Therefore a vote against the national amendment is a vote for the traffic's perpetuation. From its strongholds in a few States it will debauch the rest, despite all interstate restrictions, desirable as they are, in the absence of complete prohibition. Aside from this, the Nation—that is, three-fourths of the States acting in their organic capacity as the creative power of the Constitution—should have as much right to guarantee the people of a State against this traffic in human hearts, in human virtue, in human blood, as it has to guarantee them a republican form of State government. The latter right is already provided for in the Constitution.

The amendment in question reads as follows:

Whereas exact scientific research has demonstrated that alcohol is a narcotic poison, destructive and degenerating to the human organism, and that its distribution as a beverage or contained in foods lays a staggering economic burden upon the shoulders of the people, lowers to an appalling degree the average standard of character of our citizenship, thereby undermining the public morals and the foundation of free institutions, produces widespread crime, pauperism, and insanity, inflicts disease and untimely death upon hundreds of thousands of citizens, and blights with degeneracy their children unborn, threatening the future integrity and the very life of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring), That the following amendment of the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and exportation for sale therefrom, are forever prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress or the States within their respective jurisdictions shall have power to enforce this article by all needful legislation."

It will be seen that it deprives both Federal and State Governments of the power to authorize the liquor traffic. It delegates to both Federal and State Governments the power to prohibit the traffic within their respective jurisdictions. How misleading the statement that it turns over to the Federal Government the entire machinery of control and eradication! The Federal Government exercises, through the taxing power, a control over the liquor traffic to-day superior to that of the States, except in the case of absolute prohibition. Neither the sale nor the manufacture of alcoholic liquor may be undertaken in any State in the Union without Federal authority. The Federal Government maintains a rigid supervision over the making of alcoholic liquors from the still to the saloon, and with this supervision no State government and no State official may interfere. When the State of South Carolina entered the dispensary business her officials had to pay a tax to the Federal Government. The amendment now pending preserves to the States the only exclusive right they now have with reference to the liquor traffic—the right of prohibition.

But they say that concurrent jurisdiction by the Federal and States Governments will lead to confusion and friction. The answer is that a sufficient number of States to adopt the amendment means a sufficient prohibition strength in the States and in Congress to avoid all conflict and confusion of jurisdiction.

They say that the prohibition question should be kept out of national politics, that it will interfere with the proper settlement of other issues. If they believe this, let them vote to submit this amendment to the States, and the question will be out of Congress and national campaigns for at least a decade. Prohibitionists will then center their efforts on the various States. The surest way to keep this question in national politics is to defeat this amendment.

The disposition of this prohibition amendment is the most solemn duty that has confronted Congress since the death of slavery. It will determine whether this Nation is capable of invoking its constituent powers to consider an evil which at least half the population believes to mean the Nation's ruin, and to make what constitutional changes they may deem proper for its extermination. It will determine whether the moral forces of the Nation are the dominant ones. It will determine whether this is a Christian Nation. We need not deceive ourselves. The issue is plain. A Christian nation can not tolerate the liquor traffic. We must array ourselves for a higher civilization or a lower one. We must stand for the American home or for the American saloon. We must stand for efficiency or for waste, for purity or for pollution. If this amendment should be rejected, there will be shouts of triumph in every brothel, in every brewery, in every distillery, and every grog shop from the St. Lawrence to the Rio Grande, from sea to sea.

O gentlemen, before you take your stand on the side of these infernos, may you think of the mothers that are praying for a liquorless Republic, of the women this traffic has widowed, the children it has made fatherless, the manhood it has wrecked, the virtue it has damned—of the maniacs it has produced, of the misery of men once strong and proud.

CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it being just a few minutes before the time at which the unfinished business will automatically come before the Senate, and as the bill that was voted to be considered can not be disposed of, I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is impressed with the belief that such action would be impossible. The Senate has already determined to consider another bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Hughes	Overman	Smoot
Bryan	James	Page	Sterling
Catron	Johnson	Perkins	Stone
Chamberlain	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Chilton	Kern	Poindexter	Thomas
Clapp	La Follette	Reed	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Robinson	Townsend
Crawford	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Cummins	Lewis	Shafroth	Walsh
Dillingham	Lippitt	Sheppard	Warren
du Pont	McCumber	Sherman	White
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Works
Gore	Nelson	Shively
Gronna	Norris	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the roll has just been called, I propose the unanimous-consent agreement which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Saturday, December 19, 1914, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, and that at not later than 2 o'clock p. m. on that day the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I very reluctantly object to the proposed agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, we have just witnessed a spectacle which people not familiar with the ways of the Senate must regard at least as peculiar. The Senate deliberately votes to proceed to the consideration of a bill, but it appears that under the rules of the Senate that action must give way in order that a speech may be made by a Senator on a matter not at all related to the bill which the Senate has voted to consider.

I have felt and still feel that a majority of the Senate has a right to be heard upon a measure which is before the Senate. I realize that many of the friends of this bill hesitate to set aside what has been fixed as the regular order, namely, the immigration bill, in order to consider this bill for a sufficient time to dispose of it. They are fearful that such a vote might be construed as opposition to the immigration measure. I think, however, it is an open secret to everybody here that there is a disposition to prevent a vote on the immigration bill but that it is to stand here as a buffer against the consideration of measures which a few Senators do not desire to pass upon. I dislike very much to put before the Senate a matter which will compel conscientious Senators to vote to put aside the immigration bill when they want to see it passed, but I also feel that inasmuch as this program is before the Senate, a program of obstruction and delay, it is entirely proper to insist, so far as I can insist, upon considering the rights of those volunteer officers of the Civil War, who did not remain in the Regular Army, but who did more to preserve the Union than all the Regular Army officers who have worn the uniform since 1861.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to say a word about one statement the Senator made—that there is a disposition to sidetrack or not to consider the measure in which the Senator from Michigan is interested, and that there is a disposition not to allow the immigration bill to come to a vote. I have not been advised of any such disposition. There is opposition to the immigration bill, but I do not think any Senator on this floor has indicated any intention to use any method by which a vote will not be had, for I am rather of opinion that we will have a vote on the question. It has been pending so long and has now reached such a stage that I think the best way to expedite business and to get to a consideration of the bill that the Senator has before us is to allow the immigration bill to be gotten out of the way as speedily as possible.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I was saying, it is an open secret that a program is before the Senate and that it does not include the passage of the immigration bill, if it can be prevented.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not aware of that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It really does not include the passage of any measure outside of the appropriation bills.

I am going to try, Mr. President, to-morrow morning and every morning until I succeed in getting a fair consideration of this bill which is now before the Senate to a vote during the morning hour. I shall do this if I can be assured that the majority of the Senate will support me in such efforts. If I fail in that, I am going to give the Senate an opportunity when the regular order is called up to supplant it with this measure until the latter is disposed of. If Senators are justified in preventing the execution of the clear and formally expressed will of the Senate by indirection and dilatory tactics, they surely can not consistently condemn me if I turn their own guns against them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have given notice two or three times that I would address the Senate on Senate resolution 398 and Senate joint resolution 163. I have given way for various reasons, and satisfactory ones. I am heartily in favor of this immigration bill, and I do not want to do anything that will delay it. So I am not going to take the time at this hour to discuss the resolutions I have offered; but if I see that a lengthy discussion is likely to go on in connection with the immigration bill to-morrow, I shall take the first opportunity to-morrow to address myself to these resolutions.

I find that most Senators have not examined the resolutions and do not know what is in them, and I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD. It is possible that some Senators will take a little time to look over them. I think they will see at a glance just what is proposed to be done by them, and I think practically every Senator will be in favor of doing something at least along the lines suggested.

With this statement I ask that Senate resolution 398 and Senate joint resolution 163 be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to printing the resolutions in the RECORD? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Senate resolution 398, submitted by Mr. JONES June 18, 1914, and referred to the Committee on Rules, is as follows:

Resolution.

Resolved, That, beginning with the Sixty-fourth Congress, Rule XXV of the standing rules of the Senate be amended to read as follows:

"RULE XXV. The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

"COMMITTEES OF THE FIRST CLASS.

"A Committee on Appropriations.
"A Committee on Commerce.
"A Committee on the District of Columbia.
"A Committee on Finance.
"A Committee on Foreign Relations.
"A Committee on Interstate Commerce.
"A Committee on the Judiciary.
"A Committee on Banking and Currency.
"A Committee on Public Lands.

"The foregoing committees shall consist of not to exceed 11 members each and shall be so constituted that each Member of the Senate shall be a member of one of said committees and no more.

"COMMITTEES OF THE SECOND CLASS.

"A Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.
"A Committee on Rules.
"A Committee on the Census.
"A Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.
"A Committee on Claims.
"A Committee on Education and Labor.
"A Committee on Insular Affairs.
"A Committee on Immigration.
"A Committee on Military Affairs.
"A Committee on Naval Affairs.
"A Committee on Pensions.
"A Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.
"A Committee on Printing, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
"A Committee on Engrossed and Enrolled Bills, which shall have power to act jointly with a similar committee or committees of the House of Representatives, and which, or some member of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed the Senate or both Houses to see that the same are correctly engrossed or enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, shall present the same forthwith, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.
"A Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which shall have power to act jointly with a similar committee of the House of Representatives.
"A Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.

"The foregoing committees of the second class shall consist of not to exceed 13 Members, and no Senator shall be placed upon more than two of said committees at the same time.

"SEC. 2. That the aforesaid committees shall continue and have the power to act until their successors are appointed."

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) providing for employees to Senators and Senate committees and fixing their compensation, commencing with the beginning of the Sixty-fourth Congress, introduced by Mr. JONES June 18, 1914, and referred to the Committee on Rules, is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That, commencing with the beginning of the Sixty-fourth Congress, each chairman of a first-class committee shall have a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,750, and who shall also act as clerk of his committee, an assistant secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and who shall also act as assistant clerk to his committee, and, during the sessions of the Senate, a stenographer, to be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum, and a messenger, to be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum; each chairman of a second-class committee shall have a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,500, and who shall act as clerk of his committee, an assistant secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $1,800, and who shall also act as assistant clerk of his committee, and, during the sessions of the Senate, a stenographer, to be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum, and a messenger, to be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum; and each Senator not the chairman of a committee shall have a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,250, an assistant secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $1,500, and, during the sessions of the Senate, a stenographer, who shall be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum, and any additional assistance that may be necessary in connection with committee or official senatorial work while the Senate is in session shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate only after due provision has been made therefor by appropriate resolution.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, lines 6 to 12, in lieu of the House text reading as follows:

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they emigrated from the country of which they were last permanent residents solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution.

Substitute the following:

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious or political persecution, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by discriminatory laws or regulations.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I wish to add an amendment to the amendment the Senator from Colorado offers by inserting the word "racial" before the word "religious" in line 1, page 2. I think this meets some views to which attention was called a few days ago by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, before the word "religious," insert the word "racial" and a comma, so as to read:

All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid racial, religious, or political persecution, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by discriminatory laws or regulations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STONE. I will ask the Senator from New York where he wishes to insert the word "racial."

Mr. O'GORMAN. After the word "religious," in line 1, page 2, of the amendment which was proposed yesterday by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say that, so far as the amendment to the amendment just read from the desk is concerned, I am willing to accept it.

Mr. STONE. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado has been printed. I had prepared an amendment that I purposed to offer, but I have mislaid it somewhere. However, I think I can state it. I ask the attention of the Senator from New York to take the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have it before me. It was that amendment that I proposed to modify a moment ago by inserting the word "racial," before the word "religious," on the second page, line 1.

Mr. STONE. That is all right from my point of view, except I had in the amendment I prepared inserted the word "racial" after the word "religious," for the reason that the word "religious" is in the text of the bill, and the word "political" is added to it by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. This is to be an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. O'GORMAN. If the Senator prefers to have it that way, I have no objection.

Mr. STONE. Then, Mr. President, on line 1, page 2, of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], after the word "religious," I move to insert a comma and to strike out the word "or," and after the word "political" to insert a comma and the words "or racial," so that it would read, "to avoid religious, political, or racial persecution." Upon that I ask the judgment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That is quite acceptable to me, and I think I am authorized to say that it would be acceptable to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who proposed the original amendment.

Mr. STONE. I am sure of that. I was about to suggest an additional amendment to the amendment, which I had prepared and thought I had on my desk.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be passed over for the present until the Senator from Missouri can secure his amendment.

Mr. STONE. I think I can state it. After the word "persons," in line 9, page 1, I would insert these words following a comma:

Who are not otherwise inadmissible under the statutes of the United States.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have only to suggest in reference to that proposal of the Senator from Missouri that it seems to be wholly unnecessary, for this reason: It will be observed that the amendment only provides for certain persons concerning whom the illiteracy test will not be applicable, and the entire effect of the adoption of the amendment is to indicate that certain aliens shall be immune from the illiteracy test, but not from any other provision of the immigration law, because the language, if the Senator will pardon me, reads:

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit.

That is the sole effect of the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does the Senator propose to remove by his amendment all the restrictions of the bill?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Oh, no. I have distinctly stated that in my judgment the adoption of this amendment as modified will only relieve certain classes of aliens from the illiteracy test, but they will be still subject to every other provision of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the proviso, beginning in line 21, on the same page, as modifying the illiteracy test? It reads:

That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

I would take it that the term "convicted of" would include those who were convicted for purely political reasons. Just the other day we had that language modified by striking out the words "or legally charged with."

Mr. O'GORMAN. On what page is that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On page 9.

Mr. O'GORMAN. What line?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Line 21. The proviso begins in line 21:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

Mr. STONE. Then he would have to be convicted?

Mr. O'GORMAN. He would have to be convicted.

Mr. LEWIS. May I be permitted to say to the Senator from South Carolina and remind the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from New York that that very question came up here. The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] urged an objection to what was then a pending treaty between Great Britain and this country respecting the settlement of certain grievances by arbitration. As the Senator from South Carolina will recall, the Senator from New York and the Senator from Oregon made the objection to certain features of that treaty, it declaring, among other things, that one of the things that would have been the subject of arbitration was our permitting a man to come into this country who had been convicted or denying admission to a man who had been convicted of some offense purely political. So we had the question, Shall a man be permitted to come into this country after he has been charged, tried, and convicted? Suppose he was fleeing persecution because of fear of an arrest for an offense purely political, that he had not been arrested but was seeking exemption and immunity from the injustice of a trial, persecution, and conviction, ought he then to be kept out? Would not the words "legally convicted" limit it to them who first have been arrested, tried, and convicted? In the meantime, if he was charged, pursued, and persecuted, still he could not come in because the exemption is limited to one who had been first submitted to trial and afterwards submitted to accusation and then full conviction.

The able Senator from South Carolina will recall that we had that discussion here and the objection of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Oregon so prevailed that subsequent forms of an amendment were submitted at that time to the Government of Great Britain, as I recall.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That is substantially correct. All these provisions are presumed to bear upon the question as to whether the character of an alien is sufficient to warrant his being permitted to come into this country. Attention was called to the fact that in all the courts of the land a man's character is never impaired merely because he has been indicted, or because some accusation is made against him. His character is only affected if he be convicted. Several days ago the Senate concluded to strike out the amendment offered by the committee, which will be found on page 9, line 23, in the words "or legally charged with." That was stricken out of the bill.

Mr. STONE. The word "convicted" remains.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The word "convicted" remains. In other words, it is provided that nothing contained in the bill shall exclude a person otherwise admissible simply because he has been convicted of an offense purely political and not involving moral turpitude.

Mr. STONE. Yes; but I understand the purpose of the bill to be—and that is clearly the import of the language employed in the bill—to admit those who are otherwise qualified for admission.

Mr. LEWIS. Notwithstanding conviction.

Mr. STONE. Persons who have been convicted. The limitation is that the immigrant must have been convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the Senator from Missouri will see at a glance that this is going even farther than his proposed amendment, in that he will admit a man who has been convicted for a purely political offense. The inference is that if he comes here and is otherwise admissible, we will not turn him back on account of political persecution.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator from South Carolina suggest that there is any inconsistency in the pending amendment with the provision of the bill on page 9, lines 22, 23, and 24? As I look upon it, they are quite in harmony, and there is no inconsistency whatever. We are now dealing with an entirely different subject. We say in substance that whenever because of racial, religious, or political persecution an alien knocks at our doors we will admit him even though he may not be able to respond to this educational test, which we are for the first time in the history of our country attempting to engraft upon our legislation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator will observe that the bill provides "that nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude," and that that does not exempt them from the operation of the literacy test.

Mr. STONE. No; that does not exempt them from it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But your amendment does exempt them from the literacy test.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Because that covers a different condition.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator will see at a glance that if you waive the literacy test on the ground that the immigrant is coming for political reasons we then open our doors to the very class the admission of which the Senator from New York himself will not stand on this floor and defend.

Mr. STONE. Let me ask the Senator from South Carolina does he not draw a very clear line of distinction between the cases that should be covered by the pending amendment and the cases that would be covered by the proviso beginning on line 21, page 9, of the bill? The bill in other parts of it would exclude the criminal classes, and there could be no better evidence that a man was a criminal than the record of a court showing his conviction of crime. I can easily conceive, and the Senator can, that an immigrant who asks admission might be confronted with a record showing that he has been convicted of a crime under the laws of the country from which he comes. The proviso already in the bill to which I have adverted is intended to meet that case, so that if the immigrant is confronted with such a record and yet is able to show that the crime for which he was convicted was a purely political offense, involving no moral turpitude, he would come in under that proviso.

The amendment which the Senator from New York is pressing, which was presented by the Senator from Colorado, as remarked by the Senator from New York, covers a somewhat different field and may be said to be broader. This would admit persons who are fleeing from their native land because of political or racial persecution, even though they have not been formally arraigned and convicted of an offense. In other words, you put political and racial persecution upon an exact level with religious persecution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri this question: In certain countries suppose there were individuals who were being hunted who had not been arraigned and tried or convicted. There are certain anarchists who as earnestly believe in their faith as the Senator and I believe in established law. They come to this country, and they say, "We are being persecuted for purely political reasons."

Mr. STONE. Yes; and for that very reason I had in the amendment which I prepared—I proposed to insert the words——

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will the Senator pardon me a moment while I address an observation to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. O'GORMAN. In the case of an anarchist, which is used for the purpose of illustration by the Senator from South Carolina, the adoption of this amendment would only relieve him from the obligation of the educational test. It would not go beyond it, and the anarchist would be excluded by other provisions of the bill which are in no wise impaired or affected by this single exception.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from New York will note that the committee were very careful to have the test of illiteracy removed for only one reason, and that was solely upon religious grounds. The Senator from New York well understands that that of itself is a test of a moral quality that is not involved in racial or political reasons. Believing that that should apply to all classes coming in as a restrictive measure against undesirable immigrants, we would have stultified ourselves had we modified it to include a characteristic or a principle which is not evidenced by the faith that the man has and a high moral standard. Now, we have it solely for religious purposes, because if you incorporate political and racial you have simply eliminated the effect the committee was attempting that the literacy test should have.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina, who is chairman of the Immigration Committee, will recognize that many months have gone by since the committee as a committee considered the immigration question. Meanwhile one of the greatest wars of all the centuries has fallen upon the people of Europe. It does not require a very acute imagination to look forward a few months, perhaps a year or two from now, when nations will be subjugated and will suffer every kind of oppression by the conqueror. Are we to say that the natives of a conquered nation can not come to our shores if they will, though during the period of reconstruction they will be the victims of political and racial oppression? The Senator must recognize that we are dealing now with a condition that did not confront the committee when the committee was considering the various phases of this immigration question many months ago.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from New York allow me to call his attention to an illustration which I think will elucidate the point? I belong to that section of the country which suffered the very condition the Senator says might happen in Europe. Does he think that because a man on his native heath suffers the reverses of war he is a desirable citizen for any country if he ignominiously deserts it and seeks another flag? We of the South picked up our burden in spite of that condition, which I dare say will scarcely be exceeded by any in Europe at this time of our civilization. What would have become of our section, what would have become of southern manhood, had we deserted the South in that hour and left it to those who were made at that time our superiors? As patriots we stood there and fought it out and redeemed our section. We did not leave it. I think that any man who is worthy to be a citizen of America is also worthy of fighting his battles on his own heath in Europe despite what the reverses of the hour may be.

Mr. STONE. May I interrupt the Senator from New York?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will say that it is not my purpose to reply to the last observation of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], but to confine what I have to say to the exact point before the Senate.

The Senator did say a moment ago that this proposed amendment which we are considering, which is intended to exempt persons from the literacy test who have been the victims of political persecution or of racial persecution, might result in the admission of very undesirable people, such as anarchists and persons of immoral character or the like. Mr. President, the same thing might be true if you left the exemption, as it now is in the bill, limited solely to religious persecution. I can very well conceive, as can the Senator from South Carolina or as can any other man, that one might come to our shores, knock for admission, and claim the benefits of this exemption from the literacy test on the ground of religious persecution, when in his heart might burn fiercely the fires of anarchism or one who may not be a moral person.

What I had in mind to do, Mr. President, was to so limit the application and effect of the amendment proposed in the first instance by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] as to make such a thing as I have indicated impossible by inserting in the amendment, following the word "persons," in line 9 of the printed amendment, words of this import:

When otherwise qualified for admission under the laws of the United States.

Anarchists and other undesirable people who are put under the ban by other provisions of the bill or other statutes already enacted or which may hereafter be enacted, could not come in, even though they were persecuted for religion's sake or for political reasons or for racial reasons. I do not want them here; but if a man comes who is otherwise qualified to enter as an immigrant and to be admitted to our citizenship, who has been the victim of harsh and cruel persecution, whether it be for religious or for political or for purely racial reasons, I would exempt him and all such men from the operation of the literacy test.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it must be apparent to Senators who have studied the bill, the context and the succeeding paragraph, that were the amendments proposed by the Senators from Missouri, Colorado, and New York adopted by the Senate it would be tantamount to nullifying the effect of the literacy test. The Senator from Missouri knows well enough that, as he himself indicated, the words "religion or religious persecution" are very flexible, and that a designing person might use them to come in. The exceptions, I suspect, would be few; but, at any rate, a provision couched in such language might be abused. It is certain that the law, if we propose to restrict immigration, will not be in anywise strengthened or the class of citizens coming here in anywise bettered by including political and racial persecution, stretching wide the doors, and multiplying the opportunities for abuse.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina, who has charge of the bill, whether the amendment would be obnoxious to the last criticism which he made if the last clause were eliminated, which reads:

Whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by discriminatory laws or regulations?

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Colorado pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not make that modification.

Mr. THOMAS. I have asked the question. I intended to have suggested the modification, but if the Senator from Missouri does not desire me to do so, I shall not, although I want to say very frankly that, unless I am otherwise informed during the course of this debate, I shall not insist as a part of my amendment upon the ultimate adoption of that clause, though I am perfectly willing to let it stand in obedience to the suggestion of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I wish to state very frankly to the Senator from Colorado, if he will permit me, that I am thoroughly convinced that the incorporation of the word "political," even with the modification which he has suggested and which he has now withdrawn——

Mr. THOMAS. Temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Which the Senator from Colorado has temporarily withdrawn; and the incorporation of the word "racial" will absolutely negative the operation of the literacy test as incorporated in the bill by the committee. Our object was—and it might just as well be understood now as at any other time, as I tried to point out here the other afternoon before the close of the last discussion of this matter—to apply the test or the evidence of the best citizenship in this country to those who come from abroad.

If it be true, as was held by some on this floor, that an education, even in the rudimentary form of the power to read and write, is not essential to citizenship, then this tremendous expense which our Government in every one of its political divisions has incurred has been a farcical waste. We are attempting to apply the test to what we believe on this side constitutes one of the essentials for good citizenship, namely, the elements of an education. There is not a Senator on this floor who does not know that no man ever breaks down in the educational process, except in the elements. A man who has laid the rudiments, the foundation for reading, the power to read, the power to absorb the printed page, has made the essential step in good citizenship. The man who can not do so, it matters not how intelligent he may be natively, is a menace to any community and to any government. It does astound me that the claim is made that education is not an essential of good citizenship, for as I stand on the floor of the Senate the evidence is spread on every desk of the fact that a man engaged in making the laws of his country would be laughed out of this building were such a man, by some miraculous combination of circumstances, elected to this body who could neither read nor write. It is a monstrous proposition in this day when we have all agreed that the power to get behind your own doors in your private room and take the great facts upon which rest the moral, the mental, the social, and the political welfare of your country, and there settle them with the thought of the best of all the ages is essential to the best citizenship, that we should swing wide our doors and say that that flood tide of immigrants from Europe who through all the ages of printing and of progress in educational lines have not availed themselves of such advantages shall come here to lower the percentage of literacy in this country, to menace and to jeopardize our society and our institutions. I do stand with amazement when I am confronted by men in high place who tell me that the educational qualification is not a test.

I never pretended to say, and none of the advocates of the literacy test pretend to say, that it is an infallible test of morality; but there is not a man who will dare deny that it is an evidence on the part of the individual acquiring the ability to stand the test that he wants to learn and to acquire the power to know for himself the difference between those things which make for good citizenship and those which do not.

The Senators who are opposing the literacy test will not say that as a principle, as a rule, it is not a test of a man's qualification for good citizenship. There may be exceptions, but have we as a body of men come here to stultify ourselves and to jeopardize the country by distorting the rule in order to fit a few exceptions? The Senator is too well learned in the law for me to take up the time of the Senate in calling his attention to the operation of that general principle.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. In view of the remarks of the able chairman of the committee, I appeal to his experience and ask him if in the land where he has lived, the State which he so ably represents, he has not known many negroes who could not read or write, but whose reputation for honesty, Christianity, and sobriety—the general characteristics of a good man—were such that he would have trusted them with anything personal to himself, his household affairs, the privacy of his family, or the care of his property; and whether he has not found such excellent individuals, notwithstanding the fact that they could not read or write?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, yes, Mr. President. If I intended, as was suggested to me some time ago by a man in high office, that the immigrant coming from abroad should be a commercial asset, as the labor of this country seems doomed to be, and by virtue of his ignorance I could make such immigrant docile, I would vote for the elimination of the literacy test.

As the Senator suggests, I have known negroes who, by virtue of their inability to read and write, were as docile as my broken horse. I have known negroes who when they came to read and write were not so amenable to the domination of the white man; and for that very reason I prefer to have men who can qualify to take a place in the great struggle to build up this country and who by virtue of their ability to read and write are somewhat familiar with the actual facts of history as they relate to the different nations of the earth.

There are to-day white men who make splendid citizens from the standpoint of not interfering with you and me because of their intellectual processes. That condition, I presume, may be very comfortable where we have them working for us, as, by virtue of their mental limitations, we are masters of the situation; but I am not advocating a multiplication of that sort of citizenship. I am striving to apply the test for all future acquisitions of citizens in this country that I would apply to myself, and it is not fair to stand on this floor, in view of the millions and millions we have spent for education, and say that that is not an essential element that goes to make up good citizenship. We have as President of the United States a man who has devoted his life to an educational institution, who is of such value to the Nation that he has been elevated to the Presidency of the United States from the seclusion of college halls—devoted his great brain and life to what? To teaching American boys the power of an educated brain; and yet there are those who stand on this floor and say that education is not essential to good citizenship, because, forsooth, some individual, inheriting from father and mother a docile spirit and an inclination to live within the law, makes a good what? A good negative citizen.

Mr. LEWIS. Now, Mr. President, if I may I will ask the second part of the question which I had in mind to ask the Senator from South Carolina. In South Carolina, a State with which I am acquainted—my mother's family coming from South Carolina, and my mother herself having been born there, neighboring to Georgia, where I was reared—is it not true that the Senator has observed that among negroes who can read and write he has found the highest-developed criminal instincts, and among many of those who could both read and write he has found the most objectionable form of citizenship in Carolina, as compared to that other quality of Christian character and peaceable, law-abiding disposition on the part of those who could not either read or write?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is absolutely true. I believe that is the rule, and therefore I could not under any circumstances agree to the word "racial" being incorporated in the proposed amendment. We have gone so far in our legislation in this country as to enact what is known as the Chinese-exclusion law. There is what may be called a gentleman's agreement in reference to Japan; and we provide for the exclusion of certain other Asiatics. Surely, the broad-minded philanthropy of the men who believe in the universal brotherhood of mankind should inspire those who weep great tears over their suffering to offer an amendment to the pending legislation providing that the doors be open to China. The citizens of that country are human; they suffer in common with us; they suffer, perhaps, in that vast domain infinitely more than the citizens of other countries, and so, perhaps, do the Japanese. We ought to make it——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not yield just now. As the Senator will see, rather than break my sentence, I am observing the law of courtesy he taught me a few days ago.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am observing it by not interfering any further.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am glad to note that statement, or I would not have noticed that the Senator was observing that law. I mean to say that we might as well be frank with each other in the discussion of this measure; let us talk as sensible men to each other. It is not, in my opinion, entirely universal philanthropy, but philanthropy in spots.

As I said before, the committee has endeavored honestly and earnestly to frame a just and equitable bill, and the chairman, if you will excuse this personal allusion, has devoted his best efforts to discover wherein, in the provisions of this bill, we are doing violence to the traditions of this country and inflicting on foreigners a test that we by virtue of our own standards have no right to inflict. I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that the test which we have placed in this bill, and which lies at the foundation of all human problems—intellectual development—will not be stricken from this bill or modified to such an extent as to jeopardize its efficiency.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is recognized.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has had a good deal to say about the evils of illiteracy, and he instanced China. I want to ask him if he is not prepared to admit that there is probably a less degree of illiteracy among the Chinese people than there is among the white people of his own State?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, Mr. President, perhaps, were I fully advised, I might admit that and still believe in Chinese exclusion.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; we all believe in that. We do not, however, exclude the Chinese because of illiteracy, but because of race.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I will ask the Senator from Missouri this question: Granting that the races that we do admit are somewhat similar ethnically to our own race, does he not believe as a rule that the man who is educated is better qualified for citizenship than one who is not?

Mr. REED. Oh, nobody would deny that for a moment, but the question still remains should he be denied the rights of a human being because of his misfortune?

While I am on this subject I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the census of 1910 shows that the degree of illiteracy among the whites in his own State is 10.3 per cent and among the blacks 38.7 per cent; that the average degree of illiteracy in South Carolina is 25.7 per cent, and that the foreign-born population of his State constitutes four-tenths of 1 per cent, so that the illiteracy there can not be charged to immigration.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have not charged that illiteracy in this country is due to immigration. I certainly am obliged to the Senator for calling attention to the misfortune of my State, brought about largely by the negro population and the misfortunes of the Civil War. I think I might with propriety answer the observation the Senator has just made by saying that in view of the fact that in my State there is such a large percentage of illiteracy, God knows I do not want to increase it by importing any from abroad until we get rid of what we have.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, the trouble with that argument is that the average rate of illiteracy of the people coming to this country is probably less than 10 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I merely want to correct the statement made by the Senator from Missouri as to the average rate of illiteracy of those coming to the United States. I think he is altogether wrong in the statement that he made with relation to that matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, confirming the statement of the Senator from Vermont, my recollection is that if the literacy test had been in application last year, 26 per cent approximately of those who were admitted would have been excluded on account of illiteracy.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is substantially the correct figure, as I understand.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I stated that illiteracy among immigrants was probably less than illiteracy in the State of South Carolina, and the illiteracy in the State of South Carolina averaged 25.7 per cent, according to the census of 1910. Without having examined the figures with reference to foreign immigration, I very much doubt the statement that it exceeds that figure. However, I have sent for the figures, and when I get them I shall be glad to be put them in the RECORD.

I want to say further that the degree of literacy of immigrants coming to this country last year, or in any particular year, is not a fair test; that a period of years should always be taken in order to test any question of that kind. An enormous immigration from any particular country might lower it. To illustrate, if there was a large immigration from Sweden, where I believe the proportion of illiteracy is only two-tenths of 1 per cent, during any particular year it would reduce the average of illiteracy amongst the immigrants coming in that year. On the other hand, if we were to have a very heavy immigration from Servia, we might find the contrary of those figures; but, taking it over a period of years, I do not think it will run as high as 25 per cent. However, I shall try to get the figures. I thank the Senator from Colorado for his courtesy.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I did not intend to take any part at the present time in the discussion of the pending amendment, but the assumption upon the part of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] seems to be, and is, perhaps, in part, justified by the fact that the amendment is mine. If its adoption, either in its present form or with friendly amendments, will result in destroying the so-called literacy clause of the present measure, then of course that assumption is correct; and if it should have that effect I should be very sorry for having introduced it. I want to assure the Senator that I am quite as much in favor of a literacy test for the purpose of restricting immigration and eliminating as many undesirable elements as possible from it as he is, although we may differ as to the manner of accomplishing the object or as to the effect of this or other amendments upon that object.

I am in favor of placing some such restriction upon immigration in this country as is contemplated by this bill, but I do not believe, Mr. President, that the proposed amendment, especially if the last clause of it should be eliminated, will have the effect which the Senator seems to believe will be the case. But if that were to result from the adoption of the amendment, and we can not secure a literacy test except by eliminating the amendment, then I should be compelled to support the amendment, although it might result in eliminating that test.

My reason for it, Mr. President, is that I do not believe the time has come—and I hope the time never will come—when asylum upon our shores is denied to a man or to any set of men who in good faith seek that asylum because of political persecution. To my mind, political persecution is quite as intolerable, in these days at least, as religious persecution—and they have been intertwined in the history of the race almost since the dawn of civilization. It is difficult to separate them, and impossible to do so when the racial element also enters into the problem.

This country was originally populated by a class of people who sought its then inhospitable shores as the only method of escape from persecution; and that persecution had the double aspect of being religious and political, because then the church and the state were united, and the prime political cause for religious persecution was the outgrowth of that fact. They are united now in some countries, and particularly in Russia. While the Jew—because we must single him out in speaking of that country—may, as hitherto asserted, be persecuted and hounded and oppressed because he belongs to an obnoxious race, we know that the inspiration of that persecution is largely found in the attitude toward that race of the Greek or established church; and he can not there be persecuted because he is a Jew without being persecuted because his religion is not the prevailing one, or the state one. That makes it the more difficult for such an one to escape from its consequences into our jurisdiction upon the plea that he is being persecuted for religion's sake or for conscience sake, when his persecutor may challenge it, and declare that the laws which oppress him and the practices which strip him of his possessions are based upon political reasons, to wit, that the race to which he belongs is inimical to the institutions of that country, one of which is the established church.

But even if it were not so, Mr. President, I want to state deliberately, as a fundamental proposition, that the doors of immigration to this country should never be closed to the man or to the woman who is compelled to flee hither because of intolerable conditions imposed upon him or her by reason of political belief or conviction. It will be a sorry day for us, the champions of liberty, the people whose proud boast is that liberty of conscience shall always be recognized and the right to exercise it enforced, when we say to those to whom that liberty is denied, whether of religion or of politics: "You may not come here and thus escape conditions which history tells us are the most terrible which tyranny can impose upon the human race."

Therefore, Mr. President, I want to see a literacy test sufficiently broad to permit political and religious exiles to come to this country, provided they are otherwise admissible under the provisions of our immigration laws. I take it, therefore, that the amendment to the pending amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri is a very pertinent one and one which should be incorporated into the pending amendment.

So much for the amendment itself. While I am on my feet I want to say a word or two with reference to the general subject covered by the pending bill.

The purpose of it is not only commendable, but its accomplishment, in my judgment, is demanded by the political and the industrial conditions of this country, and I am not sure but that restrictions other than those of a literacy character should have been incorporated in this bill, to the end that immigration might be still further limited. Our immigration during the last few years has been from southern and southeastern Europe, from certain sections of Asia, and to some extent from Russia, and the great percentage of it comes to us not because of dissatisfaction with religious or political conditions at home, but because of our better industrial conditions. It is attracted largely by the advertisements of steamship companies and by the other activities of those companies, to the end that dividends may be earned from their operations; and it therefore has assumed almost entirely a commercial aspect, some features of which, in my judgment, are of a most meretricious character.

In other words, we are not any longer, so far as immigration is concerned, so much the asylum for the oppressed as the paradise of those who by their cheap labor can better their condition. Not only so, Mr. President, but many of them come not intending to incorporate themselves into the body politic, not intending to acquire a new home across the sea, where their children and their children's children may subsequently identify themselves as citizens thereof, but intending simply to make sufficient money to enable them to return to their native land and occupy thereafter, relatively, a position of comfort and of independence. As a consequence the genuinely permanent labor in this country is and has been for some time subjected to a drastic competition, which has not only created widespread discontent, but which has very materially lowered our standards of living, and consequently our standards of morality; for you can not have a constant horde of immigrants, inspired by the prospect of abundant labor to be obtained through successful competition with our labor here, without producing just such conditions.

I think a great percentage of the industrial discontent of this country, a vast amount of the idleness and lack of employment, is due more to the enormous numbers of immigrants coming from these new countries, whose nativity and habits of life, through the indurated processes of generations, make them difficult of assimilation, than to any and all other causes combined. The old immigration, so much to be desired, and which has done so much to establish and make permanent the industrial and political institutions of this country, coming from countries whose people are bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, coming from the countries of northern Europe, has almost disappeared, so that its thin current which now reaches our shores and has reached them for a number of years is scarcely perceptible. They have been supplanted by the greater and more sluggish tide of immigration to which I have referred, who have brought in their wake political and industrial consequences which make the question of the further continuance of this policy one of the gravest, if not the gravest, of the hour.

Mr. President, some time ago I saw in one of the magazines an article treating of the general question of immigration which throws a great many side lights upon it as well as upon other conditions in this country. One of them attracted my attention very earnestly, because it demonstrated by statistics that during the last 20 years the percentage of immigrants who became agriculturists in this country was almost negligible, while the Scandinavians and Germans and English and Irish and French and Scotch, who made up the greater portion of our immigration in times past, were very largely devoted to agricultural pursuits. The new class of immigration flocks into our cities and becomes consumers of the necessities of life instead of producers, thus largely adding to the disproportion between them and directly affecting the almost equally important problem of the high cost of living.

If it be true that with our vast domain, needing settlement and cultivation, and for which reason more than any other the immigrant has been in the past welcomed to our shores, then it is equally true that a class of immigrants which avoids that particular industry and does not add to the development of the material wealth of the Nation, but enters into our crowded cities and communities, there to be corrupted by the political life of American municipalities, and to compete successfully with American labor by degrading it, should be discouraged not alone by a literacy test but by other tests.

This class of immigrants has been encouraged by the great corporate employing interests of the country, which, combined with the activity of the shipping companies, has made the pursuit a great and profitable one, and at the same time, as I have stated, has introduced into this country a Pandora's box of evils, the first evidences of which we have suffered from and will continue to do so in increasing proportion.

I do not believe any man should be permitted to come to this country as an immigrant who simply proposes to use our opportunities here in competition with American labor and then return. I do not think he should be permitted to come here at all. The present practice permits such immigrants to come in overwhelming floods when the demand for them is great, to reduce the general standard of wages and of living, and to leave when that demand recedes, only to return when it shall reappear. It necessarily unsettles established business and industrial conditions, necessarily creates profound discontent and dissatisfaction, and necessarily lowers, and permanently lowers, those standards of American life which, after all, are the distinguishing features of our civilization, and which make it so much higher and so much better than that of other countries.

Mr. President, my State has been suffering for some time from very serious industrial strife. It has been the theater of one of the most deplorable labor strikes of modern times—a strike which has attracted the attention of the entire country and has received examination and inspection from its social, its political, its moral, and its industrial sides. It has been the basis of a great deal of resentment. It has excited much passion. It has been the subject of much misrepresentation. It has been, in all of its respects and all of its features, one of the most unhappy and unfortunate episodes of our industrial development. I am not at this time going to pronounce my own judgment either upon its causes or consequences or upon any of its other pressing problems. I shall not do so until the present investigations shall have ended and the public is made acquainted with the results; but I want to say, as I have said heretofore, that one of the root causes of that unfortunate trouble is found in the class and character of modern immigration—a cause which extends back for a number of years, certainly more than a decade, and which, in my judgment, made that strife sure to come, either now or hereafter.

We had a similar trouble—not so extensive and bloody a one, not one which attracted such universal attention—away back in 1903–4, at which time the principal coal operators in the southern part of the State using the military power and arm of the Commonwealth forcibly ejected and deported from their midst all turbulent, disorderly, undesired, or suspected characters, took them beyond the limits of the State, and imported in their places fresh from southeastern Europe as many men as were necessary to carry on their operations. These men thus introduced into our political community were during the short summer which followed for the most part naturalized by the companies through the agency of the courts and used to control the elections of that year. These, for the most part, are the men thus imported into our midst and given places rightfully belonging to our own American labor who recently determined their own condition to be so intolerable as to justify the insurrection of 1913–14, and the echoes of which are still observable in the press comments all over the country.

Care was then taken to see that this immigration was distributed over a large number of counties, so that the employees, speaking diverse languages and inspired with race prejudices, would not combine or confederate, but, each flocking to itself, make industrial combinations and further difficulties improbable, if not impossible.

Last May the President of the United States, responding to the call of the governor of Colorado, took charge of the coal counties, and with the military power of the Nation proclaimed and kept the peace and has preserved it since that time. When he did so he issued a proclamation commanding all persons to disperse, cease breaking the law, and return to their homes; and in order to make that proclamation effective it had to be translated into 22 different languages, and, as translated, distributed among as many nationalities.

I think, therefore, I am fully justified in saying that one of the root causes of this trouble was the immigration made possible under existing law by means of which home labor is first supplanted and then controlled, afterwards to find vent in those volcanic outbursts that disturb the peace and threaten the very structure of the social organism.

For this reason I am in favor of a restricted immigration; for this reason I believe in a literacy test and think the problem is one of such a grave nature. But, impressed as I am with the virtues of this bill, and intending to vote for it in such shape as the Senate shall ultimately determine, I can not lose sight of a distinguishing feature of American institutions always proclaimed, and thus far with perfect truth, that he who seeks asylum from political persecution can find it under the Stars and Stripes. Unless it becomes necessary in order to secure the passage of this bill, I do not care to have my vote recorded for a section or a provision that draws the line at religious persecution and denies asylum in America to the man who suffers politically.

I hope, therefore, that this amendment or some amendment embodying that great and vital principle may be incorporated into this measure before a final vote is taken.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the Senator from Colorado takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. Does he not think the proviso at the bottom of page 9 gives ample opportunity for the third class for which he has been speaking and for which his amendment was intended? The clause above, as I pointed out a moment ago—the exemption under the literacy test—was, in the opinion of the committee, the only one that would be admissible, taking it for granted that the administrative officers would have sufficient discernment and take care and pains to investigate and ascertain that the individual seeking admission under the exception provided for, solely for religious purposes, was one to whom that exception might be granted, while the politically persecuted should not be denied admission here because he has been convicted, even.

Now, the distinction, in a word, is this: That the man who individually flees his native land because he can not worship God or his god according to the dictates of his own conscience, and because of the faith that is in him per se, seeks an asylum here, there is established by that very fact a degree of personal morality that might offset any danger accruing from him under the general terms of the literacy test, while in a political sense that could not be true.

I would just suggest to the Senator that the men who are a menace to political institutions are generally the men who would not be subject to the restrictions of the literacy test. The country does not fear the poor ignorant individual per se, but it does fear the learned one who preys upon the ignorant. Where an educated man is immoral and conscienceless he has a fertile matrix for the propagation of his iniquity amongst the ignorant; and this bill, even in that case, provides that if he be politically persecuted and is otherwise admissible he can come in.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has called my attention——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THORNTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. THOMAS. I had intended yielding the floor, but owing to the express desire of the chairman of the committee to ask me a question I have not done so. I will assure my friend the Senator from New Jersey, however, that I will occupy only a moment in reply.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I recognize the Senator's right. I rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think that the proviso found at the bottom of page 9 is sufficiently broad to cover the proposition which I have been discussing. I have no doubt that the Senator from South Carolina has given it very much more attention than I have. I have the most profound respect for his opinion, and I am convinced that the committee have sought diligently and earnestly and conscientiously to properly cover this identical point. The proviso reads:

> That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of or legally charged with an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The words "or legally charged with" have been stricken out.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand the words "or legally charged with" have been stricken out. I think that the clause comes more nearly conforming to the opinion of the Senator as to its effect with this excised clause than without it; but even then it is not broad enough to comprise the class of cases to which my amendment is directed:

> That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

Mr. President, political persecution is not confined to indictment and conviction nor to legal charges. Political persecution seldom seeks these concrete forms. When it does they can be met. To some extent public opinion may be created by the effect of which, if the prosecution is nothing but a persecution, it may be very largely minimized. It is that system of espionage, that constant interference and ostracism, which more than any direct act wears out the heart of man and drives him in exile from his country, rather than where the persecution is through forms of law followed by conviction. This covers a certain class but not all classes who have a right to come here in the event that their political views are obnoxious to the Government under which they live to the extent that persecution and oppression follow. I would therefore like to make it a little broader.

I quite agree with the Senator that the literacy test can not keep out of this country many educated people who are more dangerous perhaps because of their education than the most ignorant of men can be. We all know that those who preach, and preach loudly, doctrines that are abhorrent to organized society and destructive of all forms of political government are frequently among the most intellectual of men and women. We also recognize that they possess the magnetic power of eloquence, of persuasive oratory, and by the exercise of their genius they do more to propagate their pernicious doctrines than all the ignorant men in the world can do.

But I understand that this law has been drawn so that other clauses directed against that class of individuals will exclude them unless indeed they commit perjury for the purpose of getting into the country, in which event the manifestation of their doctrine within five years will be sufficient ground to exclude them.

I do not believe, and since I have reached years of discretion I have not been able to believe, that education promotes morality. On the contrary, I am inclined to think that our education is largely at the expense of our moral growth, because the country to-day, viewed from a religious standpoint, is much less orthodox and doubtless much less moral than when the percentage of ignorance was much larger.

My position therefore is not based upon the effect which the exclusion of the illiterates will have in general so much as it is upon the fact that it is a restriction, and as such one which I should like to see enforced, always provided that victims of religious and political intolerance may not be included within the general inhibition, thus casting a reflection upon our future that ill accords with the splendid record of our past.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to ask what is the parliamentary situation and whether it would be a fit and proper time to offer an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending, and it must be disposed of before another amendment can be offered.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. All right.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I had hoped that the chairman of the committee would see his way clear to accept the amendment offered by my colleague.

Mr. STONE. That there may be no misapprehension as to what the amendment is, I should say that I have not offered any amendment. The amendment to which the Senator alludes, which is the pending one, was proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and by his consent, on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], the word "racial" was added, but it was not my amendment.

Mr. REED. I understood that the word "racial" had been suggested, but I did not know it had been accepted as a part of the amendment.

Mr. President, there is always a time when it is well enough to state a case, because in discussions we sometimes get far away from the case. Section 3 of this bill expressly provides:

> That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or who at the time of seeking admission to the United States are legally charged with a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States.

Then, without reading, prostitutes, or persons coming into the country for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purposes.

Now, all those classes are excluded, and the exclusion reaches all of the evilly disposed, all of the vicious, all of the wicked, all of the diseased, all of those classes against which the learned Senator from South Carolina has so eloquently and vehemently spoken.

Against the exclusion of that class of people there is not now and has not been a single word of protest upon the floor of the Senate. It is the proper kind of exclusion, and to that character of exclusion I am willing now by a specific name to exclude all those races of men who are incapable of being assimilated into our population—the Chinese, the Japanese, the people from India, Hindustan, and all those elements that can not be melted into and become a real, genuine part of our civilization.

I think this bill is defective in that it does not reach these very races of men who are not of the white race, as we use that term. I would exclude them, not because of hatred for them, not because of prejudice against them, but because in their bone and blood and brain and disposition for a thousand thousand years there has been instilled the spirit of a different civilization. It begins with the family relation; it runs through all their social life; it is expressed in every phase of their political existence. They can no more be accustomed to our civilization than the fish, that is the natural inhabitant of the water, can be accustomed to living upon the land. Turn them loose without any government, give them absolute freedom, and they would set up a civilization substantially similar to that under which they now live. They can not transform themselves and make of themselves a people believing in the vital principle of every republic, which is that each individual shall constitute an independent element of society and an integral part of the State.

I say, therefore, all the heroics that he may indulge in in regard to the protection of this blessed land against the evil races of men who dwell in other lands is eliminated by the very language of this bill; and if it be not, then let us eliminate it by proper language; let us strike at the race problem as a race problem.

When the Senator argues that anyone proposes to admit the wicked, and the corrupt and the vicious and to tear down the temple of civilization, he is simply raging with poised lance and shining shield in front of a creature of his own imagination. It is not an issue here. Nobody has advocated it; nobody is going to advocate it. The question is, Can the fitness of a man for citizenship be determined absolutely, finally, and conclusively by his possession or his lack of possession of an education? All these other questions now are aside. They are covered by the bill. I am willing to go with the committee as far as they like in excluding the vicious, the corrupt, and the dangerous from our shores, and to go further and exclude any race, not because, as I said a moment ago, I have any feeling against the race, but because they are incapable of becoming a part of our civilization or sustaining our Government.

Coming, then, to this amendment let us for a moment see just what the effect will be. It will be observed that it relates only to the literacy test. If a man possesses an education, he must also be free from the objectionable characteristics which are prohibited by the bill, and then we come to an inhibition which relates only to the question of education, and we are to treat that alone. The bill recites—

> That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they emigrated from the country of which they were last permanent residents solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution.

Now, the committee admit that if a man is fleeing from religious persecution he should be permitted to come into the United States whether he can read and write or whether he can not read and write. That is an admission of the principle that there should be exceptions and that there properly may be exceptions to the literacy test as a bar. That provision has been amended so as to cover political persecution. Again, if a man flees to escape political persecution the committee admit that he should not be excluded simply because he can not read or write.

Now, we come to the proposition of this amendment, which is that—

> All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious or political—> religious, political, or racial persecution.

And, now, as amended—

We might as well discuss the question of racial persecution with great frankness. The Senator in charge of the bill pronounced a eulogy upon the Jewish people. He told how intelligent they are. It sounded like an exordium uttered in a Jewish synagogue immediately preceding a primary election. He told us, in effect, that the Jews are a great and wonderful people. I think it was this Senator—some one, at least—who said that the torch of learning through the Middle Ages was held aloft in the hands of the Jews; and that, of course, is true. Then he went on to assert that the Jews had availed themselves of educational possibilities in Russia to a remarkable degree; that while they were restricted and held down by law and placed under every kind of disadvantage, yet the illiteracy of the Jews in Russia was less than the illiteracy of the Russian, to whom the doors of the schoolhouses always were held open. Yet, having thus argued that the Jew is possessed of a thirst for learning, that he has availed himself of the opportunities in his own country to a marvelous extent, and laboring under the disadvantage of discriminatory and oppressive law, has yet far outstripped the Russian people themselves, he will not permit an amendment including the word "racial" to the bill, although he knows it applies almost alone to the Jews. Perhaps it might include that race of men who sent one of their great patriots here to stand in the armies of the United States, who helped us fight for our liberties, and whose monument now adorns Pennsylvania Avenue. For the most part it will apply to the Jews alone.

And now it is proposed to say if a man is fleeing from religious persecution he can come. He may be a Mohammedan fleeing from the persecution of some country on account of his religion. He may be a follower of Confucius. I might call the long list of those who worship what we call heathen gods, and yet he can come in. But this race of people, who are persecuted because of their race, are barred out; and yet the Senator said that he thought they might come in, because they were really being persecuted for their religion. Yet when it is proposed to make that phrase clear and plain and explicit by writing in the word "race," he opposes it. The truth is that this is opposed because of opposition to the Jewish people; and I propose for a moment to address myself to the question of whether the Jewish people ought to be excluded from the United States.

I start with the proposition advanced by the learned Senator in charge of this bill, that the percentage of illiteracy among the Jews in Russia, while high, is yet much lower than it is among the Russian people themselves, although under the laws of Russia the Jew is herded within the pale, denied the opportunity to engage in the learned professions, denied admission to the public schools, except in a certain percentage; and I was advised the other day by one of the most intelligent Jews I know that the law, when he left Russia a few years ago, was that, in order to be admitted to the high school the Jew had to be one of but 5 for every 200 other students; that is to say, out of every 200 students in a high school but 5 could be Jews; and as the particular school the Jew was permitted to attend was located within the pale where the Jewish population was probably 20 to 1 it practically meant the exclusion of all Jews from a high-school education. Similar restrictions are found in regard to the primary schools, either by absolute law or by administrative abuse. Yet under these adverse circumstances the Senator in charge of this bill states that the Jews in Russia have advanced further in education than have the Russians of Russia.

Why, then, deny admission to people possessed of this thirst for learning? A few of them come here illiterate, the older men bringing their families with them, for the Jew is essentially a man of family. It is to be said in praise of that race that the family ties are stronger and more tender than, perhaps, among any other race of people. Oppressed and crushed and persecuted because of their race and their religion, they have struggled on until a little money has been accumulated, and the father comes here. Perhaps he can not read and write because he was unable to secure an opportunity to learn. When he comes he brings his children.

What of the children? Who will have the temerity to stand on this floor and say that the Jewish people do not send their children to school, do not deny themselves the very necessities of life that their offspring may obtain an education? I happen to be acquainted with a Jew who was born within the pale in Russia, who sought to enter the public schools there and was denied the privilege. His parents happened to have accumulated a little money, and they paid a bribe of a thousand rubles to a Russian officer to have this boy admitted to the high school. The money was taken, and then the privilege was denied. He came to this land alone; he secured not only a common-school education but was graduated with honor from one of our universities. He is engaged in conducting a Jewish eleemosynary institution in my city. That institution maintains a school in which is taught the English language, the laws of our country—that is, so far as they affect ordinary civil government—music, and the rudiments of medicine and of the mechanical arts. They receive these immigrants who are unable to speak a word of our tongue; they secure them positions at humble labor; they watch over them and guard them. Through that institution every year there pass hundreds and hundreds of these people. They keep track of them and loan them money. This young Jew made the statement to me that out of 870 loans made last year there had been an actual loss of but 1¼ per cent, which was more than made up by the interest that was paid. He stated further that in every instance where there had been a default in payment of the principal it was traceable directly to death or to some other catastrophe that the individual could not prevent. He further stated to me that over 99 per cent of all the children of school age of these immigrants were attending the public schools. As illustrative of how speedily, how hungrily, and how eagerly these people acquire a knowledge of our institutions, he stated to me that the United States district attorney was brought there to lecture upon American citizenship, and that this man stated to these people: "When you become citizens you have all of the rights I have," repeating the phrase several times. When the lecturer—this United States district attorney—took his seat and the meeting had adjourned my informant stated that an old Jew who had been here but six months and had acquired the rudiments of our language went to him and laughingly said: "You are mistaken. When we are naturalized we do not have all of the rights that you have; the Constitution of the United States otherwise provides."

These people once had a rather broad liberty in Russia. It is only within modern times they have been herded together like cattle within the pale. I put it hard upon the conscience of every man who is to vote upon this bill, Will you deny admission to an individual who has been absolutely denied the opportunity to acquire learning, but who nevertheless is sound in body, sound in mind, sound in morals, and who, in order to benefit himself, seeks a place where he can learn and where the temple of intelligence is open for his children to enter? Will you say to him because he has been denied opportunity in the land of his birth that the door of hope shall be shut forever in his face? Will you say to the man whose back is already scored with the whip of the oppressor, "Because the blood has already been drawn, you shall forever remain under the lash"? Shall we join in the old proscriptive cry which has been the curse of mankind through the ages? Have we advanced to no plane higher than that low level in which fanaticism and hatred and prejudice have controlled the actions of men and of races of men?

Spain drove out the Jews, and Spain's decline began from that hour. England, Holland, and other countries received them, but they did not decline; they were not ruined; their people were not destroyed. Just in proportion as nations have shown a broad liberality upon all these questions have they prospered and become great. Would you condemn these people or any people who are capable of assimilating themselves into our life because they have been denied an education? It takes something besides education to make or the lack of it to unmake a man. I have here a report——

Mr. STONE rose.

Mr. REED. I see my colleague has risen. Does he desire to move an executive session?

Mr. STONE. I do, if my colleague has reached the point where he could defer his observations.

Mr. CLAPP. If the senior Senator from Missouri will withhold his motion for just a moment, I desire to suggest to the junior Senator from Missouri at this point that the real test of the relation of education to citizenship depends upon the opportunity which a man has to acquire it.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. CLAPP. While the failure to get an education where the opportunity exists would go to the question of the fitness of a man, it could not go to his fitness where the opportunity had been denied him.

Mr. REED. I want to say just a word in conclusion of the remarks that I am making. I have here some facts with reference to the education of our own people, which I propose to lay before the Senate in the conclusion of my remarks. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to have it clearly understood that the amendment I have proposed to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is to insert after the word "persons," in line 9, the words "when otherwise qualified for admission under the laws of the United States." Possibly the Senator from Colorado might be willing to accept that as part of his amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am willing to accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As amended, I will inquire how the amendment will then read?

Mr. STONE. It will read in this way:

That the following classes of persons, when otherwise qualified for admission under the laws of the United States, shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as a matter of course that will have to be decided by a vote of the Senate. That, in my judgment, would not change the effect of the amendment as to those whom it is sought to exempt from the illiteracy test; and as chairman of the committee I could not accept it. I have given as amply as I knew how my reasons for opposing any modification along lines political or racial.

At the proper time I shall have a word to say as to the comments made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] upon the remarks submitted by me the other evening concerning the Jews; but I can not accept the additional modifying phrase which the Senator from Missouri seeks to place upon the amendment. I appreciate fully the object sought to be attained—the opening of our doors as far as may be to the Jews alone. We might not be averse to that as a general proposition were we assured that it could not be used for other purposes; but after mature deliberation by the committee, or by some of its members at least, and informing ourselves as to the extent to which this might go, I am quite sure that the effect would be to nullify the literacy test.

I took occasion the other day to show that, applying the literacy test, fewer Jews would be affected than the people of any other nation.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before that motion is put, will the Senator allow me to make a statement?

Mr. STONE. I withhold the motion for the moment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The time is drawing near for the holiday recess, and there are certain pressing personal obligations which I should be very grateful to the Senate if it would allow me untrammeled to meet. Of course, I have no right to come here and set up any personal obligations other than those assumed in the discharge of my duties as a reason why a bill should take any certain course, but I did hope that we might fix a day certain for a vote, say at such time as would give ample opportunity for debate to all those who desire to be heard on provisions of the bill or amendments which they think should be presented, as well as to those who think that the bill should remain as it is. I did hope that we might have a day fixed for a vote, so that I could arrange certain personal affairs without any embarrassment to me as chairman of the committee.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have said all that I care to say with respect to the exceptions made in the bill and proposed in the amendment to the so-called literacy test. If I find opportunity to do so, I should like to occupy a short time—comparatively, at least—of the time of the Senate to express some views I have as against the literacy test in its larger application, whether these exceptions are made or not; but I can not do so now, and I may not have an opportunity to do so at all, as it is my purpose to leave the city on Sunday, and I will not return until after the holiday recess.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will ask the Senator the direct question—of course, he can answer it or not, as he sees fit—would he object to fixing a date certain if, in his judgment, that would give ample opportunity?

Mr. STONE. I shall not object.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. The Senator can not make a request for unanimous consent without the presence of a quorum, and I am afraid if the Senator calls for a quorum now we will not be able to secure an executive session.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is late, and an executive session is desired, I will simply state, so that I will not take anyone at a disadvantage, that to-morow morning, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall make an effort to have a day certain fixed upon which this bill may reach its final termination.

Mr. STONE. Why not say at the next session of the Senate the request will be made?

Mr. SWANSON. Let the Senator give notice that at the next session of the Senate he will make that request.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have given all the notice necessary. Do I understand from the Senator from Missouri that it is the desire of those having executive matters in hand that there shall be an executive session at this time?

Mr. STONE. A number of nominations have been sent in which I think we ought to have referred to the proper committees, and there are some nominations pending which I think we might have acted upon. It will only take a short time, and I have no objection to the Senate going back into legislative session if the Senator wishes, although the hour is late.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as a matter of course, I have no desire to annoy Senators, and yet I am charged on the floor of the Senate at least with responsibility for this bill, and I am going to use every method in my power to keep it continuously before the Senate until it is finally disposed of. In doing so I think I will have the cooperation and the justification of every right-thinking Senator. As we are about to go into executive session, I presume the bill will be automatically temporarily laid aside pending the next session of the Senate.

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to Senators, on both sides of the Chamber of course, that on next Monday afternoon I shall make the necessary motion for an evening session of the Senate next Monday night for the purpose of considering the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 19, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 18, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou eternal and ever-living God, our heavenly Father, we bless Thy holy name that Thou hast not left us in this world alone to grope in darkness, but that the light of Thy presence is round about us shining in and through us to illumine our minds, cleanse our hearts, upholding, sustaining, guiding us to right thinking and clean living. That for every tear there are a thousand smiles; for every sorrow a thousand joys; for every crime a thousand noble, generous deeds; for every low and selfish desire a thousand glorious aspirations. That the star of love is in the ascendency leading us onward and upward. Continue, we beseech Thee, Thy presence and help us to do Thy will, and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE HON. ROBERT G. BREMNER.

Mr. DRUKKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, January 24, 1914, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. ROBERT G. BREMNER, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, the subject being the "Colombian viewpoint of the Panama treaty situation."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, the subject being the "Colombian viewpoint of the Panama treaty situation." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. AUGUSTUS OCTAVIUS BACON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill H. R. 19909, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and when the House adjourned the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] had asked for a separate vote on the Good amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on amendment No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks for a separate vote on amendment No. 1. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 1.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a point of order to the Chair with reference to the so-called Good amendment.

The SPEAKER. This first amendment is another amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Then I will reserve it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out on page 2 the paragraph beginning with line 4 and ending with line 10 and substitute the following:

"That in lieu of all mileage each Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses for himself and the dependent members of his family in coming from and returning to his home at each session of Congress."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 36.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DONOVAN and Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I renew it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order that there was no quorum present, and I did not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut made the point of order——

Mr. SAUNDERS. I made it myself, and I did not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Certainly the gentleman from Connecticut made it, because the Chair recognized him.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But, Mr. Speaker, I sought recognition, and I make it now. I thought I had done so before.

The SPEAKER. All right. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SISSON. In the vote about to be taken a vote of "aye" votes for the expenses of the Member and his family and a vote of "no" is for 5 cents?

The SPEAKER. The vote which is about to be taken is to ascertain whether a quorum is here, which necessitates a double roll call.

Mr. SISSON. The point I desire to get at is in reference to the yea-and-nay vote. I do not know the parliamentary status.

Mr. MANN. It is an automatic roll call.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I made the point of order to avoid a roll call which did not give a vote. It is an automatic call of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is an automatic call of the House, and the Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry if he will state it.

Mr. SISSON. I asked the Speaker this question: If a vote of "aye" votes for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] to pay the Member mileage and that of the dependent members of his family, and if a vote of "no" is for the 5 cents a mile? Is that the parliamentary status?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let us see if it can not be stated a little clearer, if the gentleman from Mississippi will permit.

Mr. SISSON. I want to find out myself, if the gentleman will state it, what the parliamentary status is.

Mr. GARNER. A vote of "aye" is in favor of the so-called Hardy amendment, which provides for the actual expenses of a Member and his dependent family. A vote of "nay" is in favor of 5 cents a mile, as contained in the bill. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. If that is a correct statement of what is contained in the bill——

Mr. GARNER. It is.

The SPEAKER (continuing). A vote "yea" means that you adopt that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is what is in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The expense account. The other one is the 5-cent provision.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I am trying to find out what this means. I do not understand this leaves it at 5 cents a mile if you defeat this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill reported 5 cents a mile.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. That has not been adopted, has it?

The SPEAKER. It stands in the bill.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the 5 cents a mile was defeated. The provision for the expenses of the Member and members of his family was carried. If this is defeated, if we go along the proceedings of the other day, we take up then the vote on no mileage. That was the situation the other day.

The SPEAKER. All the Chair knows about what happened in the Committee of the Whole is the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and he reported back that the committee had directed him to report this bill with sundry amendments, with the recommendation to vote for the amendments and the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to state the proposition, as it was originally reported by the committee it was 5 cents a mile. While there was a point of order made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], it was overruled; and an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] to substitute in place of that the actual traveling expenses of Members and dependent members of their families was adopted, and that is now before the House.

Mr. MANN. That was a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. FOSTER. A motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. MANN. If that does not carry, it remains as it was in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. So that if the amendment is voted down, it remains at 5 cents; but if adopted, it means the actual expenses to the Member and the dependent members of his family.

The SPEAKER. Those who are in favor of actual expenses will vote "yea," and those in favor of 5 cents a mile will vote "nay." And if you are not in favor of either one of them—well, vote as you please. [Laughter.] The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 160, answered "present" 1, not voting 96, as follows:

YEAS—171.

So the amendment offered by Mr. HARDY was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. DALE with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. PATTEN of New York with Mr. SELLS.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. WALLIN.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. SHREVE.

Mr. SMALL with Mr. VARE.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. PARKER of New York.

Mr. WILSON of Florida with Mr. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania with Mr. PLATT.

Mr. KONOP with Mr. MORIN.

Mr. JONES with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. HART with Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GREGG with Mr. GUERNSEY.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. EAGLE with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. EAGAN with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. CALDER.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas with Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. AINEY.

Mr. ASHBROOK with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that under the rules the gentleman from North Carolina has the right to vote, but the Clerk will call his name, and the Chair will study the matter out.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. POU, and he answered "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

Page 119, line 12, insert: "That section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, is hereby repealed."

Mr. GARNER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARNER. To make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. To submit a point of order. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment, never having been adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and never having been reported by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union which had this bill under consideration, is not before the House of Representatives for consideration; and in support of that statement, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer the Speaker to the RECORD, on page 328.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. LENROOT. To make the point of order that the Chair can not entertain this point of order under the rules of the House; and on that I wish to be heard. It may affect the question of the merits as to the right of the Chair to entertain the point of order at all. On that I wish to be heard.

The SPEAKER. You can not have two points of order pending at once; but the Chair believes that the point raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin takes precedence over the other.

Mr. GARNER. I will retire, then, until my friend gets through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, the point of order that I make is that the Speaker can not entertain a point of order on the grounds named by the gentleman from Texas, and upon that I desire to cite to the Chair section 6932 of Hinds' Precedents.

The SPEAKER. What volume?

Mr. LENROOT. Volume 5.

The SPEAKER. Section 6932?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; and the following sections, 6933 and 6934.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. LENROOT. I read from—

6932. The Speaker declines to entertain points of order as to conditions alleged to have existed in Committee of the Whole when the report has made no mention thereof. On January 26, 1889, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union rose, and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment in the form of a substitute.

Mr. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, rising to a point of order, said: "I desire to say that the provisions of the bill making separate and distinct appropriations have not been considered in the Committee of the Whole, and no vote has been taken upon any provision appropriating a specific sum of money"—

Raising identically the same question that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] now raises. Mr. Hepburn proceeds:

"Before the Committee of the Whole had proceeded beyond the consideration of the eighth line, before any subsequent paragraph had been read, this amendment was offered, and against objection a vote upon it was forced prior to the taking of any vote upon any one of the subsequent provisions of the bill. I make the point of order that the vote can not be taken upon the adoption of this substitute until the provisions of the bill have been separately read and considered in the Committee of the Whole."

The Speaker held:

"Of course the House has nothing before it, and the Chair has nothing before him except the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The facts stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], if they be facts, might constitute a good reason for the recommitment of the bill by the House to the Committee of the Whole. But the Chair must deal with the report as presented. The bill is out of the Committee of the Whole and in the House by the action of the committee, which the Chair can not revise or overrule in any manner. The point of order is not sustained."

Again:

6933. On March 14, 1902, after the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had risen and the Chairman reported favorably several bills, and before action on the bills had been taken by the House, Mr. Francis W. Cushman, of Washington, rising to a parliamentary inquiry, said:

"I will ask if it is in order to challenge the correctness of the statement made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House to the Speaker? I raise the point that no vote was taken in the Committee of the Whole ordering the committee to rise and report those bills to the House"—

Again a question squarely analogous to the question now presented. I read:

The Speaker said:

"The gentleman from Washington will readily see that the Chair can not hold a court of inquiry as to the action of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That is a matter that the House only knows from the report of its Chairman. The Clerk will report the first bill."

Again:

6934. On December 10, 1877, the House having been in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having considered the President's message, rose and reported that they had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not bother the gentleman from Wisconsin for any more authorities. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has any, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, just a word as to the question of fact. When the committee rose last night and reported the bill back to the House, the Chairman reported the bill with sundry amendments. The amendments were not specified by the Chair. They never are. How do we obtain the record as to what amendments were agreed to in Committee of the Whole? We rely upon the amendments in the possession of the reading clerk of the House. Now, when the bill was reported back last night the Speaker asked if a separate vote was demanded on any amendment. One of the Members asked for a separate vote on the Good amendment, and this morning the Speaker directed the Clerk to report the Good amendment. It was reported in fact by the reading clerk, who possesses the records of the House and the Committee of the Whole, as an amendment agreed to by the Committee of the Whole. The Speaker can not take the word of a Member of the House that such an amendment was not agreed to, because the record shows that the amendment was agreed to, was reported to the House, and in fact it has been actually reported to the House this morning. There is no going behind the returns.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is in error. The RECORD not only does not show that the amendment was agreed to, but it shows that it was not. The Clerk, who read that portion of the bill at the time it was under consideration, says it was not agreed to. If you can get a better record than the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the Clerk himself, I do not know how you can get it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman now seeks to appeal to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The records of the House show that the amendment was agreed to. What would be the situation if the gentleman's contention should be upheld, that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole did not perform his duty, that the Committee of the Whole did not perform its duty? In order to sustain the contention of the gentleman, the Speaker would have to hold that the Committee of the Whole did not know what it was doing, and that the Chairman of that committee did not know what he was doing, and that both violated the rules of the House. The presumption is that they obeyed the rules of the House, and the Clerk has, in fact, reported the amendment as agreed to, and without a decision upholding that there would be chaos in the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Even the Supreme Court could not go behind that.

The SPEAKER. The situation is this: Of course in one sense the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is a fiction, but the Speaker, theoretically, and the House, theoretically, are not supposed to know anything about what happens in the Committee of the Whole, except by the report of the Chairman of that committee and the notes of the Clerk. Now, as a matter of fact, the Speaker sometimes gets hold of some information about what happens in Committee of the Whole, aliunde or de hors the record. I stay in the Hall of the House during the sessions of the Committee of the Whole as much as I can, but I can not stay here very much, because so many Members and other people want to see me. All that the Speaker is supposed to know, and as a matter of fact in this case all that he does know, is that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported this bill back with sundry amendments, including this Good amendment, according to the notes of the Clerk, with the recommendation of the committee that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. If the Speaker should undertake to supervise what is done by the Committee of the Whole, he would never get through with it, and what is a good deal more important, it would work absolute confusion. It so happens that two or three Speakers have ruled practically on this question. The first ruling was cited by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. The question raised on that occasion was not very dissimilar to this one.

Mr. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, rising to a point of order, said:

I desire to say that the provisions of the bill making separate and distinct appropriations have not been considered in the Committee of the Whole, and no vote has been taken upon any provision appropriating a specific sum of money. Before the Committee of the Whole had proceeded beyond the consideration of the eighth line, before any subsequent paragraph had been read, this amendment was offered, and against objection a vote upon it was forced prior to the taking of any vote upon any one of the subsequent provisions of the bill. I make the point of order that the vote can not be taken upon the adoption of this substitute until the provisions of the bill have been separately read and considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker Carlisle said:

Of course the House now has nothing before it, and the Chair has nothing before him except the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The facts stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], if they be facts, might constitute a good reason for the recommitment of the bill by the House to the Committee of the Whole.

That is the remedy he seemed to suggest.

But the Chair must deal with the report as presented. The bill is out of the Committee of the Whole and in the House by the action of the committee, which the Chair can not revise or overrule in any manner. The point of order is not sustained.

Mr. GARNER. May I interrupt the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The Chair and other gentlemen have repeatedly stated that the Clerk reported the amendment as having been adopted. I challenge that statement. There is nowhere in the RECORD or in the Clerk's record a statement that the amendment has been adopted. On the contrary, the Clerk said that it was not adopted, and therefore all you have is the request of the gentleman from Tennessee for a separate vote on the Good amendment.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD shows that the Good substitute was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. The substitute as an amendment was not adopted.

The SPEAKER. I think much the better practice is to put the vote twice, and I have always followed that where the substitute covered the whole question. In order to be absolutely safe I have always put the question, and, then, whatever the proposition was a substitute for. I think that is the better practice.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the Chair to hold that in all cases if I should challenge an amendment in the Committee of the Whole that had been a substitute and had not been agreed to and that was overruled—do I understand that is a sufficient substitute for the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair must deal with the report as made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair goes by the report, and he has the statements of the Chairman of the committee and the Clerk.

Mr. GARNER. And neither one of them say that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is in error in his assertion that the minutes of the Clerk do not show that the amendment was adopted. On the contrary, the minutes of the Clerk do show that the amendment was adopted, and this amendment has been reported to the House. The gentleman from Texas can not raise the point of order that the amendment was not adopted in Committee of the Whole. Further, if the gentleman from Texas had a remedy, it was when the report was made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to the House upon the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole. His time was then to raise the question, and not now, after it gets back into the House.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, would it not be proper to have the report of the Clerk read? That report has been challenged, and might we not have the part of the report read that deals with this matter?

Mr. MANN. It has been read. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas how he knows that the amendment is here?

Mr. GARNER. Because the gentleman from Tennessee asked for a separate vote on it, and the Clerk read it.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk has reported it and it is here, and it could not be here if it had not been reported by the Chairman of the committee. The gentleman is like the man in jail, you can not put him in, but he is there. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. In answer to the gentleman from Virginia, the Chair will state that the Clerk's notes show that the Good amendment or substitute, or whatever you call it, was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as to the parliamentary situation of this substitute I want to say if the amendment, which appears to be only a substitute, was adopted, there was nothing to be gained by a vote on the amendment, because the substitute took the place of it. Would it not be useless to vote on it again?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the better practice is to vote on it twice.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. What good could be gained by it?

The SPEAKER. You do not gain anything, except you are dead sure that you have got it nailed up. A better reason for voting twice is that Members may be opposed to the main proposition and may vote for a substitute or amendment which they do not favor, hoping in that way to kill the proposition. With or without amendment or substitutes, they ought to have the opportunity so to do, and the only way they can get that opportunity is to vote twice.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the Chair maintain that it is absolutely necessary to vote on a substitute twice?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not maintaining anything of the sort. The Chair must deal with the report as presented, and that is the report of the Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. In section 4900, volume 4, of Hinds' Precedents, this point was raised:

On March 1, 1907, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union arose and reported the merchant marine bill (S. 529), with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and a pending amendment thereto.

Mr. James E. Watson, of Indiana, rising to a parliamentary inquiry, asked if a separate vote might be demanded on certain amendments which the Committee of the Whole had adopted to perfect the substitute.

The Speaker said: "The Chair reads from the Manual: 'An amendment in the nature of a substitute is reported from the Committee of the Whole in its perfected form, amendments to the substitute not being noted in the report. Not being noted, the Chair has no knowledge of them.'"

Thereupon Mr. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY, of Michigan, who had offered in Committee of the Whole the amendment which was reported as pending, asked if he might withdraw it.

The Speaker said: "The Committee of the Whole House has reported to the House and the gentleman has no more control over it than any other Member."

Thereupon Mr. Watson made the point of order that, in fact, Mr. FORDNEY had never actually offered the amendment reported as pending, but that it had merely been read in Committee of the Whole for information.

The Speaker said: "The Chair must depend upon the report made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, and this amendment is reported as a pending amendment."

All the other decisions run the same way, and if there had never been any decisions the Chair would decide that way. The point of order made by the gentleman from Texas is overruled, and it is not necessary to pass upon the one raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The question is on agreeing to the Good amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were 115 ayes and 91 noes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Good amendment is, but a number of Members have come in who do not, and I ask that it be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the Good amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 119, line 12, insert: "Section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, is hereby repealed."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 179, nays 137, not voting 112, as follows:

On the vote:

Mr. GRIEST (for Good amendment) with Mr. CROSSER (against).

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with the instructions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, I am opposed to this provision of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there any gentleman on the committee desiring to move to recommit?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GOOD. I am not, but I am on the committee.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair knows, but it goes first to somebody who is opposed to it. Is the gentleman from Missouri opposed to this bill?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not opposed to the bill as a whole. I am only opposed to the provision which I seek to amend there.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is only in order to move to recommit by a Member who states that he is opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. No; they give that preference, and that is what the Chair was trying to find out, and that not being stated by either gentleman, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to make his motion to recommit with instructions. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to that committee to report the same forthwith back to the House with the following amendment: Strike out the figures "$12,500," in line 9, page 103, and substitute therefor the figures "$15,000," and strike out the figures "$16,000," line 10, page 103, and substitute therefor the figures "$18,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves the previous question.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my motion to recommit as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from South Carolina got in ahead with his motion for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the paragraph be reported as it would read as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the paragraph as it will read when this amendment is agreed to, if it is agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, line 9, strike out the figures "$12,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$15,000"; and in line 10, on the same page, strike out the figures "$16,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$18,000," so that the paragraph as amended will read "Wyoming, surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $15,000; contingent expenses, $500; in all, $18,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. Division, Mr. Speaker, I want to see how many are going to vote for it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 0, noes 51.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE LATE SENATOR AUGUSTUS O. BACON, OF GEORGIA.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following privileged resolution, and ask its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 682.

Resolved, That Sunday, January 24, 1915, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. AUGUSTUS OCTAVIUS BACON, late a Member of the United States Senate from the State of Georgia.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HENRY. To offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, and I will ask that the Clerk read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk began the reading of the resolution.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if we could not dispense with the reading of the resolution, which is about 37 pages long, and all these things are printed in the bill as reported to the House. It only makes in order certain things in the bill, so it seems to me we might dispense with the reading of it and go to the discussion of the subject of the rule.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not think it is proper——

Mr. HENRY. Does the gentleman wish it read?

Mr. MANN. I do not care how rapidly the Clerk reads it, but I think it ought to show in the RECORD as having been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 676 (H. Rept. 1229).

Resolved, That after the adoption of this rule it shall be in order in the consideration of H. R. 19906, a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, to consider all the new legislation in each and all of the sections of said bill, notwithstanding the rules of the House.

Fourth. Page 25, lines 8 to 19, inclusive, as follows:

"For pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, $54,700,000: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations: Provided further, That for experimental purposes, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Postmaster General is authorized to advertise for proposals and to enter into contracts with the lowest responsible bidders, for a period of not exceeding four years, for performing service on rural routes in one county in each State, and to pay for the same out of the amount hereby appropriated"— and any and all other new legislation in section 1.

Fifth. Sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26, beginning with line 20, page 30, of said bill, and ending with line 3, page 54, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the act approved August 24, 1912, being 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended as follows: At the end of section 5 of said act, after the word 'service,' insert the following: 'Provided, That compensatory time for Sunday service during the month of December in any year may be allowed during the month of January next succeeding.'

"SEC. 3. That hereafter the Postmaster General may establish, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, one or more branch offices, nonaccounting offices, or stations of any post office for the transaction of such postal business as may be required for the convenience of the public.

"SEC. 4. That hereafter the Postmaster General may enter into contracts for the conduct of such stations for a term not exceeding four years.

"SEC. 5. That on and after July 1, 1915, when the total compensation of any postmaster at a post office of the fourth class for four consecutive quarters shall amount to $1,000, exclusive of commissions on money orders issued, and the receipts of such post office for the same period shall aggregate as much as $1,900, the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall so report to the Postmaster General, who shall, in pursuance of such report, assign such post office to its proper class, to become effective at the beginning of the next succeeding quarterly period, and fix the salary of the postmaster accordingly.

"SEC. 6. That so much of section 1 of the 'Act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes,' approved August 24, 1912, which provides that the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge its present policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains, is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 7. That the Postmaster General, in cases of emergency, between October 1 and April 1 of any year, may hereafter return to the mails empty mail bags theretofore withdrawn therefrom as required by law, and for such times may pay for their railroad transportation out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes at not exceeding the rate per pound per mile as shown by the last adjustment for mail service on the route over which they may be carried, and pay for necessary cartage out of the appropriation for freight or expressage.

"SEC. 8. That when, during a weighing period, on account of floods or other causes, interruptions in service occur on railroad routes and weights of mail are decreased below the normal, or where there is an omission to take weights, the Postmaster General, for the purpose of readjusting compensation on such railroad routes as are affected thereby, is hereafter authorized, in his discretion, to add to the weights of mails ascertained on such routes during that part of the weighing period when conditions are shown to have been normal the estimated weights for that part of the weighing period when conditions are shown to have been not normal or where there has been an omission to take weights, based upon the average of weights taken during that part of the weighing period during which conditions are shown to have been normal, the actual weights and the estimated weights to form the basis for the average weight per day upon which to readjust the compensation according to law on such railroad routes for the transportation of the mails, notwithstanding the provision of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, requiring that the average weight shall be ascertained by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than 90, as the Postmaster General may direct: Provided further, That readjustments from July 1, 1913, may be made under this provision on routes in the first section affected by the floods in the Ohio Valley and tributary territories, commencing about March 25, 1913.

"SEC. 9. That so much of section 4 of 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes,' approved August 24, 1912, as provides that no adjustment shall be made unless the diverted mails equal at least 10 per cent of the average daily weight on any of the routes affected is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 10. That hereafter the Postmaster General may transfer, under such regulations as he may prescribe, clerks from post offices of the first and second classes to the Railway Mail Service at salaries not exceeding the salary which the clerks are receiving in the post offices at the time of such transfer, with the consent of the clerk.

"SEC. 11. That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid to railroad companies from the 30th day of June, 1915, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, for the transportation and handling of the mails and furnishing facilities and services in connection therewith upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter provided.

"The Postmaster General may state railroad mail routes and authorize mail service thereon of the following four classes, namely: Full railway post-office car service, apartment railway post-office car service, storage-car service, and closed-pouch service.

"Full railway post-office car mail service shall be service by cars 40 feet or more in length, constructed, fitted up, and maintained for the distribution of mails on trains. The authorization of full railway post-office cars shall be for standard-size cars 60 feet in length, inside measurement, except as hereinafter provided.

"Apartment railway post-office car mail service shall be service by apartments less than 40 feet in length in cars constructed, fitted up, and maintained for the distribution of mails on trains. Two standard sizes of apartment railway post-office cars may be authorized and paid for, namely, apartments 15 feet and 30 feet in length, inside measurement, except as hereinafter provided.

"Storage-car mail service shall be service by cars used for the storage and carriage of mails in transit other than by full and apartment railway post-office cars. The authorizations for storage cars shall be for cars 60 feet in length, inside measurement, except as hereinafter provided: Provided, That less than 60 feet of storage space may be authorized in baggage cars.

"Service by full and apartment railway post-office cars and storage cars shall include the carriage therein of all mail matter, equipment, and supplies for the mail service and the employees of the Postal Service or Post Office Department as shall be directed by the Postmaster General to be so carried.

"Closed-pouch mail service shall be the transportation and handling by railroad employees of mails on trains on which full or apartment railway post-office cars are not authorized, except as hereinbefore provided.

"The rates of payment for the services authorized in accordance with this act shall be as follows, namely:

"For full railway post-office car mail service at not exceeding 21 cents for each mile of service by a 60-foot car.

"In addition thereto he may allow not exceeding $2 as an initial rate and the same as a terminal rate for each one-way trip of a 60-foot car.

"For apartment railway post-office car mail service at not exceeding 10½ cents for each mile of service by a 30-foot apartment car and 5¼ cents for each mile of service by a 15-foot apartment car.

"In addition thereto he may allow not exceeding $1 as an initial rate and the same as a terminal rate for each one-way trip of a 30-foot apartment car and 50 cents as an initial rate and the same as a terminal rate for each one-way trip of a 15-foot apartment car.

"For storage-car mail service at not exceeding 20 cents for each mile of service by a 60-foot car.

"In addition thereto he may allow not exceeding $2 as an initial rate and the same as a terminal rate for each one-way trip of a 60-foot car.

"Where authorizations are made for cars of the standard lengths of 60, 30, and 15 feet, as provided by this act, and the railroad company is unable to furnish such cars of the length authorized, but furnishes cars of lesser length than those authorized, but which are determined by the department to be sufficient for the service, the Postmaster General may accept the same and pay only for the actual space furnished and used, the compensation to be not exceeding pro rata of that provided by this act for the standard length so authorized: Provided, That the Postmaster General may accept cars and apartments of greater length than those of the standard requested, but no compensation shall be allowed for such excess lengths.

"For closed-pouch service, on routes upon which closed-pouch service only is performed, at not exceeding the rates of compensation provided by existing law for average daily weights of mail carried over the whole route; on routes upon which apartment railway post-office car and closed-pouch services are performed, at not exceeding $20 per mile per annum for each 2,000 pounds average daily weights of mails carried, and at pro rata of such rate of compensation for each 100 pounds of average daily weight greater or less than 2,000 pounds; and on routes upon which full railway post-office car and closed-pouch services or full railway post-office car, apartment-car, and closed-pouch services are performed, at not exceeding $19 per mile per annum for each 2,000 pounds average daily weight of mails carried, and at pro rata of such rate of compensation for each 100 pounds of average daily weight greater or less than 2,000 pounds, the average daily weights to be ascertained in every case by the actual weighing of the mails.

"The Postmaster General may require railroad companies carrying the mails to deliver them into and take them from the terminal and intermediate post offices and transfer them between railroad stations on their routes without additional compensation, under such regulations as he may deem proper, in cases where he does not provide for such service otherwise: Provided, That the Postmaster General in his discretion may relieve any of the roads of such service.

"Railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by a land grant made by Congress, on the conditions that the mails should be transported over their roads at such price as Congress should by law direct, shall receive only 80 per cent of the compensation otherwise authorized by this act.

"The initial and terminal rates provided for herein shall cover expenses of loading and unloading mails, switching, lighting, heating, cleaning mail cars, and all other expenses incidental to station service and required by the Postmaster General in connection with the mails that are not included in the car-mile rate. The allowance for full railway post-office cars, apartment railway post-office cars, and storage cars may be varied in accordance with the approximate difference in their respective cost of construction and maintenance.

"For the purpose of ascertaining the average weight of closed-pouch mails per day upon which to adjust compensation, the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to have such mails carried on the several routes weighed by the employees of the Post Office Department for such a number of successive days, not less than 35, at such times after July 1, 1915, as he may direct, and not less frequently than once in every year thereafter, the result to be stated and certified in such form and manner as he may direct. In computing the average weight of mails per day carried on a railroad route, the whole number of days included in the weighing period shall be used as a divisor. The expense of taking the weights of mails and the compensation to tabulators and clerks employed in connection with the weighings, for assistance in completing computations, and of rentals, if necessary, in Washington, D. C., shall be paid out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes.

"In computing the car miles of the full railway post-office cars and apartment railway post-office cars, the maximum space authorized in either direction of a round-trip car run shall be regarded as the space to be computed in both directions, unless otherwise mutually agreed upon.

"In computing the car miles of storage cars, the maximum space authorized in either direction of a round-trip car run shall be regarded as the space to be computed in both directions, unless the car be used by the company in the return movement, or otherwise mutually agreed upon.

"New service and additional service may be authorized at not exceeding the rates herein provided, and service may be reduced or discontinued with pro rata reductions in pay, as the needs of the Postal Service may require: Provided, That no additional pay shall be allowed for additional closed-pouch service on established routes until the next regular readjustment of pay therefor on such routes, and no additional pay shall be allowed for additional car service unless specifically authorized by the Postmaster General.

"All cars or parts of cars used for the Railway Mail Service shall be of such construction, style, length, and character, and furnished in such manner as shall be required by the Postmaster General, and shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, heated, lighted, and cleaned by and at the expense of the railroad companies. No pay shall be allowed for service by any railway post-office car which is not sound in material and construction and which is not equipped with sanitary drinking water containers and toilet facilities, nor unless such car is regularly and thoroughly cleaned. No pay shall be allowed for service by any wooden full railway post-office car unless constructed substantially in accordance with the most approved plans and specifications of the Post Office Department for such type of cars, nor for service by any wooden full railway post-office car run in any train between adjoining steel cars, or between the engine and a steel car adjoining. After the 1st of July, 1917, the Postmaster General shall not approve, or allow to be used, or pay for service by, any full railway post-office car not constructed of steel or steel underframe or equally indestructible material, and not less than 25 per cent of the full railway post-office cars of a railway company not conforming to these provisions on August 24, 1912, shall be replaced with cars constructed of steel annually after June, 1913; and all full railway post-office cars accepted for this service and contracted for by the railroad companies hereafter shall be constructed of steel. Until July 1, 1917, in cases of emergency and in cases where the necessities of the service require it, the Postmaster General may provide for service by full railway post-office cars of other than steel or steel underframe construction, and fix therefor such rate of compensation within the maximum herein provided as shall give consideration to the inferior character of construction, and the railroad companies shall furnish service by such cars at such rates so fixed.

"Service over property owned or controlled by another company or a terminal company shall be considered service of the railroad company using such property and not that of the other or terminal company: Provided, That service over a land-grant road shall be paid for as herein provided.

"Railroad companies carrying the mails shall furnish all necessary facilities for caring for and handling them while in their custody. They shall furnish all cars or parts of cars used in the transportation and distribution of the mails, except as is herein otherwise provided, and place them in stations before the departure of trains at such times and when required to do so They shall provide station space and rooms for handling, distribution, and transfer of mails in transit, and for offices and rooms for the employees of the Postal Service engaged in such transportation, when required by the Postmaster General.

"Every railroad company carrying the mails shall carry on any train it operates and without extra charge therefor the persons in charge of the mails, and when on duty and traveling to and from duty, and all duly accredited agents and officers of the Post Office Department and the Postal Service, while traveling on official business, upon the exhibition of their credentials.

"If any railroad company carrying the mails shall fail or refuse to provide cars or apartments in cars for distribution purposes when required by the Postmaster General, or shall fail or refuse to construct, fit up, maintain, heat, light, and clean such cars and provide such appliances for use in case of accident as may be required by the Postmaster General, it shall be fined such reasonable sum as may, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, be deemed proper.

"The Postmaster General shall in all cases decide upon what trains and in what manner the mails shall be conveyed. Every railroad company carrying the mails shall carry on any train it operates and with due speed all mailable matter, equipment, and supplies directed to be carried thereon. If any such railroad company shall fail or refuse to transport the mails, equipment, and supplies when required by the Postmaster General on any train or trains it operates, such company shall be fined such reasonable amount as may, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, be deemed proper.

"The Postmaster General may make deductions from the pay of railroad companies carrying the mails under the provisions of this act for reduction in service or in frequency of service where, in his judgment, the importance of the facilities withdrawn or reduced requires it, and impose fines upon them for delinquencies. He may deduct the price of the value of the service in cases where it is not performed, and not exceeding three times its value if the failure be occasioned by the fault of the railroad company.

"The provisions of this act shall apply to service operated by railroad companies partly by railroad and partly by steamboat.

"The provisions of this act respecting the rates of compensation shall not apply to mails conveyed under special arrangement in freight trains, for which rates not exceeding the usual and just freight rates may be paid, in accordance with the classifications and tariffs approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission "Railroad companies carrying the mails shall submit, under oath, when and in such form as may be required by the Postmaster General, evidence as to the performance of service.

"The Postmaster General is authorized to employ such clerical and other assistance as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and to rent quarters in Washington, D. C., if necessary, for the clerical force engaged thereon, and to pay for the same out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes.

"The Postmaster General shall, from time to time, request information from the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the revenue received by railroad companies from express companies for services rendered in the transportation of express matter, and may, in his discretion, arrange for the transportation of mail matter other than of the first class a rates not exceeding those so ascertained and reported to him, and it shall be the duty of the railroad companies to carry such mail matter at such rates fixed by the Postmaster General.

"The Postmaster General is authorized in his discretion, to petition the Interstate Commerce Commission for the determination of a postal-carload or less-than-carload rate for transportation of mail matter of the fourth class and periodicals, and may provide for and authorize such transportation, when practicable, at such rates, and it shall be the duty of the railroad companies to provide and perform such service at such rates and on the conditions prescribed by the Postmaster General.

"The Postmaster General may, in his discretion, distinguish between the several classes of mail matter and provide for less frequent dispatches of mail matter of the third and fourth classes and periodicals, when lower rates for transportation or other economies may be secured thereby without material detriment to the service.

"The Postmaster General is authorized to return to the mails, when practicable for the utilization of car space paid for and not needed for the mails, postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture equipment, and other supplies for the Postal Service.

"The Postmaster General, in cases of emergency between October 1 to April 1 of any year, may hereafter return to the mails empty mail bags and other equipment theretofore withdrawn therefrom as required by law, and where such return requires additional authorization of car space under the provisions of this act to pay for the transportation thereof as provided for herein out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes.

"The Postmaster General may have the weights of mail taken on railroad mail routes and computations of the average loads of the several classes of cars and other computations for statistical and administrative purposes made at such times as he may elect, and pay the expense thereof out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes.

"It shall be unlawful for any railroad company to refuse to perform mail service at the rates of compensation provided by law when and for the period required by the Postmaster General so to do, and for every such offense it shall be fined not exceeding $5,000.

"That the unexpended balances of the appropriations for inland transportation by railroad routes and for railway post-office car service, by the act of March 9, 1914, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, are hereby made available for the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 12. That on account of the increased weight of mails resulting from Postmaster General's order No. 7720, of December 18, 1913, respecting rates upon and limit of weight of parcel-post packages in the local, first and second zones, and effective from August 15, 1913, the Postmaster General is authorized to add to the compensation paid for transportation on railroad routes on and after August 15, 1913, for the remainder of the contract terms, not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent thereof per annum.

"SEC. 13. That on account of the increased weight of mails resulting from Postmaster General's order No. 7720 of December 18, 1913, respecting rates upon and limit of weight of parcel-post packages effective from January 1, 1914, the Postmaster General is authorized to add to the compensation paid for transportation on railroad routes on and after January 1, 1914, for the remainder of the contract terms, not exceeding 1 per cent thereof per annum.

"SEC. 14. That the appropriation for the manufacture of postage stamps be so amended that advance payment can be made to the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the printing of postage stamps.

"SEC. 15. That under such regulations as the Postmaster General may establish for the collection of the lawful revenue, and for facilitating the handling of such matter in the mails, it shall be lawful to accept for transmision in the mails quantities of not less than 500 identical pieces of third-class matter and of second-class matter mailed at the special rates of 1 cent and 2 cents a copy and of 250 identical pieces of fourth-class matter without postage stamps affixed: Provided, That postage shall be fully prepaid thereon at the rate required by law for a single piece of such matter.

"SEC. 16. That such part of section 6 of the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a system of postal savings depositories as reads 'but no one shall be permitted to deposit more than $100 in any one calendar month' is hereby amended to read as follows: 'but the balance to the credit of any person upon which interest is payable shall not exceed $1,000, exclusive of accumulated interest'; and said act is further amended so as to repeal the proviso in section 7 thereof and insert in lieu of such proviso the following: 'Provided, That the board of trustees may, in their discretion, and under such regulations as such board may promulgate, accept additional deposits not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000 for each depositor, but upon which no interest shall be paid.'

"SEC 17. That if any person hereafter perform any service for any contractor or subcontractor in carrying the mail he shall, upon filing in the department his contract for such service and satisfactory evidence of its performance, thereafter have a lien on any money due such contractor or subcontractor for such service to the amount of same; and if such contractor or subcontractor shall fail to pay the party or parties who have performed service as aforesaid the amount due for such service within two months after the expiration of the month in which such service shall have been performed the Postmaster General may cause the amount due to be paid said party or parties and charged to the contractor: Provided, That such payment shall not in any case exceed the rate of pay per annum of the contractor or subcontractor.

"SEC. 18. That whenever an accepted bidder shall fail to enter into contract, or a contractor on any mail route shall fail or refuse to perform the service on said route according to his contract, or when a new route shall be established or new service required, or when, from any other cause, there shall not be a contractor legally bound or required to perform such service, the Postmaster General may make a temporary contract for carrying the mail on such route, without advertisement, for such period as may be necessary, not in any case exceeding one year, until the service shall have commenced under a contract made according to law: Provided, That the cost of temporary service rendered necessary by reason of the failure of any accepted bidder to enter into contract or a contractor to perform service shall be charged to such bidder or contractor.

"All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 19. That section 3949 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"'All contracts for carrying the mails should be in the name of the United States, and shall be awarded to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guaranties for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement: Provided, however, That such contracts require due celerity, certainty, and security in the performance of the service; but the Postmaster General shall not be bound to consider the bid of any person who has willfully or negligently failed to perform a former contract.'

"SEC. 20. That the act of March 4, 1909 (ch. 321, sec. 198, 35th Stats., p. 1126), be amended to read as follows:

"'Whoever shall willfully or maliciously injure, tear down, or destroy any letter box or other receptacle intended or used for the receipt or delivery of mail on any mail route, or shall break open the same, or shall willfully or maliciously injure, deface, or destroy any mail deposited therein, or shall willfully take or steal such mail from or out of such letter box or other receptacle, or shall willfully aid or assist in any of the aforementioned offenses, shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than three years.'

"SEC. 21. That section 3938 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"'All letters of domestic origin which can not be delivered by postmasters shall be sent to the Post Office Department, and such as contain inclosures of value, other than correspondence, shall be recorded. If the sender or addressee can not be identified, such letters shall be held for a period of one year awaiting reclamation. If within one year they have not been claimed, they shall be disposed of as the Postmaster General may direct.

"'All other undeliverable letters shall be disposed of without record and not held for reclamation.'

"SEC. 22. That whenever in the judgment of the Postmaster General the bids received for any star route are exorbitant or unreasonable, or whenever he has reason to believe that a combination of bidders has been entered into to fix the rate for star-route service, the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized, out of the appropriation for inland transportation by star routes, to employ and use such means or methods to provide the desired service as he may deem expedient, without reference to existing laws or laws respecting the employment of personal service or the procurement of conveyances, materials, or supplies.

"SEC. 23. That on and after July 1, 1915, the compensation of each rural letter carrier for serving a standard route of 24 miles and over, six days in the week, shall be $1,200 per annum, payable monthly; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,152; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,080; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $960; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $840; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $720; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $672; on routes 10 miles and less than 12 miles, $624; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $576; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $528; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $480. A rural letter carrier serving one triweekly route shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half the length of the route served by him, and a carrier serving two triweekly routes shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the combined length of the two routes: Provided, That in the discretion of the Postmaster General the pay of carriers who furnish and maintain their own motor vehicles and who serve routes not less than 50 miles in length may be fixed at not exceeding $1,800 per annum.

"SEC. 24. That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay an additional compensation to rural carriers, out of the appropriation for village delivery service, a sum not to exceed $150 per annum in any individual case for delivering mail at second and third class post offices not now by law entitled to free delivery service.

"SEC. 25. That the act approved January 21, 1914 (Public, 49), authorizing the Postmaster General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty, be so amended as to include Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks.

"SEC. 26. That the act approved May 23, 1910 (ch. 255, 36 R. S., p. 416, now carried in Postal Laws and Regulations as sec. 931), be amended so as to read as follows: 'Whenever the sender shall so request, a receipt shall be taken on the delivery of any registered mail matter showing to whom and when and place where the same was delivered, which receipt shall be returned to the sender, and be received in the courts as prima facie evidence of such delivery.'"

Immediately upon the adoption of this rule the Post Office appropriation bill, herein referred to, shall be taken up for consideration in the House. The general debate shall not run exceeding six hours' time, one half of which time shall be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the other half by the ranking member of the minority. At the end of said six hours of debate the bill shall be considered by paragraphs as provided in the general rules of the House.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman agree upon some time for debate?

Mr. HENRY. This gives 20 minutes to a side.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I withhold it for a moment.

Mr. MANN. Make it 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. HENRY. I have no objection if the gentleman thinks he will need that much time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There has been a demand for that time.

Mr. HENRY. That is if we agree that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the end of an hour. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I agree to 30 minutes on a side, and I ask unanimous consent that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks that debate be confined on this rule to 30 minutes on a side, and at the end of the hour the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas for 30 minutes.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for making in order certain matters of legislation that are contained in the Post Office appropriation bill which has been reported to the House. In other words, everything that is contained in the bill shall not be subject to any point of order, but shall be considered by the House; and the legislation is set out in length in order that the Members may understand the terms of the bill as reported. And at the end of the resolution there is a provision that the House proceed to consider the bill, and that there shall be not exceeding six hours of general debate. And at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered, and the House shall come to a vote.

Such, in general terms, are the various provisions of the special rule. I believe it is not necessary to say any more in regard to it by way of explanation, therefore I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You stated that at the expiration of six hours the bill would come to a vote.

Mr. HENRY. I meant that it should be considered under the five-minute rule, of course. There is perfect freedom of debate and amendment provided under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, there are several objections to the adoption of this rule. I shall only have time to consider a very limited number of them. First of all, it provides for important legislation as a rider on an appropriation bill. There are 37 pages of very important legislation that it is proposed to make in order on this appropriation bill. That in itself is a sufficient objection to the rule, if there were no others.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have very little time, but I will yield for a short question.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply wanted to ask if it is not a fact that substantially all the legislation was passed last summer in what is known as the Moon bill, now pending in the Senate?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true, and is another objection to this rule, because all legislation has already passed the House on its merits, without being attached as a rider to an appropriation bill, and is pending before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, where it properly belongs for consideration. If this legislation is important, and much of it is, it should pass upon its merits.

Another objection to this rule is that it has been given out by the administration, from the President down, and it has been stated by the leaders of both the House and Senate majorities, that it is the intention to close the business of Congress on the 4th of March by finishing up all the appropriation bills. If that is done, it will be necessary to proceed with the appropriation bills without attaching important riders upon them. That brings up the question of whether or not the administration is serious in its contenton that the business of this Congress should be concluded by the 4th of March. I understand it is urged by the Postmaster General that this legislation be made in order as a rider on this appropriation bill. And I understand that it is agreed by the majority of this House that this important legislation be attached as a rider upon the Post Office appropriation bill. That will place before the conferees of the House and the Senate 37 pages of the most important legislation to be considered by this Congress on the last day of the session at a time when it is impossible to give the consideration to conference reports that they ought to have, and require Members to vote to agree to a conference report, right or wrong, in order to avoid a special session of the Congress. That ought not to be done.

The most serious objection that I have, and that many Members of this House ought to have, to this resolution is that it makes in order a law that changes the delivery of mail by rural carriers to the delivery of rural mail by the contract system. If this rule is agreed to, star routes are to be given a trial in place of the rural route carriers, and the proposed amendment is agreed to as a rider to this bill. It is the beginning of the end of the delivery of rural mail by rural carriers. It can not be concealed by any pretext or any pretense that that is not the intention of the Postmaster General; it is the intention of the majority of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of this House; it is the proposition of the majority of this House, if this amendment is made in order and agreed to by the House, that the delivery of rural mail henceforth shall be under the contract system, under the star-route system, instead of by rural delivery carriers, as has been practiced for the last 12 or 14 years in this country.

There are many items of very important legislation that are made in order by this resolution that, as has already been stated, have passed this House and are now under consideration in the Senate. The Moon bill of the last session does not include the delivery of mail under the contract system in place of by rural carriers. Every important item of legislation made in order in this rule can be passed by the Senate and agreed to by this House within the next 10 days or before the adjournment, without imperiling the rural delivery of mail in the United States by making in order this blanket assault upon appropria tion bills by attaching a rider of 37 pages of important legislation.

Mr. ADAIR. May I ask the gentleman just one question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. If the gentleman has time I wish he would state to the House just what the provision is in the bill relating to the change in the Rural Delivery Service.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It provides for one county in each State as an experiment for star-route delivery of mail. That is just the way rural delivery was started. It is proposed to stop rural free delivery just the way it was started. It is the first drink, the first fall from virtue.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used six minutes.

Mr. DECKER. Does it mean that all the mail delivered in one county shall be delivered by star route?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. I thought it was one route.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; the whole county, as I understand.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HENRY. Will the gentleman from Kansas use some more of his time now?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would rather the gentleman from Texas would use some of his time, if he will.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. I do not share the apprehensions of my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. The discussion of the question before the House would indicate that he is not very familiar with portions of this measure or with the purposes and intentions of the committee in presenting this new legislation.

It is well known to the House that there has never been any legislation of any consequence or importance affecting the Post Office Department or the Postal Service that has not passed through this House on an appropriation bill. If you were to have a separate bill for all of these administrative items in this bill intended to promote the efficiency of the service and of the department and pass them over to the Senate, it would be impossible to get that body to consider all of that varied legislation. But it has never been difficult to get the Senate to consider propositions that occur and arise upon an appropriation bill.

Why should they not be considered there as well as elsewhere? If this House has agreed to legislation and wants legislation passed, the way to get action upon it is to present it to the Senate of the United States so that it necessarily and inevitably challenges the attention of that distinguished body for consideration.

This House has passed already—and I may say by practically a unanimous vote, because no division was had on the vote—nearly every word of the new law that is contained in these sections. There are a few administrative propositions that are entirely new, but they are of such a character as to provoke no discussion and no opposition on the committee, so far as I know. There is but little opposition, in fact, to any of this legislation of the committee. As I remarked before, it was nearly all passed by the House heretofore.

Now the Senate has ample time to consider it. Really, the Senate has considered over there very much, if not nearly all, of the legislation that we are asking here. That they are prepared and ready to place that legislation on this bill, in conformity with the action of the House in passing these propositions, I have not any doubt.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield.

Mr. LLOYD. Is the provision in this bill with reference to assistant postmasters such as was in the original Moon bill?

Mr. MOON. No. The provision that the gentleman speaks of in reference to assistant postmasters that passed this House on a vote—and it was the only matter of contest in the other bill—is not in this bill at all.

Mr. Speaker, it is of the utmost importance that this House take such action as will retain, of course, the efficiency of the Postal Service at the minimum cost. Our Treasury is not, for reasons known to most of you, in the very best of condition. We ought to effect every economy that is possible. If the railway mail proposition in this bill is passed and becomes a law; if the administrative proposition, by which officials are charged and the postmasters of the country are required to perform their duties and the assistants are given positions under the civil service which they can fill and whose duties they can perform, so that every man in those offices shall be discharging the duties proposed by law; if the system of promotions here agreed upon, and the proposition known as the "blue-tag" proposition, that will commit to the mails of this country in all of the four grand divisions, as it is now in two of them, certain second-class matter to be delivered in the full time that is required by law, there will be another saving of some $4,000,000 of money. The importance of those things ought to be apparent to all of us.

I am going back to that question in another minute, because it just occurs to me at this second that I will answer the statement the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] on the question of the rural carriers. The Post Office Department is of opinion that if the law is changed so that contracts might be made for the carriage of the rural mails instead of by carriers, a better service could be obtained at a reduction of $18,000,000 per annum; and they have proposed, in an estimate in this bill, such a reduction. The committee has not agreed to the reduction. On the contrary, sir, the majority of the committee has reported to this House a measure of which the gentleman from Kansas ought to complain if he understood it—but he would not complain, however, if he did—a measure that will increase the expenses of this service two and one-half million dollars per annum, taking away from the Postmaster General the discretionary power in fixing the cost of the maintenance of these routes and actually giving an increase of $100 to these carriers.

Now, that is a matter that has to be considered by you. I regret, I say, that a majority of the committee saw fit to bring in this amendment, but it has done so; and while, as the chairman of this committee, I propose to stand by its action, yet I can not afford to lose my own personal representative capacity and avoid the duties that fall upon me as an individual Representative here. I admit that is a mistake. I know that nearly all of you want the carriers' salaries increased, and generally I have no objection to it, but it is a mistake to take the mileage basis alone for the determination of the pay of carriers.

Let me give you one illustration: Take, for instance, a case in Tennessee. There is a carrier who carries the mail for 24 miles in an automobile and back. He carries about 3 pounds one way and 3 or 4 pounds the other way. He performs that duty in three or four hours. There are a hundred places in the West—particularly some in Colorado—where the carrier, traveling over bad roads, takes from 12 to 14 hours a day to perform his duties, and carries from 2 000 to 3,000 pounds each way, and he gets only $1,200. Now, it is apparent to every just mind, or it ought to be, that that is an inequality that ought to be corrected. It can not be done except under an order similar to that issued by the Postmaster General, in which he takes as factors determining the compensation of the carrier not only the length of the route but the number of the packages carried and their weight. Now, if my friend from Kansas wants anything more done for rural carriers than that proposed in this measure, then I am afraid he is more interested in their welfare than he is in the interests of the country.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I do.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does not the provision for the pay of rural carriers contained in this rule repeal the action of the Postmaster General wherein he fixes the pay in proportion to the mileage traveled?

Mr. MOON. I am not urging this question, because I am in a delicate position. That is one of the suggestions I make to the House. I have an individual view in reference to the matter, and then I have a duty to perform as chairman of this committee. If we pass that section we will take away from the Postmaster General the right to consider anything except the miles traveled in fixing the pay, which is clearly wrong, as every just man, I think, will see.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MOON. I know the interest of this House on that question of rural carriers. I want it understood that I am entirely friendly to them. I want to do anything that will be of benefit to them within the just and proper bounds of reason, and with due regard to the welfare and interest of the country. But we must conserve the Treasury of the United States. I do not speak by authority of the administration, because I have no authority to represent the administration upon that question, but I speak from a general knowledge and an accurate examination of the Federal revenues, and I believe that the administration, if called upon, would not deny the fact that from the beginning of the European war the revenues of the United States have been materially affected, as all industrial pursuits in this country have been. If you will go to the receipts and make your calculation, you will find that in the month of August the revenues of the United States decreased 1½ per cent, in September 2¾ per cent, in October 4½ per cent, and in November 5½ per cent, and the indications are that the decrease for December will be over 7 per cent. If this thing continues, if this business depression continues on account of the disturbance of our relations with foreign countries, we must look to the conservation of our revenues and cut off from every bill where we can strike off a dollar, and await a better time, when we can more justly expend the revenues of the people.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. Thank you very much, sir. In the opinion of the gentleman is not this the beginning of the end of what are known as the rural carriers?

Mr. MOON. No; I think not. I was going to say that there is a provision in this bill that requires the Postmaster General to experiment——

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MOON. In one county in each State. He does not have to take the whole county. He can take one route, and he is required to report whether we can have a better and a more efficient service at less cost than we now have, and still keep in consideration the propriety of adequate compensation to the carrier. Now, is it not wise that we make an experiment of that sort?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. MOON. In a moment. If it be true, as the Postmaster General insists, that under that system $18,000,000 can be saved annually, is it not our duty to save it if thereby we protect the people?

Mr. BUTLER. There is no complaint about the service as now rendered, as I understand.

Mr. MOON. There is a great deal of complaint about it in some cases.

Mr. BUTLER. As a general thing, is not the rural carrier service a satisfactory one?

Mr. MOON. I should say, reasonably so.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not for that reason that the gentleman would advocate the making of this experiment?

Mr. MOON. No; not specially for that reason, but for the economy of the thing.

Mr. BUTLER. We just saved the country $3,000,000 to-day on this vote that we took, when we decided that we would not have another agricultural census.

Mr. MOON. We did well to save money for the country, but if we save other millions we shall do better.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that, but there are some things on which we can not probably be so economical.

Mr. MOON. I want to say to the gentleman and to other gentlemen of this House—and I do not mean to be personal when I say it——

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that.

Mr. MOON. That it is not time for us as Representatives to be afraid of rural carriers or anybody else. We have got to stand by the people of the United States on these questions. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. I am not afraid.

Mr. MOON. I would not do any injustice to the rural carriers, but when the farmers of your country and my country and the business men everywhere are agreed on this proposition, and when every time there is a vacancy you have applications, and they say that this service can be and will be performed by other men for a term of years, four years or less, and not for life as these men now have it, at less expense, and if the money so saved can go to the building up of your roads and the extension of your Parcel Post System, or any other adequate or proper purpose that will give advantages and benefits to the people, the time is coming when you will understand, gentlemen, that standing by the rural carrier for the maximum rate of compensation is going to have its proper effect upon the people, because the people are not willing that this service shall be performed at that figure when there are hundreds of good farmer boys wanting an opportunity in life; and while a man has the job of carrying the mail for life at $1,200 a year they have no opportunity or chance to participate in that service for the Government in their own neighborhood, the country people are not going to stand by you. I think if you are playing politics you are playing it on the wrong side.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not playing politics on it, because I suppose two-thirds of the carriers in my district are Democrats. I have never inquired.

Mr. MOON. I can not conceive how that could have happened. Under a Republican administration for years past, with these fellows covered into the civil service, I can not understand that two-thirds of them should be Democrats, because going in under a Republican administration, nearly every one of them in my country is a Republican. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, the Post Office appropriation bill, as has been stated, covers 54 pages. The new legislation in this bill covers 37 pages. Now, Mr. Speaker, riders in the way of legislation on appropriation bills are sometimes justified. I have sometimes voted for them. When the appropriation and legislation are so intimately connected that they should be considered together it is often a good reason. If a great emergency exists, that is sometimes a reason for supporting it. But, Mr. Speaker, on an appropriation bill to make 37 pages out of 54 new legislation in order is going wild upon this subject, and if it is to be begun now on this bill we might as well repeal the rule of the House that prohibits legislation upon appropriation bills.

Mr. Speaker, it has been stated that much of the new legislation contained in the bill has already been embodied in bills passed by the House and now pending in the Senate. That is true. The only reason given by the gentleman on the other side for including such legislation on this bill is that in no other way can legislation upon this subject be secured. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party is in control of the Senate, as it is in control of the House. To make the assertion that they do merely means that they confess the Democratic Party in control in the Senate can not be trusted to legislate in the public interest unless the House holds a club over them and forces them to do so. Mr. Speaker, I frankly admit that that is the strongest reason that can be urged for including new legislation in this bill; and you gentlemen may be correct in that, that your party can not be trusted to pass the important legislation independent of an appropriation bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, if the Democratic Party in the Senate can not be trusted to pass on the question independently, it can not be trusted to legislate upon it in an appropriation bill where it will go to conference, where the report will be presented to this House at midnight on the 3d day of March, the report read without a Member having an opportunity to know what is in the report, and be obliged to vote it up or down.

If this was independent legislation, we could vote the conference report down and send it back to conference until it was made as it ought to be. But upon an appropriation bill on the night of the 3d of March we will be forced to either accept such a bill as the conferees choose to present to the House or take the responsibility of convening a special session of Congress. It is not fair gentlemen, it is not right, it is not just that that alternative should be put up to Members of the House. Therefore from every standpoint, Mr. Speaker, this legislation, all of it at least, should not be included in the bill, and therefore the rule ought not to be adopted. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield back?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ABERCROMBIE). The gentleman from Kansas has 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule because it makes this legislation in order on an appropriation bill. As I stated in the minority report of the bill, I believe that this is a very bad practice and should not be resorted to except in great emergencies.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman say that he reported minority views?

Mr. STEENERSON. I reported my views.

Mr. MOON. I see that the report contains minority views; there was no minority report.

Mr. STEENERSON. I filed it as my views, but I did not put the heading on it. The printer is responsible for that. But, Mr. Speaker, the necessity does not exist in this case. The gentleman from Tennessee has stated that there is a large number of these provisions needed in the administration of the Post Office Department, and those have all passed the House, and he now wants them put onto this bill as a rider. I called his attention to the fact that many of these provisions, in fact all, except the one relating to the railway mail pay, were contained in the appropriation bill a year ago as reported by the committee. It was a rider, and it was stricken out on a point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL], presumably with the approval of the chairman, because he was then very much disgusted with the Committee on Rules for refusing to give him a rule because it abolished the assistant postmasters.

The administration at that time was not in favor of the abolition of assistant postmasters and the chairman of the committee was. They could not agree. You remember that the chairman was quite severe in his remarks on the Committee on Rules for refusing it. As a revenge for not putting in assistant postmasters his colleagues on the committee raised the objection themselves. They could have had it as a rider on an appropriation bill. It shows that there was no great emergency then, and it does not exist now.

In regard to the other provisions, they are very important. They contain a reduction of the salary of nearly every postmaster of the first and second class in the United States. We never have heard their side of that question. There are reductions of salary in other particulars. But the chief cause for this proposed new legislation on salaries is not economy, but spoils; that is the motive power behind it.

In regard to the railway mail pay provisions, we have passed that already; it is now in the Senate, and the only effect of passing it again will be to attempt to hold a club over the Senate to compel them to pass the provision, and if they do not they will hold up the Post Office supplies and stop the Postal Service. Since we passed that bill in the House there has been a report from the committee that worked two years on railway mail pay, and I understand the Senate has under consideration a different proposition. It would look improper and indelicate to try to force them to accept our views, under the circumstances. It would be resented, and it would result, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas, in a deadlock.

In regard to the question of economy, we are all in favor of economy, but it is a very remarkable thing that at the same time the gentleman from Tennessee speaks of this proposed economy he does not claim for one instant that the Postal Service is not self-sustaining nor that there is extravagance in administration. There is a surplus for the last fiscal year, and if there is a reduction in the volume of business, as he says, it is but the natural result of Democratic rule. We always do less business during Democratic years, and this will be no exception; but when the volume of business decreases expenses can also be reduced, and it does not follow there will be a deficit in postal funds on that account. I hope the rule will be defeated. It is the quickest way to defeat the attack on the Rural Delivery System. I append my views in the minority report.

[House of Representatives Report No. 1219, part 2, Sixty-first Congress, third session.]

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEENERSON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, submitted the following minority views:

I am opposed to making the proposed new legislation a part of this bill. Although legislation by means of riders on appropriation bills is frequently resorted to and may sometimes be justifiable, it is only so in rare and exceptional cases.

The practice is liable to lead to ill-considered and carelessly drawn measures, which it is the aim of our legislative procedure to avoid.

In no instance, so far as I can learn, has legislation so complicated in form or so vital in its effects upon the interests of millions of people been proposed to be forced through in this manner without the consideration that its importance deserves.

Some of this legislation, notably that relating to railway mail pay, has already passed the House as a part of the Moon bill (H. R. 17042) and is now pending in the Senate.

Is it the plan to force favorable action in the Senate by a threat to withhold appropriation for the Postal Service unless they yield to the House? If so, I am afraid the plan will fail, and the only result may be to force a deadlock and prevent the passage of the whole bill and thereby force an extra session. Every one who believes that course to be wise will support this method, but I am persuaded it would be very unwise to do so.

The proposition to do away with assistant postmasters is also one full of contention and should not be forced upon the House in this manner. So is the proposition to authorize the Postmaster General to let all rural routes in one county in each State, on contracts to run four years, to the highest bidder.

This is only a wedge to begin the destruction of the whole Rural Delivery System, and should be considered apart from the appropriation for the service.

There are several other matters of nearly equal importance, all of which should be considered in due course of procedure and not under the whip and spur of a rule on an appropriation bill.

I am authorized to state that Mr. GRIEST and Mr. KENNEDY concur in above views.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, of course the legislation in this bill would be out of order if we had no rule. The reason of the rule is that it is important that this legislation should be enacted. My judgment is that there is no place where such legislation should be enacted as fit as the place where we make appropriations for the conduct of this great department.

We are appropriating $322,000,000 in this bill, and perhaps before it is completed it will amount to $325,000,000, and every particle of legislation in the bill relates to the manner in which the expenditures of the department shall be made, and seeks to regulate the conduct of the department along enlightened, intelligent, efficient business lines. The mere fact that the rules of the House prohibit legislation on an appropriation bill under ordinary circumstances ought not to be an objection to the inclusion of legislation in a bill of this character. This bill deals with one great department of the Government. It deals with that department alone. It should deal with it in such a way that when the bill is enacted into law the men responsible for the conduct of the department will have before them all the information upon which they can base intelligent executive action; and it is only by the enactment of this legislation in the bill that the department will have the information which will enable the executive officers of the department to properly perform the responsible duties which they are called upon to perform.

Ordinarily when an appropriation bill deals with a large number of departments there ought not to be any legislation in the bill, but my judgment is that where a committee reports an appropriation bill covering the management of a great department, and one department only, not only should that committee report the appropriations, but it should report the legislation connected with it, and I do not care what the practice of the House has been in the past or what objections gentlemen may make to the policy of including legislation in a bill of this kind. The truth is that such legislation as this bill contains is not only salutary, but it is scientific. It is the result of great research on the part of the members of the committee and the executive officers of the department, as well as commissions appointed for the purpose of looking carefully into the questions involved. It is not haphazard legislation. It is legislation that has been well thought out, and I predict that the legislation contained in this bill will result in a more scientific conduct of the affairs of this great branch of our Government than has ever been the case in the past. We are fixing in this bill in some of the legislation a limit to the expense attached to the operation of the department by making salaries based upon the revenues of the department, and we are doing away with the rusty, moldy methods of the past by means of which men were paid on a mere guess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is the most drastic rule that has ever been presented to the House for its consideration during my 10 years of service. Of the 57 pages in the bill proper there are 27 distinct substantive legislative propositions. The rule is not drastic alone on the House, but more drastic on a coordinate branch of this Government, the Senate, for it is an open defy to the other body that unless they report on the legislation that was sent over to them last August and embody it in this appropriation bill there will be no Post Office appropriation bill passed before the adjournment of this Congress. The leaders of this House and the leaders of the other body are desirous of using their utmost efforts to bring this Congress to a speedy end, but with the adoption of this rule and the passage of these proposals, if the conferees are going to insist on their enactment, it jeopardizes finishing this bill before adjournment. No Post Office Committee has ever before asked for a rule for the consideration of so much substantive legislation, and I challenge anyone to present another example where any other committee has ever asked for such a rule. But more: These 27 substantive propositions it is not necessary to consider on this appropriation bill. I venture this prophecy, that if they were presented as separate bills they would find much speedier consideration in the other body than as a part of this appropriation bill. Consider the importance of some of these various provisions. Amendments are suggested providing for the reduction of pay of the postmaster's salary in every one of your districts, and I venture to say that there was only one Member, and that may be the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], because he has but one post office in his district, who knew the extent of the reductions of the salaries of the postmasters of his district as carried in that bill. That did not require any special rule. That would be in order under the Holman rule. Again, there is that great question that is now pending before the Senate committee—not pending before the Senate, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has said.

The Senate has given no consideration to the big question of railway mail pay adjustment, a matter on which the Post Office Department, as I am informed, and certain members of the Senate Post Office Committee are at odds as to whether the bill shall say that the rate shall be a fixed amount or not to exceed a fixed amount. Then, again, there is a provision here for the creation of supervisory officials at higher salaries. We provide in this bill for new supervisory officials at much higher salaries. Of course, that would not be in order under the Holman rule, because there is a distinct increase of salary provided by that amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about providing for new supervisory officials. These men are in existence to-day, and this bill simply classifies them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not stand corrected by the gentleman, even though he is the sponsor of the amendment, because there is nowhere in existing law any such office as superintendent of finance. That is a new office. Further, another purpose is to accomplish by indirection that which the Democrats could not accomplish by direction, namely, the elimination of the assistant postmasters in the country. The bill as directed by the committee contained a provision eliminating assistant postmasters, but we do not find that provision in this bill nor do we find any appropriation whatsoever to care for the assistant postmasters. Some will be appointed to these supervisory positions, if they are right, and if they are not, then the blame will be on Congress, because no appropriation was made for their continuance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there is the blue-tag provision and other important provisions. It is my experience, and it must have been the experience of everybody in this House, that when legislation of any substantial character is put on an appropriation bill it neither receives deserved consideration of the committee nor does it receive the proper consideration of the House. This legislation when it has been brought in here on this appropriation bill will be rushed through, ill considered, slightly considered, just as the legislation in any omnibus bill is considered when presented in this House. These propositions are each and every one entitled to the very serious consideration of the entire membership of this House. It is lowering the dignity and standing of this House. Why, it is but a step, if one committee can bring in all the legislation reported by a department which meets the approval of the committee, embody it in bulk on an appropriation bill, to carry that rule to its logical extreme with one large appropriation bill carrying all the legislation recommended by the various departments. Is it necessary for me to say that practice is not conducive to good, deliberate legislation?

I again repeat, that if much of this legislation should have been reported in separate bills that legislation would have been passed by the Senate and passed through the Congress much sooner than it will be by these means. I feel quite certain in making this prediction, knowing the deadlock that exists between the Senate Committee on Post Offices and the Post Office Department as to the omnibus bill sent over last August, that its reincorporation and more in this bill will keep this Post Office appropriation bill in committee until the very end, and that in the closing hours of this session, in the midnight hours just before the adjournment on March 4, this bill will be brought in and no one will know the scope latent or intent of much of this most important legislation. No one will be able to detect whether the railroads, under the railway-mail pay proposition, are getting the better of it or whether the Government is getting its just deserts.

I say to you again that this is the most drastic rule that has ever been presented. It destroys the deliberative qualities that should engage this House in the consideration of legislation of this moment. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, an innocent bystander might think there was some merit in the contention of gentlemen on the other side. Let us analyze their contention for a little while and see what it amounts to. This rule only makes in order certain matters of legislation that are reported in the Post Office appropriation bill, with one slight exception. This is the same rule that was presented to this House during the last session and was adopted without a division, even, and now the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] undertakes to say that it is a very severe rule when his party did not see proper to call for a division when it was adopted on the other occasion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The reason for not opposing the rule at that time was the legislation was not proposed as a rider on an appropriation bill, and it did not include the beginning of the end of the rural route carriers.

Mr. HENRY. Then the party of the gentleman is guiltier than if it had pursued the other course. Mr. Speaker, a while ago these gentlemen undertook to defeat an appropriation, and did defeat it, for the benefit of the American farmer, as they always do whenever they can strike a blow at the American farmer. They did that in the name of economy; and here to-day we have a bill reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads saving all the way from eight to ten million dollars, and then the gentleman from Wisconsin talks about economy on that side of the House——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. No; I can not yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the necessity for any rule now, when you have the Holman rule?

Mr. HENRY. The gentleman usually knows everything about bills, because he studies them, but he does not seem to know anything about this rule. Why, he talks about it being a drastic rule, as he calls it. The rule simply makes certain matters that are in this bill not subject to a point of order, to state it in that fashion; otherwise the bill and all of these items are thrown wide open to amendment, and there is the utmost freedom of discussion. The gentleman can offer his amendments; the gentleman can debate them, and the thing is thrown wide open to let him talk as long as he wishes, if any rule could be made wide enough for that purpose. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, these matters have been passed on in this House. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is endeavoring to economize, and they have cut down expenditures from eight to ten million dollars. There is nothing new or strange in the bill or in the rule, yet gentlemen all of a sudden have become very active. Why? The answer is plain and manifest. They think they will play a little politics on economy and other matters, but let me say here and now and make the prediction that when the next election comes along in 1916 the Democratic Party will go to the country and will win again. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If you are going——

Mr. BUTLER. It surely will go to the country; we know that; that part we will concede, my friend. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY. But they will not go to the graveyard to find the gentleman's party. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must not interrupt a gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not mean to do so.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, it does not interrupt or disturb me either. Now, if you are going to play politics, you must play them aboveboard. Lay your hands down on the table and let us see these things. You have got to play on straight lines. You can not talk about economy in one breath and say you are saving $2,000,000 when we wanted to appropriate it for the benefit of the American farmer, and then, when we propose to have a saving of $10,000,000, vote against the rule which authorizes a cut in the expenditures of the Government, so I advise you hereafter to study the rule more thoroughly and to study these special resolutions that are brought in a little more, in order to ascertain what they contain.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 47.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 149, answered "present" 1, not voting 146, as follows:

Mr. STOUT with Mr. PROUTY.

Mr. TAVENNER with Mr. SINNOTT.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. J. M. C. SMITH.

Mr. TOWNSEND with Mr. TREADWAY.

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening?

Mr. MANAHAN. I was in the entrance to the Hall.

The SPEAKER. Whereabouts?

Mr. MANAHAN. Right outside the door.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening?

Mr. COADY. I came in just as my name was called.

Mr. MANN. Why did he not answer, then?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. COADY, and he answered "Aye."

Mr. MANN. Why did he not answer, then?

The SPEAKER. Where was the gentleman when his name was called?

Mr. COADY. Just outside the door.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman can not vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 6867. An act to increase and fix the compensation of the collector of customs for the customs collection district of Omaha.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 213. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1914, on the 22d of said month.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5454. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits to the occupants of certain unpatented lands on which oil or gas has been discovered, and authorizing the extraction of oil or gas therefrom; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. J. Res. 213. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1914, on the 22d day of said month; to the Committee on Appropriations.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 19906, the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to six hours, three hours to be controlled by the chairman of the committee and three hours by the gentlemen of the minority, represented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. How much time has the gentleman suggested?

Mr. MOON. Six hours; three to a side.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have had several applications that came in since this matter came up.

Mr. MOON. Oh, well, the House has refused to pass the rule, and I propose to strike from the bill everything that is subject to a point of order. There ought not to be two hours of discussion.

Mr. STEENERSON. All right. I will agree to three hours to a side.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to six hours, three hours to be controlled by himself and three hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] in the absence of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I desire to make a request for unanimous consent. The resolution adjourning the two Houses next Wednesday night, to meet on the Tuesday morning after Christmas, has already passed both Houses. Wednesday is Calendar Wednesday. I find that there are a great many Members who want to go away on Wednesday who are interested in Wednesday's calendar, and we shall probably have either this or some other appropriation bill that can take the time on Wednesday, and possibly the prohibition question may either run so late in the night on Tuesday, or we would have to stay late in the night if it is necessary, and Wednesday is not dispensed with; and I rise for these reasons to ask unanimous consent that next Calendar Wednesday, the 23d, be moved over to Tuesday the 29th.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the business of next Wednesday, under the Calendar Wednesday, be transferred to Tuesday the 29th.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if that will interfere with Wednesday the 30th?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It would simply mean that there would be two Calendar Wednesdays, one on Tuesday and one on Wednesday, the 29th and the 30th, Tuesday the 29th and Wednesday the 30th; and the business that would be in order on Calendar Wednesday would be in order both on Tuesday the 29th and on Wednesday the 30th.

Mr. WEBB. I am a little afraid that we will have the same difficulty to find a quorum on Tuesday that we would have on Wednesday, but I have no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make the same suggestion that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] makes, that it would be perhaps as difficult to get a quorum on Tuesday the 29th as on Wednesday the 30th. It might be that there would be a poor attendance and the point of no quorum be made, so that the 29th might be lost as a day.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Georgia think it would be inconvenient for him to be here on the 29th?

Mr. ADAMSON. I frankly admit that I will not be here.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the request is to have Calendar Wednesday go over until December 29?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I shall object to that, but I would not object to its going over until December 31.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope the gentleman will substitute December 31.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that business in order on Wednesday the 23d be in order on Thursday the 31st.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that business in order on Wednesday, December 23, be transferred to Thursday, December 31. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WEBB. Does that mean that the bill now pending on Calendar Wednesday will not be in order on Wednesday, December 30?

Mr. ADAMSON. It means that you will have two Calendar Wednesdays.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not affect the status of that bill at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not affect the status of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think if we are going to displace Calendar Wednesday we ought to stick to the original request of the gentleman from Alabama and have it on Tuesday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But you can not have it on Tuesday, for gentlemen object.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not objecting to Tuesday, but I am objecting to Thursday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not go back to that request now.

Mr. FOSTER. It will take one extra day out of the work of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that I am not going away myself. I intend to be here, but I am making an attempt to get this order for the good of many Members who want to get away.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is the situation: We adjourn over until Tuesday, and Members object to that as Calendar Wednesday for fear there will not be a quorum.

Mr. MANN. The real reason is that the Members who have charge of bills do not expect to be back on that day.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the whole business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19906) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I have but little to say in the discussion of this bill. Important features of the bill have been eliminated by the rejection of the rule. The rule was entirely essential for us to consider the railway mail proposition, the saving that would be effected in the change of postmasters' salaries, in the blue-tag proposition, and a number of other matters not necessary now to discuss, which would have saved to the Government eight or ten millions of money. I will place as an appendix to my remarks my report on the bill.

I want to congratulate the Republican Party in this House on the splendid victory it has won over the people in connection with the railroads of the United States and the rural carriers and the postmasters this afternoon. I am not deceived, Mr. Chairman, as to what defeated the rule in this House under which we could have saved the Government eight or ten millions of money. I am not deceived as to the influences that have prevented the consideration of measures that would have saved $20,000,000 to the Government.

I used to think, long years ago, that the Republican Party was the only friend and ally of railroads, corporations, and trusts when they make illegal and unjust demands. I believed when it was driven from power and a Democratic administration put in power that the demands of that administration for economy and justice in the transportation of mails and the handling of all economic questions of the country would be responded to. Who is it that does not know the power and influence that has prevented the consideration in the Senate of the United States of this railway mail proposition? Who is it that reads the record of this vote this evening, when you are prohibiting the consideration of questions before this House in order to get direct action on them by the Senate, will not understand it? Who is it that will read the RECORD who will not have their ideas as to the influences that are behind that action that prevented the Congress of the United States from considering the just compensation to be paid to the railroads for the transportation of the mails? These roads to-day are advocating and sustaining the old unjust and unscientific proposition of weighing mails quadrennially upon which to base the pay. They know that there is a steal of two to four million dollars every year under that system. That has been going on since 1873. You know it, too, and yet you vote here to prevent the Congress of the United States from considering a question that will protect the American people against such plundering of its Treasury.

Sirs, you have the right, if you think best, to do it; and I have the right to express my opinion on the unpatriotic position of gentlemen who take that attitude in this House. I do not care whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. Shall the letters "R. I."—railroad influence—be branded on his brow when he goes back to his constituency and tells them that he would not consider a question under which their rights might be protected?

Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that with this great Democratic majority of 141 votes here there is neither discipline nor order; there is no disposition to practice the economy and carry out the platform of the party on that line. There is but little disposition to follow the lead of the President of the United States in attempting to reduce the expenses of this Government. Think of it! Here is a bill under which the Postmaster General estimated that $299,211,014 would pay all of the expenses of the Government for the fiscal year if the economies asked for and the administrative legislation asked for under this rule could be accomplished. And yet you see that the committee, over the protest of some of us, decline to give all the legislation asked for, necessitating an estimate of $325,000,000; but we did succeed in reporting to this House under the new and revised estimate a bill that carried about $321,000,000. That ought to have been satisfactory to the advocates of the postmasters and rural carriers and Treasury grabbers in this House. That ought to have been enough. But we reported with it legislation that would have saved $10,000,000 if enacted by this Congress, and here you have turned it down. What caused changes in votes after the roll call enough to defeat the rule. I say that the responsibility is on the Democratic Party. Gentlemen, you have not done your duty to the people on this vote. You have not done it in many other respects. You have shown the fact that you are too cowardly to stand by the doctrines of economy in the interest of the American people. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, like craven cowards, destroying every vestige of respect that a decent Democrat should have, follow the lead of the Republican Party, repudiate the Democratic President, the Democratic Postmaster General, the Democratic Rules Committee, and the Democratic Post Office Committee of this House, for what? Was it at the command of the rural carriers? Was it at the command of the postmasters? Or, tell me, was it at the command of the railroads of the country? Do you want them still to plunder the Treasury? I think more of my country than I do of the Democratic Party, and if we are to return to the Sixty-fifth Congress a Democratic majority, then, in the name of God, let it be of Democrats who stand for the Republic and not for the railroads. [Applause.] But are you going to do it. Was it your inability and inefficiency or your unwillingness to stand by the people that reduced your majority from 141 to 31? If you had stood by the President and his administration, there would have been no such reduction. And still you can not see the truth. You can not stand here and oppose the administration in legislation that it is asking, in the interest of the country and in the interest of the Treasury, and cast your votes for the maintenance of high salaries, for absolute subjection to the will of the carriers, and at the mandate of the railroad companies, and deceive the American people. It ought not to be done. Men who do it are worthy of rejection at the polls at any election, and they ought to be rejected.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said all that I desire to say on that question. You have stricken from this bill all of the legislation that is of any benefit. You have absolutely destroyed the interest that the administration has had in producing economy. You can now only take up the appropriation and fix just such sum as you think ought to be given. There is but little change so far as the actual appropriation for the coming fiscal year is concerned.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HENRY. I have not heard quite all of the gentleman's remarks, but I understood that he stated that the railroad influence was opposed to certain features of legislation embraced in the special rule and in the bill.

Mr. MOON. The railroad companies of the United States are opposed to this legislation in this bill and to the legislation that has gone to the Senate on that question.

Mr. HENRY. I want to say this, that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads asked for this special rule; the Postmaster General asked for it, the administration asked for it, and the only protest or opposition that came to the Committee on Rules against the special rule came solely and exclusively from the railroad influences in the United States.

Mr. MANN. Name them. What were they? Who represented them?

Mr. HENRY. I can name them.

Mr. MANN. Name them.

Mr. STAFFORD. We defy you to name them.

Mr. DONOVAN. A point of order.

Mr. HENRY. I will read the telegram.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is clearly out of order in injecting the remarks that he has into this debate.

Mr. HENRY. The gentleman need not be uneasy. I will take care of myself. I will name them. I say that the railroads tried to defeat this special rule in the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know—I would not undertake to say, and I have not said, that the railroads have brought any direct influence upon any Member of this House. I do not know how that is, but I have always been taught to understand that the combination of circumstances that excludes every hypothesis of innocence consistent with the fact has great force in determining the judgment of a man as to the incentive or the motive for a crime. All I know about this is that the railroad companies fought this bill in committee; that 15 presidents or other officials of railroad companies a year ago came to that committee room and urged upon me that this action be not taken in reference to this measure on railway mail pay. Their chief counsel was there but a day or two ago urging the same. They had reached the conclusion, whether justly or not, that they could delay the action upon the bill that went over from this House to the Senate some time ago—a bill in which we passed identically the measure asked for in this rule. They had reached the conclusion that they could delay the action there upon that bill until this session was over. In order to prevent that delay we placed that bill upon this appropriation bill, so as to force the Senate to act upon it. Then what do you see? You see the action in this House on the rule. I am not blaming the Republican Party. They are playing politics. That is all right for them. They think if they can get at the Democracy in any way they ought to do it. But while I would not reflect upon the ability of the Democrats on this side of the House, they played us well for foolish on this occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. Did not the gentleman see the ring around the desk of men who changed their votes from aye to no after voting for the proposition?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I saw a good many of them.

Mr. OGLESBY. Is not the gentleman satisfied in his own mind that enough votes were changed there to change the result on this proposition?

Mr. MOON. I think so. I do not know, however.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman think there was any railroad influence that got into this Chamber between the first vote and the changes, that made those gentlemen change their votes?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will have to understand that the parliamentary situation is such, that the rules of the House are such, and that my respect for my colleagues is such that I would not like to designate personally the men who have made the changes. I do not know that those men who went down there about the Clerk's desk and changed did so on account of railroad influence. I do not know whether these back here who voted "no" were changed on account of it, but I said and I say now that all the facts and circumstances connected with this legislation, from the beginning to the end, in view of the arguments that I have heard after that roll call began among some men on this side of the House—and I will not break the etiquette of this House by speaking personally—I believe, if you want to know, that there has been and is enough, although I may not prove it, and I only judge it inferentially from the facts that are before me—there is and has been enough railroad influence on the Democratic side of this House to force the betrayal of the Democratic policies and principles and the wishes and the principles of the President and his Cabinet.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me one more question?

Mr. MOON. Yes; as many as you want to ask. Do you belong to that gang?

Mr. OGLESBY. The gentleman has stated that he heard some arguments. Did the gentleman hear any argument except the fact that it reduced the pay of postmasters throughout the country?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I heard arguments that it reduced the pay, oh, to a wonderful amount, which is not true.

Mr. OGLESBY. Did the gentleman hear any other argument?

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes; I heard other arguments on the question of the reduction of salaries of carriers, and that some would be promoted; but does the gentleman think that I am fool enough or that he is fool enough to believe that if a man were here in the interest of railroad companies and wanted to defeat this bill he would offer the railroad argument? Only an idiot would do that. [Laughter.] It is the man who takes some other line who is effective. The gentleman has been here long enough or has had too little experience with these people to be innocent enough to ask me a question like that. Do you think the railroad companies ever come to bribe men, or that their agents, wherever they may be, resort to any but the most insidious methods?

Mr. OGLESBY. Did the gentleman hear any suggestion on the floor during the interval between the first and second call of the roll which referred in any way to an argument that might influence these people on account of railroad interests?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I have just said to the gentleman that when a man wants to cover a fight he resorts to other and insincere arguments. It would be disreputable, it would be dishonorable for a Member of this House to say "I am against this rule because the railroad companies told me so," but when he knows how popular it is to appeal for the rural carriers, how popular it is to say that he does not want the salaries of his postmasters reduced, he, standing against the prime object and purpose of this bill, will take up these little collateral issues and press them upon men who ought to know better and have better sense, and thus obtain a change of votes. Of course it is idle to talk about a man disclosing a criminal purpose when he can avoid it.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman permit me to say that I was not among those who changed their votes?

Mr. MOON. I thought the gentleman was.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not believe the men who came down here and made the change of the votes made the change because of any railroad influence, and I think it is an unjust imputation on the part of the gentleman to say so. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I have not said they did myself. I do not know. I say the facts and circumstances indicate that the railroad interests or some other sinister influence has prevented the majority party in this House from standing up to the administration on this legislation, and I have no apologies to make to any man upon that subject—I do not care who he is—and I have not much respect for the inquiry of a man that is so infernally innocent as to think that crime will disclose itself in the open.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Did we not in this House pass a bill in the last session containing the provisions in reference to railroad mail pay that are in this bill?

Mr. MOON. We certainly did; but that was long before they got a good hold on us.

Mr. MANN. Practically without opposition in the House?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understand that has not made any progress in a Democratic Senate.

Mr. MOON. I understand not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks that the influence that keeps it from making progress is that the railroads have their grip around the gentlemen who constitute the Democratic Party, here or elsewhere?

Mr. MOON. I have said what I have said. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

And now, Mr. Chairman, it is not a pleasant thing for me to discuss matters of this sort. I am a Democrat and expect always to be one, because my views are in accord with the principles and policies of that great party; and that it may be sustained I advocate and support the election of its nominees. But a party can not maintain itself in this House or elsewhere that is unwilling to cooperate, from any influence, whether it be sinister or otherwise, with the great head and leader of the party, whatever party that may be, who happens to be in the White House. I do not believe in subservient obedience to the will of the White House. I am ready to say when I think the White House is wrong that it is wrong, that I can not follow it, because the White House itself, in my judgment, may be against the principles and the policies of my party.

I have said that even on this floor, and I have no retraction to make along that line; but I believe that proper party organization is best for the welfare and interest of the country, and that wherever a party is in power it ought to follow as far as it can in the legislative branch the advice of the Executive and his Cabinet, made plain by them on administrative and economic matters in pursuance of the doctrines of the platforms of the party to the end that the people may have good government. No subservience to any man should be the motto of Democracy, but united organization and action, the uplifting of a banner under which all men agreeing on the same principles and policies may rally, is proper; and when there is a mutiny in the camp, when there is desertion of the standard, when there is a throwing down of the battle flag of a great party upon which is emblazoned retrenchment, economy, and reform, then it is but just that they shall be reminded of their disloyalty so that if they be innocent of wrong intent they may correct their error. If we are to have that kind of Democracy which opposes economy, then maybe we shall have a few years of Republicanism——

Mr. MANN. You will.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, there is nothing left in this bill except the mere matter of routine appropriations. The changes are but slight from the bill as reported last year. When they are reached some member of the committee will take pleasure in explaining the reasons in accordance with the hearings for the changes in the sums appropriated. When we shall reach in the consideration of this bill the matters that are not in order in the absence of the rule, I shall not wait to ask that they be stricken out on the point of order, but I will ask that they may all go out so we may not trouble ourselves with the consideration of that legislation which our good friends who refused us the rule say shall not be considered in the Democratic House of Representatives unless the rejection of the rule is reconsidered. I charge no man with corruption, but with most egregious error when, intentionally or not, he permits himself to appear and act in opposition to the best interests of his party and country.

APPENDIX.

[House of Representatives, Report No. 1219, 63d Cong., 3d sess.]

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in presenting the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, submits the following:

The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, were $313,364,667. The estimates of the department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, on the basis of the enactment of the new laws proposed by the department, which would reduce the expenses of the Government in the transportation and handling of the mails, if adopted, are $299,211,014. This amount is shown from the report of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, together with the comparison of the postal revenues and expenditures for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 and the appropriations, receipts, expenditures, and deficiencies and surplus from 1897 to 1915, as follows:

Estimates by the Post Office Department for the Postal Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Office of the Postmaster General	$1,522,910
Office of the First Assistant Postmaster General	138,530,850
Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General	109,282,004
Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General	3,108,250
Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General	46,767,000
Total	299,211,014

[From the report of the Auditor for the Post Office Department.]

POSTAL REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES.

The audited revenues of the Postal Service stated from July 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914, aggregated $287,934,565.67; the audited expenditures, $283,543,769.16; and the excess of audited revenues over audited expenditures, $4,390,796.51. Deducting $14,333.46, postal funds lost by burglary, fire, bad debts, etc., the audited postal surplus was $4,376,463.05.

No. 1.—Comparison of postal revenues and expenditures, fiscal years 1913 and 1914.

[1] Surplus.

The Post Office Department has revised its estimates in view of the fact that the committee did not adopt the principal legislation recommended by it to reduce the expenses of the department, and submit revised estimates aggregating the sum of $325,129,614. These estimates were so closely made that the committee found it unwise, as to most of the items, to make any change in the sum. The amount recommended by the committee is $321,700,514, or $3,429,100 less than the revised estimates of the department.

The following tables show the appropriation for 1916 in the office of the Postmaster General and the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Assistants, and in them may be found the separate items of appropriation under the jurisdiction of each of these offices and the total of all appropriations, estimates, and recommendations:

It is not necessary to discuss here the new legislation asked for in the bill, as it will be presented for discussion in the House if a rule making it in order be adopted.

Special reference is made to the report of the Postmaster General in explanation of that portion of the new legislation which this committee has seen proper to adopt and recommend for passage in this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I will discuss briefly the questions involved in the bill. First, I want to call the attention of the committee to this statement in the report of the Postmaster General, wherein he says the general policy of the present administration of the Postal Service as defined in the last annual report has been adhered to with good results:

> The service has been administered for the convenience of the public, not for profit; to promote efficiency by standardizing and simplifying procedure; to recognize merit and eliminate partisanship; to extend service wherever present or prospective returns justify; to reduce rates in so far as proves consistent with general fiscal necessity; and to provide all communities and all sections of the country as far as practicable with uniform service.

Under the caption of "General policy," last year's report reads:

> The dominant policy of the present administration will be to conduct the Postal Service for the convenience of the public and not for profit. Its controlling purpose will be to promote efficiency by the complete standardization of the service, which will be attained by harmonizing equipment, adjusting the personnel, and securing the greatest possible cooperation in every quarter.
> The prime consideration in perfecting the personnel of the Postal Service shall be to recognize efficiency and to eliminate partisanship. It is the earnest hope that ultimately all positions will be covered under classified civil service and that merit and faithfulness will be the sole consideration in making appointments as well as promotions.

The above quotation expresses not only what a correct postal policy should be, but also the high aims with which apparently the present administration entered upon its career, from which, however, I am bound to say it has fallen short in practice.

But before I go into that I want to call attention to another matter. Although postal business is so closely related to general business that as a rule it rises and falls with general prosperity, yet of late we have had a phenomenal increase in the volume of postal business in spite of a continued business depression. This, of course, is explained by the addition of savings bank and parcel-post business and the lowering of rates.

The increase in volume of mail has largely increased the bill for railroad transportation, but aside from that the extra outlay on account of the added business has been small. The work of handling the more than 800,000,000 parcels has fallen upon carriers whose pay is substantially the same as before.

At the same time that we have doubled their loads we have also increased the clerical work of the carriers and the duties and the work of the postmasters and the assistant postmasters and, in fact, all those connected with the handling of the mails. This can not be denied, and yet in the face of this we know also that there is not a business enterprise in the United States that does not claim that it costs more to carry on business than ever before.

Listen to the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission on the question of railroad charges. They have filed their proofs there to show that the operation of railroads costs more, that the percentage of operating expenses to receipts is greater now than ever before in the United States, and so every factory and every industrial enterprise shows that it has larger expenses in carrying on its business. And the common people also complain that the cost of living is higher. In the face of these things, is it not strange that the only enterprise doing business in the country to-day which proposes to reduce the wages of its laborers is the Post Office Department? And it proposes to economize by cutting the pay of its humble employees and to increase that of the higher supervisory officials. What justice is there in that? Is it not true that the United States Government, when it engages in a business enterprise, ought to be a model employer and ought to pay a good living wage?

We are in the midst of higher prices. We have loaded the carriers down with more business, but it is proposed to reduce the compensation of these lowly employees of the Government by about one-third so as to cut the expense from $60,000,000 to $40,000,000. That was the estimate. That is the estimate which my friend the chairman referred to in his opening remarks. The Government is going to get rich out of the Postal Service by means of putting the rural service on a contract basis. It is a strange thing to me that he did not also propose to put the City Carrier Service on a contract basis also. There would be another saving of ten or twelve million dollars.

A postal official called on me the other day who is employed in the city post office, and one who has to do with carriers. I said to him, "Would it not be a good plan to put the city carriers on a contract basis? Certainly, you could get bids for less than the salary paid by the Government." He said that would never do. He said that "the city carrier is a man of address; he is a man of acquaintance; he is a man of good manners and has to deal with all the people of the city. He calls at their houses and he must be trusted. The children and the young people give him their letters. Perhaps he insures the package that they send or he registers the mail for them, and he knows when they move from one place to another. No; it would not do to have him on the contract basis, because it is a personal service. He should be a Government officer, and the people of the city would not tolerate having that service on a contract basis for one minute." But it struck me that the same reason should apply to the country people.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I did not catch the first part of the gentleman's remarks. Did he say who it was that made this proposal to him and who then defended the city carrier?

Mr. STEENERSON. I did not give any name; of course not.

Mr. MURDOCK. I thought you did.

Mr. STEENERSON. I did not give any name. I said an official that was employed in the city post office.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, in the city post office. Then he was not a departmental official?

Mr. STEENERSON. No. I merely asked him as a man who knew the service and was familiar with conditions.

Now, here is another thing. The part of the Postmaster General's report that I first read said that it was the policy of the department to extend the service as much as business justified and to treat all States and localities equitably. Very well. That is a good principle. What do we find? Take it, for instance, with regard to the extension of rural service. Now, this may not seem important to some of you, but it is of great significance because of the principle involved. I had a petition for a rural route last summer, and it was inspected. There was the required number of families on it. It was approved by the inspector, and it was all ready for service, provided the Government made the order installing the service. What answer did I get? I got a letter, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 30, 1914.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. STEENERSON: Referring to your inquiry of the 28th instant, as to the status of the proposed rural route from Red Lake Falls, Minn., I beg to state that this case has been investigated and is held in the department awaiting the more favorable condition of the national finances.

It is apparently advisable to withhold for a time all applications for additional postal facilities that involve increased expenditures, except in cases of urgent necessity, and I think you will agree with me that much can be accomplished in this line by deferring the establishment of additional routes. The residents of the community to be served by the route in question, having a full understanding of the conditions confronting the Government, will doubtless cooperate with the department in the effort to contribute a share toward meeting the situation now at hand.

Sincerely, yours, JAMES I. BLAKSLEE,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Mark this: "Withhold additional postal facilities." Not because of postal but of national finances. At the hearing on this bill I asked the Fourth Assistant how this order came to be made. He said it was based upon a memorandum sent by him to the Postmaster General, which reads in part as follows:

AUGUST 17, 1914.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL:

It would appear from the present crisis that confronts the country, due to foreign war, that the loss of revenue from taxation on imports will have to be recovered through the levy of an emergency tax upon the people. This will undoubtedly be most unpopular and will arouse the people to inquire into the extravagant methods and expenditures that may prevail in any service rendered to them, and at no point will this be more apparent than in the delivery of the mail on rural routes.

* * * * * * *

I believe that the present Rural Delivery Service could be performed as successfully, and with every precaution for the certainty, security, and celerity of the mail delivery, for a sum at least $20,000,000 less per annum than at present.

I therefore desire to go on record, before any question of increased taxation upon the people is considered, that in this department, in the bureau over which I have supervision, an economy can be effected of more than one-fifth of the total amount necessary to meet the impending crisis, and that this can and should be accomplished within 90 days from the enactment of the necessary legislation.

JAS. I. BLAKSLEE, Fourth Assistant.

This is an abandonment of the rule which they first promulgated, that the Postal Service should be administered so as to treat all localities equitably and fairly; not as a money-making institution for the Government, but a service to the people. Here we find that the department has made a rule that they will withhold rural delivery and other facilities from people entitled to them because of the general conditions of the Treasury, brought about, it is claimed, by the war in Europe. They do not claim that the service is not self-sustaining. Not at all. Last year it showed a surplus of more than $4,000,000, and the chances are that it will have a surplus during the current year, notwithstanding the fact that the chairman of the Post Office Committee says that the volume of business has decreased.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have come to this point that the United States Government has determined not to extend postal facilities to the people who are entitled to them because there is a deficit in the Treasury on account of failing customs receipts. According to the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the committee, you will note that he also argues that we must save money on rural carriers, and cut other expenses, because there is a deficit in the general balance.

What does that mean? It can mean only one thing, it seems to me, and that is that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and the Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson, believe that where, due to Democratic blundering in the fiscal legislation of the country, by reason of reducing the tariff where it ought not to have been reduced, there is a deficit in the Treasury, you must bleed the Postal Service and reduce the salaries of the poor employees therein in order to make it up. [Applause on the Republican side.]

That is what it means. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to explain the theory whereby these visionary schemes for saving money by reducing salaries are going to end? He mentions that the saving might be used for roads. That was also mentioned at the hearings. In other words, they propose to let rural deliveries on contract and susbtitute a spavined mule and a broken-down buggy with any irresponsible tramp for a well-equipped carrier in order to save $20,000,000 with which to build roads. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Why, such a scheme, if it is not loony, is at least mooney, as it seems to me. [Renewed laughter.]

That scheme was indorsed by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General at the hearings. He jumped at it like a trout for a fly. "Why," he said, "you can save $20,000,000 a year, and spend it on some of the dirt roads down here." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The responsibility of this Government with regard to the conduct of the postal business is a very great one, and if you would read the report of these department officials you will find that they realize their responsibility. They know what they should do, and they say they are doing it, but they are not doing it.

They say that the Postal Service is to be operated and conducted on a nonpartisan basis; that the employees are to be selected without regard to partisanship. What a high-sounding rule. But how is it in practice? Did you ever hear of a Republican being reappointed postmaster? No. The disregard of the civil-service ratings in the selection of fourth-class postmasters is notorious all over the country. A year ago the administration refused to request the Committee on Rules to report out a rule abolishing assistant postmasters, of which there were 2,400 or 2,500 in the United States, because it was a violation of the spirit of the civil-service law and a reversion to the spoils system. You remember the awful row that broke out between the executive branch of the Government and the legislative branch, over on the Democratic side at that time, when the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads rose in his might and denounced the attempt to interfere with a coordinate branch of the Government, when it was said that a subcommittee of the Committee on Rules had visited the Postmaster General and had been instructed by him to refuse a rule to make that legislation in order.

Well, through some fatality the Postmaster General has finally agreed to kill off the assistant postmasters; not directly, by cutting off their heads, but by means of starvation. This bill provides no pay for them. There was an affirmative clause in the first draft of the bill that stated that "all assistant postmasters at all offices are hereby abolished from the 1st of July, 1915," but now they are omitted. New offices are created to take the places of the assistants. This new legislation has been made in order by the rule. So you see that the friendship of the administration for the civil service of a year ago has vanished.

Gentlemen, let us be consoled. I was sorry to hear the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] accuse the Democratic Party in this House and in the other branch of Congress of apparently being under the influence of the railroads. A sufficient answer to that is that this House passed the railroad-pay bill unanimously. It was recommended unanimously by the Post Office Committee, and I do not think a single vote was recorded against it in the House. It went over to the Senate. These other administrative features are important, but yet the gentleman from Tennessee and his friend from Georgia on the committee last year, apparently through spite, because they did not get a rule to cover them all, had them go out of the bill on a point of order themselves, so they could not have been very urgent. Now, let me give the gentleman this advice, that instead of being so disconsolate in his defeat, instead of turning around and charging the Democratic Party in this House with being controlled by these terrible bogies he mentioned, he simply go back and call a metting of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and he can get reported as a separate bill the very same measures that he now says have been defeated, and the probability is that he can again pass his bill.

The main objection was the provision as to rural carriers and postmasters' salaries. Outside of those propositions, the administrative features that were embodied in this rule would be approved. They have been approved by the committee, and would be approved again, and he can get them as a separate bill. The objection that we made was one which we tried to state in the debate on the rule. It was that it is not good practice to attach such an enormous amount of new, intricate, and important legislation as a rider to an appropriation bill in this the closing session of this Congress, especially in view of the fact that the most important part of the proposition has already been passed through the House and is pending in the Senate, and that, therefore, it would look very much as if the House was threatening, by this means, to withhold supplies for the Postal Service unless it got its measures through, whether they had any merit or not. It was an attempted holdup by means of this rider. It seems to me that common sense dictates that if you attempted to do that you would be courting the very trouble you seek to avoid; and hence, so far as the Republican Members are concerned, I am sure that their one idea was to expedite the passage of the necessary supply bills. We stand ready to aid the gentleman from Tennessee in his wonderful reforms and economies, although I am free to say that it is difficult to believe that the economies he mentions will be very great. We have our doubts, but we will give him the benefit of the doubt, and approve of them at the proper time and in the proper way.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. To get this clear in my own mind, is it not a fact that the Republicans on this side of the big aisle, when the bill went through at the last session fixing the rates of railway compensation for carrying the mail, unanimously supported the Democratic proposition?

Mr. STEENERSON. They certainly did, and that bill was unanimously reported by the Post Office Committee, both Republicans and Democrats.

Mr. COOPER. Exactly. So that the criticism of the gentleman from Tennessee on that particular matter is absolutely without any point whatever, so far as any charge of our being under railway influence is concerned, because we supported that proposition. And is not the whole question boiled down to this, that they are trying to put the rural free delivery system under contract, and that they had that embodied in the rule, and that has never been considered at all? That is the whole question here, is it not?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is a part of the question. I would not say that it is the whole question.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman went at considerable length into the effort of a year ago to defeat the attempt to take the twenty-four hundred assistant postmasters out of the civil service.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman does not claim credit for that?

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. GOULDEN. I voted against it, as did many others on this side of the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. And I give the gentleman much credit, and many others on that side of the House are entitled to credit. I remember particularly the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. O'SHAUNESSY, who had been in the Postal Service himself and had risen from the ranks to an important position, and was able by self-education and self-help to become a prominent Member of this House. He was opposed to the idea of removing the assistant postmasters from the civil service, and I regarded his opinion as being worth a good deal, because he was a man who had sprung from the ranks. The President then opposed the abolishing of assistant postmasters, and I honored him for it.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is not a partisan matter by any means, and no credit can be claimed for either one of the political parties, and I am proud of the position I then took.

Mr. STEENERSON. Of course, the opposition is entitled to credit for everything it can defeat, and the majority is entitled to credit for what it can accomplish, so that there is a difference. If you attempt to do wrong and we defeat that attempt, it seems to me that we ought to be entitled to more credit than you.

Mr. GOULDEN. I do not think so, because we were opposing the report of the committee itself and the majority side of the House to which we belong.

Mr. STEENERSON. I printed my speech on the Post Office bill a year ago in pamphlet form and sent the gentleman a copy of it, and that was the last thing I said, that the Democrats who supported Mr. Wilson in this case were entitled to a great deal of credit.

Mr. GOULDEN. That is right, and that is what we were doing.

Mr. STEENERSON. And I am now performing the same service for this administration that I tried to perform a year ago. I am trying to hold them down to the policy of civil service as much as I can. By changing this system of rural carriers 44,000 rural carriers will be placed under contract, and what does that mean? Their bids will be passed upon, in the first instance, by the local postmaster, and they think now that most of them are Democrats and that these local postmasters passing on the bids of those intending to carry on the rural-route service there will be no trouble at all, and if Postmaster General Burleson's proposition should become a law, then the most ardent enemy of the civil-service law would be satisfied in the near future. I think even the most ardent spoilsman on the Democratic side would be satisfied. With the contract system there could be no Republican rural carriers under a Democratic administration. That was too big a temptation for the Postmaster General. Forty-four thousand employees by one stroke to be transferred from the civil service where they now are to the spoils system. There is the true reason and the true motive for that proposition, and I give due credit to the Democracy in this House for defeating it [applause], because it shows that whereas last year, through the inspiration of newly found positions and responsibilities and association with the President, the Postmaster General was anxious to carry out the civil service and defeat the rule asked for to decapitate the assistant postmasters, now, after he has been in office for nearly two years and has found how sweet these small morsels of spoils taste, he has abandoned entirely the doctrine of civil service and has espoused the cause of the spoilsman. In my estimation that is the true reason, and not economy, for the proposition.

Mr. Chairman, this is all wrong. The Postal Service should be conducted as much as possible free from partisan bias, and merit should be rewarded wherever it is found. There are many in this House and elsewhere who believe that the functions of the Government should be extended. Indeed, it is recommended in this report that we should take over the telegraphs and the telephones of the country, and even, say, the railroads.

Those who have their doubts upon that grave question, or those who favor such an extension, might well hesitate until the doctrines of the civil service and the merit system are well established in the laws and procedure and administration of the country. Whenever the time comes that you can increase by five or six million the employees of the Government, put them under the spoils system, you have given the power and control of this country over to the officeholders. Free government would probably be at an end in this country if it should happen. We are not prepared for it.

Therefore it behooves us to proceed carefully, cautiously, and slowly, and the place at which to begin is with that branch of the Government which does business with every man, woman, and child in it. The place above all others where we should observe the merit system and impartial service is in the Postal Department.

Mr. Chairman, I have already pointed out that the war in Europe has been put forth by the present administration as the justification for the withholding of needed mail facilities in rural districts, and for the proposal to reduce expenses by substituting a contract service for the present Rural Delivery Service, and also for the advancement of the new policy of making the Postal Service contribute to the general support of the Government. The claim is that the war has shut off imports and thereby reduced customs revenues. President Wilson, in his address to Congress on September 4 asking for the war-revenue law, used this language:

> During the month of August there was, as compared with the corresponding month of last year, a falling off of $10,629,538 in the revenues collected from customs. A continuation of this decrease in the same proportion throughout the current fiscal year would probably mean a loss of customs revenues of from sixty to one hundred millions. I need not tell you to what this falling off is due. It is due, in chief part, not to the reductions recently made in the customs duties, but to the great decrease in importations; and that is due to the extraordinary extent of the industrial area affected by the present war in Europe.

This statement, that there is a decrease in importations, has been repeated during the debate on this bill on this floor, and is found in the official communications of the Post Office Department to Congress.

I want to call attention to the fact that the President compares the falling off in revenue under the Underwood law with the receipts under the Payne law. Of course he overlooks the slight difference in the rates of duty. He should have remembered that his party, and especially he as the candidate, promised the people a downward revision, and that they gave us a downward revision, and that therefore, unless the importations were very largely increased, necessarily the receipts from customs would be diminished. In his campaign letter to Mr. UNDERWOOD a month later he went still further, and said that it was the war, and nothing but war, that caused the falling off in revenues from customs receipts. Now, what are the facts? The official figures are now before us. They were not fully before us at the time of the discussion of the war-revenue bill.

I hold in my hand a document issued by the Department of Commerce, the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance of the United States.

The October number has recently been issued; we have not yet got the November or the December number. On the first page containing the tables we find the total imports of merchandise for October, 1913, $132,149,302; for October, 1912, $138,880,850, an increase for one month of about $6,000,000. I find in the column "10 months ending October, 1914," the total imports of merchandise were $1,548,531,394; for the same 10 months of 1913, $1,460,364,000, or $88,196,921 more during the first 10 months of the calendar year 1914 than for the corresponding period the year before.

These 10 months, I call to your attention, were the first 10 months that the Underwood law was in effect. It was not in full effect until the 1st of March. It took effect as to wool in January. So you see that instead of there being a falling off in imports there has been an increase in imports of over eighty millions in 10 months. I have the figures, which I got by telephone from the Department of Commerce, as to the receipts and imports for November, the month just past. I find that the total imports of merchandise for the last month—November, 1914—were $126,467,907 and the duties from customs $16,924,408.

Now, if we had a similar amount of importations for December—and they will be much larger, from the preliminary figures I have received—there will be $252,935,814, or in round numbers $253,000,000, for the two months completing the calendar year of 1914, and will make the total imports of merchandise for the 12 months $1,801,531,394 as against $1,793,138,480 for the calendar year 1913, or $8,392,914 more for 1914 than 1913.

Where, then, is the contention that the war in Europe has diminished the imports? The contention is simply a fallacy and not true. You may excuse a man in the excitement of a campaign for exaggeration; you can excuse a candidate for telling a whopper just before election; but now that the campaign is over and the official records are available, it seems to me that you ought to cease repeating the statement and come back to facts.

Now, as a ground for explaining the embarrassed condition of the Treasury and the deficit, the conclusion has been drawn that the revenues from customs were disappointing to the Democrats. There never was a greater fallacy. How much revenue did you expect from the Underwood law? You have got within a small fraction of what was predicted for it. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 30, 1913, page 5233, from Mr. UNDERWOOD'S final speech on the conference report. He said:

> The income tax, leaving out those features that relate to the tax on corporations, will produce above $83,000,000. The corporation part of the income tax included in the bill, it is estimated, will produce $39,000,000. The custom taxes for the year 1915 are estimated to produce $249,000,000.
> Taking the other sources of revenue that the Government now has and adding to them the income tax and the customs laws that are affected by this bill, it will produce for the fiscal year 1915, according to our estimates, $1,026,000,000, and if the expenditures of the Government do not exceed $1,008,000,000, which is the estimate that will cover the expenditures of the Government for that year, the bill will produce a surplus revenue of $18,000,000, which the committee considers as a safe balance on the right side of the ledger.

Mr. UNDERWOOD says that in the fiscal year it will produce $249,000,000. Well, the Payne bill produced $318,000,000, so there was expected to be a decline. When you passed the Underwood law you expected there would be $249,000,000 revenue instead of $311,257,348, which was the amount collected in fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, so that you can not lay that to the war. You are not disappointed as to the income produced by the Underwood law because you expected it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

So, putting the total customs duties collected for the first 10 months of 1914 as given in October summary of $209,000,000, and adding $16,924,408 customs receipts for last month and a similar amount for this month, you will have $243,418,045, only five and a half million ($5,581,955) less than Mr. UNDERWOOD estimated, or practically the same as his estimate.

If you calculate that December will produce only as much as November, then the difference would certainly not be in excess of $6,000,000 less than the estimate of Mr. UNDERWOOD at the time he spoke on the conference report.

Now, then, what justification have you, what justification did the President have for blaming the war in Europe for the lower customs revenue when you are getting the revenue that you expected? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Where is the Democratic blunder that has brought embarrassment upon us which necessitates the recommendation of destroying the rural service and bleeding the Postal Service to support the Government? The blunder consisted, not in misfiguring the income from tariff but from other sources. These are official figures, and you can find them all in Monthly Summary for the months referred to. I will insert the page from the October, 1914, summary where it gives the imports for the first 10 months of calendar year 1914, and also the ad valorem rate on dutiable and on all imports for the respective periods. The rate for 1912, under Payne law, was 39.54 per cent on dutiable and 18.30 per cent on total imports, and about the same for 1913, while in the 10 months of 1914 the rate under the new law was only 35.02 per cent on dutiable and 13.53 per cent on total imports. For October, 1914, the rate on total imports was only 11.78 per cent. The blunder was in the income tax. You fell short $51,000,000, the difference between $122,000,000, which you estimated you would get from the corporations and income tax, and the $71,386,156, which you actually got from that source. You fell short more than $51,000,000, and that is the chief element which causes the embarrassment in the Treasury. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means estimated that your appropriations would be $1,008,000,000. That was for fiscal year 1915; the current year.

What were they? I have the Book of Estimates, issued by the Treasury Department, and there is no guesswork about this. The total appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 were $1,094,168,102.38. He estimated that you were going to appropriate $1,008,000,000, and you appropriated $86,000,000 more than you said you would. There was another blunder. The appropriation of $1,094,168,102.38 for the fiscal year 1915, instead of $1,008,000,000, as you said you proposed to appropriate, and the falling short of the income tax and the corporation tax in the sum of $51,000,000 is the cause of your trouble. What would have been the result if you had had the Payne rates? It has been demonstrated to a mathematical certainty. The rate under the Underwood law, applied to the free and dutiable goods together, was 13.53 per cent, a little over 13½ per cent for the first 10 months of the calendar year 1914, but only 11.78 per cent for October. This is also given in this same publication issued by the Department of Commerce for the very period in question. Under the Payne law the rate was 18.34 per cent for 1913. How could you expect to get as much money when you collected only 13½ per cent ad valorem on the total amount of importations instead of 18½ per cent? It seems to me it is entirely unjustifiable to expect anything of that kind. If you apply—and this is relevant because of the address of the President on September 4—the Payne duties, you would have had, according to my calculation, and you can calculate it yourself, about eighty-six or eighty-seven million dollars more of customs revenues on the same importations that actually came in than you obtained. It could not be a surprise to a sane man that you got less on substantially the same amount of imports under a lower than a higher rate. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] estimated the falling off of revenue very closely. He can not be surprised or disappointed, for he predicted the result very closely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. So that the cause of all of this trouble in the Treasury, this falling off of the available balance from $144,000,000 to a little over $66,000,000, as it is to-day—the excess of expenditures over receipts which we are now experiencing is directly due to the decrease of customs receipts under Democratic tariff legislation and not to accident, not to war. It is due to miscalculation as to the amount of income to be derived from the income and the corporation tax, and to the large—I will not say extravagant—appropriations, $86,000,000 more than you officially estimated you would appropriate. Therefore, it seems to me, it is about time that the leaders of the Democratic Party should acknowledge the truth. You may as well do it now as later, because sooner or later you will have to acknowledge that these are the facts; that these are the causes for the falling off of income—miscalculation, blunder; not any misfortune because of the war. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is important for the people to know, because the war came along, and we can not end it. If our difficulties in the Treasury were due to the war, we would have to submit, and, perhaps, it would be justifiable to resort to bleeding the postal receipts to support the Government, but seeing that the cause is not the war in Europe but is Democratic blundering in legislation, then that is a cause that can be removed. [Applause on Republican side.] And, gentlemen, it will be removed by the people, and you may as well acknowledge that you were mistaken, and be honest and candid and fair on this proposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

FOREIGN COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES—SUMMARY OF IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

[Figures in all statements for October, 1914, and for 10 months ending October, 1914, subject to revision. Figures of imports for October, 1913, include only entries under the tariff law of 1913, beginning with the fourth day of the month. The entries of the first three days of the month under the law of 1909, amounting to, approximately, $13,665,000, are included with September totals.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, when the legislative bill was under consideration yesterday the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] complained about the long delay in paying some of the star-route contractors, and he named one instance. It had nothing to do with the bill then under consideration, and I had no information that would enable me to give to the committee any facts about it. To-day I received a letter from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General which thoroughly explains the case. It seems that the contractor was given the contract in May, and a contract was sent to him at that time, but he never returned it properly executed to the department until the 14th of November. The delay was due to his own negligence in sending back the contract. I ask to extend my remarks by publishing the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to print the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the letter:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, December 18, 1914.

Hon. JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: With reference to the comments that appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 17th instant, pages 330, 338, and 339, relative to the pay of star-route contractors, it may safely be stated that delays occur occasionally, as in the case of Calvin Perry, contractor for service on star route No. 71210, Pacific Beach to Lone Tree, Wash., who was employed from July 1, 1914, under the instructions mailed him May 1, 1914, accepting his proposal for service on this route.

Under the law a properly executed contract must be filed in this office by the successful bidder, and accepted on behalf of the Postmaster General, before any payment can be made for service performed. In this case Mr. Perry delayed the filing of his contract, the same not being returned to the department until November 14, 1914, although it was sent to him for execution May 10, 1914.

Further delay in payment occurred through a clerical error in making certificate to the Auditor for the Post Office Department for four months' payment, when, under the rules of the Treasury Department, the auditor is not allowed to pass a joint account for more than one quarter, or three months.

Representative JOHNSON of Washington made inquiry after the first certification, and was informed that payment had been authorized; this prior to the rejection by the auditor of the original certificate and the recertification of the account.

However, the failure of the accepted bidder to return his properly executed contract before November 14, 1914, a period of six months, was the primary and principal cause for delay of four months in paying him.

Sincerely, yours,

JAS. I. BLAKSLEE,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks leave to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the House at this time to submit a few remarks on the proposition for a constitutional amendment providing for Federal prohibition.

The unusual situation is presented of the fighting being forced by the opponents of the proposition. Those who are supposed to be the defendants at the bar have become the aggressors, and are moving to force the issue. For six months it has been known that the opponents of prohibition, having counted noses, have learned that the resolution could be defeated, and have since insistently and earnestly urged consideration of the resolution and a rule to compel its consideration. It is to be regretted that the friends of prohibition, the real enemies of the barroom, have fallen victim to the wiles of politicians and under unwise, radical, and reckless leadership have allowed an untenable battle ground to be selected, whereon their hosts may be slaughtered by defeat in a righteous cause, when the battle could have been won if more wisdom had directed the zeal and piety of the really honest, sober, and meritorious contestants.

Of a piece with this folly is the zeal which seeks to force upon the question of lady suffrage the centralized jurisdiction of the Federal Government. The leaders in these two causes either do not understand or do not regard the basic principles of this Government, on which, more than anything else under the sun, depend the cause of civilization, the preservation of liberty, and the security of morals, temperance, manhood, and virtue. The Federal Government was never designed as a moral agency, nor was it ever intended to exercise the local police functions nor interfere with the question of suffrage. The genius of our Government excels all others on earth, present or past, because we wisely instituted for efficiency local control of morals, the franchise, labor, education, and all questions on which depend human prosperity, good order, and happiness. That system was not designed out of any spirit of red-handed rebellion against Federal Government. The Federal Government was made by the States after they were in full-fledged existence and created by them for certain general purposes, all other powers being reserved to the States. That policy is wisest and best, because the Government, being local, is closest to the people who understand the subject and maintain the Government itself. A team can pull more with short traces, placing the team nearer to the load; a marksman or sportsman can shoot more accurately at short range. The people interested in both the subject to be regulated and the Government regulating it can secure better results with less friction and more satisfaction.

If the ladies are ever to descend from their high estate of supremacy as lovely charmers and ministering angels of mankind down to the common level of mere men as politicians, it should be done by the action of their respective States, and when it is done it should not be done by clamor and parade and in unlady-like demonstrations and exhibitions. All the blessed creatures need do is to intimate, in a gentle way, in their charming tones and pleasing manner, to the "lords of creation," that they wish to have the privilege of voting, whether they take the trouble to do so or not, and clearly intimate to the aforesaid "lords of creation" that there will be no further happiness at home until their wishes are given effect. The effect would be instantaneous. Not many suns would set and rise until the fair creatures had been clothed with all the rights of political degradation, with the same option that men now have—to claim the privilege but shirk the duty.

I am a genuine prohibitionist.

I have long realized what the business sense of the country is rapidly coming to recognize, that a sober man is more valuable in business than a drunken one; and what most people are coming to realize, that a sober man can have more fun than a drunken man. Business enterprise and intelligence have been instruments in the hands of Providence to work the great reformation in the last 50 years, which has advanced sobriety and promoted intelligence and prosperity in so many States of our Union. I have probably voted against barrooms oftener than any preacher in the land or any other man, perhaps a score of times, and I expect to keep it up until I die, for I honestly believe that every man needs to exercise all the brains God has given him, and that it is a crime against himself and society to stupefy and becloud his intellect with liquor as a beverage.

The common sense of mankind educated by experience and observation has produced a new proverb or beatitude, "Blessed is the man who keeps liquors out of his stomach, for the days of that man shall be longer on the earth; and verily his wife and children shall wear better shoes and clothes and have more to eat."

Of course the true temperance theory is that the doctors can be trusted to manage liquors for medical purposes, and if they can be trusted with issues of life and death in cases of desperate malady, society can certainly trust them to manage the liquor traffic. The doctors are more jealous of their profession than most any other class, and will blacklist a black sheep quicker than any other profession. If one of them should be unfaithful and try to run a blind tiger it would be easier to catch him and punish him than the ordinary negro or sorry white man. The value of liquor for medical purposes is limited and problematical; it often relieves lassitude after fever, and sometimes alleviates pain and suffering, but is liable to produce others just as bad. The remedy is often worse than the disease. Furthermore, the liability to take an overdose is greater than in case of any other nostrum. It is generally recognized that social drinking is what makes drunkards and produces the consequent crime, poverty, and misery, the crime produced by drunkenness being estimated at about 90 per cent of all the crimes committed in the world. No man's personal habits nor private notions should, however, be permitted to confuse his mind nor divert him from insisting on rational methods and correct principles. The way to accomplish and maintain prohibition is for the people of each State to do their duty. Federal action can only be preferable to State action if the aggregate of State excellence, represented by the General Government, is superior to the best action of any particular State. It must be the average of the excellence of all the States. If it is superior to some, it must be inferior to others. I deny that the moral excellence of the Federal Government is superior to that of my State. The Federal Government has done things that my State would not do. It would be ashamed to do some of the things the Federal Government has done. Its noble men and lovely women would blush if it should so do. I do not deny what other Members admit of the inferiority of their States, for they come to the Federal Government for all things, admitting that their States are incompetent. I am ashamed of such States, and would not live in one of them.

The good, old doctrine of prohibiting intoxicating and malt liquors as a beverage but treating them like arsenic and strychnine and other dangerous drugs as articles to be controlled entirely by the doctors in the interest of health, temperance, and prohibition has taken hold of a number of States. It is true that some of the enemies of prohibition contend that prohibition does not prohibit, but the truth is in every State where it has been tried it was enforced as well as the laws against murder, arson, larceny, adultery, fornication, and many other prevalent crimes. The agitation in Congress originated in the claim that the Federal Government was aiding the liquor trade and defeating local efforts at prohibition, and that was never the truth nor was there ever any foundation for the assertion. This has been declared thousands of times without malice or knowledge by the friends of prohibition. The truth is, the Federal Government never licensed a bar in any State nor the manufacture of liquor nor the sale in any form. The Federal Government receives an excise tax from the manufacture and sale of liquor, just as in some other lines of business. It has no jurisdiction to pass upon the local legality of the business. It found a man transacting the business by the permission of the State, either active or passive, and it made demand for the payment of the Federal taxes. When complaint was made, answer was made that that helps enforce local law. It finds the men who are violators of law, and it collects a tax out of them. If local officers were vigilant they could find them as well as the Federal officers, but Congress went further and provided, in the Humphrey amendment, that the Federal officers should keep posted a list of all persons from whom taxes were collected, and that on demand of the local authorities a certified copy of the tax receipt should be furnished. All that would remain necessary for any prohibition State to do was to provide in their law of evidence to permit the admission of that certified copy of the tax receipt, and they could convict every blind tiger, and so the State laws have not been defeated by the Federal Government but have absolutely been aided by its efforts. Congress went still further in the Brantley amendment and prohibited the C. O. D. practice by the express companies which, it was claimed, helped to violate the prohibition laws, and further provided that it should be unlawful for any person to order or receive any quantity of liquor by express unless full publicity were made by indicating on the outside of the package fully what the package contained—how much, the name of the vendor, and the name of the consignee. Early in State efforts at prohibition it was complained that the exemption of original packages permitted liquor to be shipped into prohibition States and delivered to the blind-tiger dealer before the jurisdiction of the State could attach. Congress passed the Wilson law in 1890 subjecting it to the laws of the State on arrival in the State.

The Supreme Court held that "arrival" meant delivery to the consignee. We made repeated efforts to correct that defect by inserting the words "either before or after" to define delivery. Finally we succeeded in passing the Webb bill, which vacated and set aside the exemption of original packages, so that the State authority, if properly exercised, may seize any package of whisky the moment it crosses the border of a State, and under the police powers reserved to a State may do anything the State pleases to do with it. It may prohibit its sale. It may destroy the liquor. It may prohibit its use in certain quantities. It may make any regulation its wisdom sees proper. With the present state of Federal law on the subject, there is absolutely no reason for any State which so desires not to prevent the sale or manufacture of liquor. In those States which have adopted prohibition it is not any longer a question of prohibition, but it is a question of the enforcement of law. If in those States the prohibitionists want prohibition, the only thing they have to do is to do less agitating for prohibition and lend more assistance to the courts and grand juries in detecting and convicting the violators of the law and bringing them to justice.

But some of them say, "We are not satisfied with prohibition in our own State. We want to compel other States to practice prohibition." That is a false idea and a vain and futile effort. There are States in this Union which will not adopt prohibition. Their population and conditions are such that the Federal Government could not adopt a law that would enforce prohibition in those States, because every law must be enforced by the people and juries where the violations occur. Furthermore, the danger in the idea of going to Congress for the Federal Government to pass on these moral questions is that the large States which do not agree with us on prohibition might defeat us and deprive us of the benefits which we have secured through local self-government.

The second section of the Hobson resolution fails to meet our objection. It is a conscience-stricken concession to the justice of our position and a belated enforced admission that prohibition can not be enforced except by local self-government, but it so confuses two jurisdictions that neither would be fully asserted and neither would be effective. Evidently it was not drawn by a capable lawyer. All the temperance people heretofore have ever asked was that Federal law be withdrawn from the States so far as traffic in liquor is concerned and the States be left exempt from Federal authority to adopt and enforce prohibition. If the Federal Government once asserts its authority and pretends to control the question, everybody knows that State authorities will go out of the business. The only safety for morals and good order rests in home government.

Personally I am averse to voting for the rule in either case. I consider it poor tactics to insist on considering a proposition which I oppose. Consideration is a step toward victory, usually sought by the friends of a measure. The enemies of prohibition, not its friends, have urged this rule upon the committee. It is true that many real friends of prohibition before discovering their inability to adopt the amendment urged us to vote for the rule, and I promised them to do so if the rule was ever reported by the committee. Furthermore, the report of a committee of this House is law to me. I believe in party discipline. The integrity of the Democratic Party is the chief anchor of our political salvation and the only sure preservation of our liberty and morals. Democratic principles can not be preserved without compact and faithful organization. The great Committee on Rules reported this rule, and I shall stand by the committee for its adoption. The great Committee on the Judiciary was unable to form an opinion on the proposed amendments, but reported them without a recommendation. For one I do not need their recommendation. Correct principles deny to the Federal Government jurisdiction over the subject. One of the smartest women and one of the purest and best prohibitionists in this country wired the Georgia delegation to stand by State control on the question of lady suffrage. We wired our concurrence and asked if she applied the same views to the prohibition amendment. She promptly and unequivocally replied that while an ardent prohibitionist, her attitude was the same on both propositions. She could not surrender local self-government and rely on Federal control. Her address is Miss Millie Rutherford, Athens, Ga., but she lives in the hearts of all the people of Georgia.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 19906, had come to no resolution thereon.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, which was read the first and second times, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 1228), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 94. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to remind the Democratic Members of the House that there will be a caucus immediately after the adjournment of the House to fill some vacancies on the committee, and I ask that they stay here for a few minutes. It will not take 10 minutes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, December 19, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the acting president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting an urgent estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for sewage-disposal system, District of Columbia, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 1421), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20095) to establish the legislative reference division of the Library of Congress, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1227), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17571) granting an increase of pension to Peter P. Swensen, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, December 19, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, as Thou dost open the portals of this new day bid us to enter with the high resolve of Christian statesmen. Our Lord has taught us, in the midst of our care for the welfare of the people, that if we seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness all these things will be added unto us. No one has ever questioned His wisdom as to the plan of life. No one can doubt His knowledge of the divine philosophy of life. So may we enter upon the duties of this day, keeping before us the interests of the everlasting kingdom that our Nation, established in righteousness, may receive the blessings of the covenant-keeping God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. RECORD will be corrected accordingly.

EXPORTATION OF MUNITIONS OF WAR (S. DOC. NO. 660).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, information relative to the exportation of arms and munitions of war from the United States to the belligerent nations abroad and relative to contracts with American concerns for the manufacture of arms and the munitions of war.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In view of the fact that the statement is not complete and will be supplemented by an additional statement later on, and in view of the fact that at that time I shall desire probably to make some remarks, I ask that the communication may be printed and lie on the table subject to call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. McCUMBER presented the credentials of ASLE J. GRONNA, chosen by the electors of the State of North Dakota a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1915, which were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 94) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented a petition of 16 citizens of Herrick, S. Dak., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not wish unnecessarily to burden the RECORD with the printing of a number of resolutions or petitions, but as the petitions I now present have reference to the Sheppard-Hobson prohibition amendment now pending before the Senate, I ask to have them printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petitions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BEACH, N. DAK., December 13, 1914.

Mr. A. J. GRONNA, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: I carefully read the resolution below to the Epworth League at our Sunday evening devotional meeting, December 13 instant, and on putting the same to a rising vote the resolution carried with no exception. There were 29 present and voting yes:

"Resolved, That we heartily indorse the Sheppard-Hobson bill for national constitutional prohibition."

Personally I think that there is no more important issue before our Congress upon which it should pass in the affirmative, and I hereby request that you will do all in your power to aid the passage of this bill.

Respectfully, yours,

R. E. WALKER, President.

BEACH, N. DAK., December 14, 1914.

Mr. A. J. GRONNA, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: At a regular Sunday meeting of the members and friends of Beach Methodist Episcopal Church, held Sunday, December 13, the following resolution was carefully read to the congregation:

"Resolved, That we heartily indorse the Sheppard-Hobson bill for national constitutional prohibition now before the United States Congress."

On asking for a rising vote of the congregation, numbering 25 persons, the resolution carried with no exceptions.

I heartily indorse the resolution, and ask that you will do all in your power to make the same effective.

Yours, respectfully,

F. W. GRESS, Pastor.

ELLENDALE, N. DAK., December 14, 1914.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senator from North Dakota.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting held in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Ellendale, N. Dak., a large congregation of people unanimously passed the following resolution:

"That we urgently request our United States Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled to support by vote and all the influence in their power the Sheppard-Hobson resolution for national constitutional prohibition."

The resolution was passed with marked feeling and great enthusiasm.

Yours, respectfully,

G. W. COOPER.

To the United States Senate:

We, the undersigned citizens of Mountain, State of North Dakota, earnestly petition for the speedy passage of Senate joint resolution 88, by Mr. SHEPPARD, of Texas, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for nation-wide prohibition of the beverage traffic in intoxicating liquors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence be granted me from attendance on the sessions of the Senate until the 29th of this month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Colorado will be granted.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 19909. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the business yesterday I gave notice that I would make an effort this morning to have a day certain fixed for the final disposition of the pending unfinished business; and I now ask that on January 4 the bill be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, and that at not later than 3 o'clock on that day the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of amendments without debate and to a final disposition of the bill on that day. I make that request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Gronna	Overman	Smoot
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Page	Sterling
Bryan	James	Perkins	Stone
Burleigh	Johnson	Poindexter	Sutherland
Burton	Jones	Ransdell	Swanson
Camden	Kenyon	Reed	Thomas
Catron	Kern	Robinson	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lane	Root	Thornton
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Townsend
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Sheppard	Walsh
Crawford	Lodge	Sherman	Warren
Culberson	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the Secretary may read the proposed agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Monday, January 4, 1915, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, and that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m. on that day the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill, through the regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I do not think the discussion on this bill has sufficiently advanced to warrant the Senate at this time in arbitrarily fixing a day when we shall proceed to a vote. In view of that circumstance, I must withhold my consent from the request.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have used every means in trying to get a certain day fixed, and in view of the fact that there seems to be a disposition not to allow that,

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States?

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question before the vote is taken. I am not in any wise seeking to delay the consideration of this measure. I shall resort to no obstructive methods to delay its consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am somewhat interested in what may be proceeding, and I should like to hear.

Mr. STONE. I am opposed especially to what is known as the literacy clause or clauses of the bill. There are other provisions in it that I would like to see changed somewhat.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would just like to suggest to the Senator from Missouri, if he wishes to ask me a question, I would be glad to answer, if I am able to do so, but I would prefer that we should now vote upon the motion I have made.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator does not care to hear my question and the reason why I propounded it, I will take my seat.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I will be very glad to hear the question.

Mr. STONE. Then I ask the Senator to restrain his impatience until I propound it. I say that I have some objections to the bill outside of the one to which I have referred. I imagine that the chief objection of all Senators to the measure is predicated upon the provision of the bill relating to the literacy test.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will state his point of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Inasmuch as Senators will not speak so that anyone can hear them except those on the other side of the Chamber, the point of order is that there being a motion to proceed to the consideration of a certain bill debate is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is undoubtedly out of order.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the regular order, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6060? [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the city and is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED.] This announcement may stand for all votes to-day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. On account of his absence I will withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY].

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who has not voted. Consequently I withdraw my vote.

Mr. REED. I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. That pair is effective when either of us is absent from the city. The Senator from Michigan is absent, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. VARDAMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently a moment ago. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the pairs of the following Senators, who are necessarily absent:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—50.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, we have just had a vote on the question of taking up the immigration bill. Yesterday that bill was considered by the Senate, and yet an adjournment was had a little after 4 o'clock. The Senator in charge of the bill has asked this morning for a vote on the measure on the 4th of January. That request was denied. It is known that a vote can not be taken before that time. The matter is to pend before the Senate, as I said yesterday, until an appropriation bill comes before us, when it will be displaced.

I voted against taking up the measure this morning, although I am in favor of an immigration bill. I voted against it because I know that such a bill will not be considered with a view of voting upon it to-day, and I felt that it was proper that a bill which the Senate has several times voted on and has several times expressed itself upon should come up for consideration with a possibility of disposing of it. It was for that reason that I voted "nay" on the motion to take up the immigration bill. I did so in the interest of the business of the Senate, with the hope that something might be done, and with a determination to do as much as I could to prevent the wasting of the time of the Senate on a matter upon which a vote is not expected to-day nor in the immediate future, if at all.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have once or twice given notice that I would submit some remarks on a couple of resolutions. I have postponed my observations for various reasons which have seemed to me satisfactory. I am strongly in favor of the immigration bill, and will be glad to vote for it to-day or to-morrow or at any time when we can get an opportunity to do so. I would not do anything or take any time that would delay the passage of that measure; but it seems there is no prospect of that bill coming to a vote, and I do not believe, if I should take perhaps an hour of the Senate's time to-day, that it would postpone for one moment the final vote on that measure. I am satisfied that the Senator who has charge of the immigration bill is in earnest and is trying to get a vote; but that, of course, is a matter over which he has no control.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will allow me, I am rather of the opinion that the objection to fixing a day certain to vote upon this bill is not evidence of a disposition ultimately to defeat the bill, as indicated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I think that by considering it, in due course of time, after the debate has been exhausted, we will reach a vote.

The Senator from Michigan has said that the bill he has been insisting upon being brought before the Senate is one that has been voted on from time to time. The Senator will not forget that practically the same bill now pending has twice passed the House with an overwhelming vote and twice passed the Senate with an overwhelming vote, so that I am rather of the opinion that the Senate is going to reach a vote on the immigration bill.

Now, if the Senator from Washington will allow me, this is as good a time as any other to serve notice on the Senate that if there shall come a time in the consideration of this bill when there is a movement made to substitute another bill in the position which this bill now occupies, those voting to set aside this bill for any other bill will be voting to defeat the immigration bill, and the country can so understand. This measure is fairly before us on its merits, and if it is defeated it will be defeated by the so-called friends of the measure.

So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to allow those who under the rules of the Senate have given notice that they are going to make speeches not pertinent to the subject under consideration, to proceed; but I would prefer to go on with the debate and allow this bill, which ultimately, in my opinion, is going to reach a vote, to be acted upon as soon as possible.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if he thinks it would delay the ultimate vote on the bill if I should take half an hour of the time of the Senate this morning?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I do not suppose it would, unless that half hour mathematically might be subtracted from the speech-making ability of those who wish to delay the bill.

Mr. JONES. That is what I thought, Mr. President. I am sincerely a friend of the immigration bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will interpose no objection to the Senator proceeding at this time.

DAMS OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JONES. Certainly, if I may be permitted to do so under the rules.

Mr. SHIELDS. Out of order, I desire to report from the Committee on Commerce House bill 16053, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, being Senate bill 6413, and I submit a report (No. 846) thereon. It is a bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 22, 1910.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to call the attention of Senators to a breach of the rule that is becoming more common every day. The Chair refers to the second clause of Rule VII, which provides:

> It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

For the last two or three months there has been absolutely no attention paid to that rule, and the Chair has not had the nerve to enforce it. The report presented by the Senator from Tennessee will be received, without objection; but, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] sometimes says, this will be the last time.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the reason why I desire to consider for a brief time Senate resolution 398 and Senate joint resolution 163 is that I understand the Committee on Rules, which has jurisdiction of these subjects, expects to hold a meeting to-day, and I hope that I may make some suggestions that may aid them or lead them to consider these resolutions. Another reason is that we will have in the Senate the legislative appropriation bill from the House before very long, if it is not here now, and I hope that we will be able, when that bill is under consideration by the Appropriations Committee, to make some provision in it along the lines suggested in these resolutions. This will be fully warranted if the Committee on Rules should report some plan favorably.

One of the resolutions which I have introduced, Senate resolution 398, reclassifies the committees of the Senate, abolishes quite a number of the committees that we now have, and divides the remaining committees into two classes—first class and second class. In the first class there are nine committees, and they are designated as the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the Committee on Public Lands.

In the second class there are 16 committees. As their names appear in the resolution I will not take the time to read them. I think one or two of those committees could be combined, so as to reduce still further the number of committees.

In this resolution I also provide that each Senator shall be a member of one of the first-class committees, but no more, and that no Senator shall be a member of more than two of the second-class committees, and their membership shall not be more than 13.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. JONES. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In making this classification I desire to ask the Senator whether he has proceeded upon the theory of the importance of the work intrusted to the committees or upon the theory of the work that each has to perform?

Mr. JONES. Largely upon the theory of the work the committees have to perform. Before going into the details of this matter I want to submit just a few general observations. In the interest of time I have reduced those observations to writing, because I have observed that where we talk without manuscript we are generally apt to take a great deal more time than we otherwise would take, and I do not want to delay any of these bills by any unnecessary talk.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator grouped the different committees into the classes of which he spoke?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I have just mentioned the committees of the first class, and there are 16 committees of the second class that appear in the resolution. I have not taken the time to read them.

Mr. KENYON. Are there third-class committees?

Mr. JONES. No; there are no third-class committees. The second class is low enough here.

It has been admitted on the floor of the Senate that the present system of committee assignment does not promote the efficient disposition of the business of the Senate, but, in fact, interferes with the proper discharge of our duties. I have heard suggestions of that kind made quite frequently when we were discussing how we might arrange matters so as better to promote the conduct of business in the Senate. Last session the Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, assured me on the floor of the Senate that he would be glad to take up this matter and see if we could not work out some system that would be better than the present one. I did not press the matter last session because of the fact that all our efforts were directed to a certain program, and it was useless to attempt to take up anything else. It has often been admitted that our system of compensation is not fair and just; that is, the compensation of clerks and employees for the assistance of Senators. Changes in individual cases have been made upon appropriation bills; but other changes have been postponed upon the plea that an appropriation bill was not the place to make a general revision, and that it should be taken up by some committee that could give the whole subject due consideration.

I remember that four or five years ago this matter was brought up; some changes were submitted in the appropriation bill, and the then Senator from Montana, Mr. Dixon, brought up the question of making some additional changes with reference to the compensation of the help of Senators. The changes were opposed by the members of the Appropriations Committee on the ground that the appropriation bill was not the proper place to take up the matter, that it ought to be taken up in a general and comprehensive way and when we had more time to consider it and when it could be considered by some committee. That is one reason why I take it up in this way, so that it may get the consideration of the committee having proper charge of it, and then maybe submitted to the proper appropriations committee.

It has been suggested that this would be done during vacation time. Nothing has been done. Now, I am proposing that it shall be done in time to take effect at the beginning of the Sixty-fourth Congress. Probably it would be better to have it take effect on the 1st of July, the beginning of the current fiscal year, because the appropriations for help to Senators have already been made running up to the 30th of June. I have submitted propositions covering both subjects, the classification of committees and the number and compensation of their help. The committee may suggest something better. It doubtless will. There is no excuse for not acting, and, so far as I can, I am going to insist upon action of some kind before this session closes.

So far as clerical help for Senators is concerned I can not be accused of selfish motives in pressing this question, because very likely I will be the beneficiary of the present system in the next Congress if no change is made. Older Senators would be better able to suggest a revision of the present system than I, but they are either satisfied with it or too busy with other things to give it any attention. At least, they have not seemed to take an interest in it. Those on the Committee on Rules, to which both of these resolutions have been referred, are fully qualified by experience and service to take up this matter, and I feel sure can be depended upon to do it. I want to offer a few suggestions to be considered by them in connection with these two resolutions.

A Senator's clerical help is not given to him as a perquisite or to furnish a place to reward some political friend, although the discussion that has been had heretofore with reference to this matter would really give some basis for the idea of this kind that seems to be prevalent among some of our people. It is provided to enable him to discharge efficiently his official duties, and should be sufficient and ample for that purpose. Members of the Senate have been said to be ambassadors from sovereign States. This is true; and if true, then they are equal in dignity and rights. Whether as the representative of a sovereign State or as the representative of the people of the United States, every Senator is the equal of every other Senator; and the people whom he directly represents are entitled to have their representative treated with the same consideration as any other Senator, so far as the official action of the Senate is concerned.

Senators, by preeminent ability and long service, may attain special prominence among their colleagues, but as Senators of sovereign States they are upon an entire equality.

Every Senator, new or old, needs certain assistance at all times. With the development of our country and the diversity of governmental activities, Senators have been compelled to do more and more of what is called "errand-boy" work. The distribution of documents and seeds, securing positions for constituents, calling on departments regarding individual claims and requests, looking after appropriations for this project and that, the adjustment of forest-reserve disputes, public-land claims and Indian depredations, the establishment of lighthouses, the location of fish hatcheries, looking after pensions, and a multitude of other matters of purely local importance are not the matters that should take the time and attention of a United States Senator; but they can not be neglected. His time, experience, and ability should largely be given to the study and solution of the many questions that affect the prosperity, welfare, and happiness of the people of the entire country. He can not neglect these matters of detail; but he should be as free from them as possible, and able to give that ability and statesmanship which each must be assumed to have to the solution of questions of real statesmanship, instead of routine.

In my judgment every Senator should have a secretary of splendid ability, wide experience, and such training as not only to be able to supervise and largely take care of matters of detail that come from individual constituents, but he should also be able to assist in research and preparation in connection with the many legislative matters that come to the attention of the Senator. Such a salary should be provided as will command the services of such a secretary, who should be with the Senator in his State as well as at Washington City, and he should be given a sufficient salary to take care of his expenses of travel, or a separate provision should be made for them, so that he can go to and from his home and the Capital whenever it is necessary to attend the sessions of Congress. It would be well for such a secretary to be a stenographer; but in any event he should have to assist him some one of almost equal ability and experience who should be a stenographer, and should command a salary commensurate with his duties and the ability required.

Every Senator needs this help at all times, whether Congress is in session or not, if he gives to his office the attention that he ought to give. From my experience I believe two such assistants are sufficient when Congress is not in session. During that time the secretary could be with the Senator at home, and the assistant could be here to attend to those matters which come up at all times and need personal attention. It may be that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would need additional help. If so, that can be provided under the terms of the resolution; but I do believe that as a general rule a Senator can get along very well, when Congress is not in session, with a secretary and assistant secretary, one with him in his home and the other here at Washington City, whether the chairman of a committee or not.

When Congress is in session every Senator needs more help, and should have another assistant whose work is almost entirely stenographic and clerical in character. The assistant secretary and other help can well be taken from Washington City or near by. The Secretary should be from the Senator's State, and should be personally familiar with local conditions, needs, and people. This help is absolutely necessary if a Senator would do what the people have a right to expect of him. The people will not object to the expense necessary if they know and understand what it is for. They want their agents to have whatever assistance is necessary for them to do their work and look after their needs properly. Of course if a Senator does not need the extra help when Congress is in session he need not use it.

The method followed for providing assistance for Senators brings reproach and discredit upon us rather than what we provide. It gives the people just cause to look upon the Senate as an extravagant body and gives color to the suggestion which is often made that clerical help is a species of petty graft.

We probably spend plenty of money for clerical help to Senators, but we do it in such a way as to work grave injustice to clerks, sully the dignity of Senators, and bring reproach upon the Senate.

We do by a subterfuge—and I do not think we can class it as anything else—what we ought to do openly and boldly. Because we do by a subterfuge, we do unfairly and unjustly. We think we are deceiving the people when we only discredit ourselves and the Senate.

Admitting the need of Senators for more help with better pay, but apparently afraid to provide it directly, we have created many absolutely useless and do-nothing committees, with high-sounding names, and provided them with clerks, stenographers, and messengers, and then assigned Senators to them and permitted the chairman to name the employees. As we all know, as the country is beginning to know, and as I am going to show, these committees have nothing to do and do nothing. They are simply a subterfuge to furnish more help to Senators at increased pay. If it worked justly and fairly, something might be said in its favor; but it is a system of unfairness, injustice, discrimination, inefficiency, and extravagance, and exemplifies the party spoils system in its worst form.

We have not provided a chairmanship for every Senator, and so some Senators are outside the pale of the beneficence of this subterfuge. The chairmanships are under the control of the majority in the Senate. The majority take to themselves the fruits of the subterfuge, these fraudulent positions, and so the Senator who belongs to the majority has more help, with better pay, than the Senator who belongs to the minority.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is not the Senator wrong about that since the passage of his resolution, which gave three clerks to each Senator, whether of the majority or the minority side?

Mr. JONES. No. I am going to point that out directly.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committees that do nothing, as the Senator says, have the same clerks as those that have something to do, and no more, as I understand.

Mr. JONES. They have the same in number, but they get greater pay for doing nothing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Only a few of them do.

Mr. JONES. Oh, every clerk of a committee gets $2,240, I think, while the clerks of Senators, who do just as much work, get only $2,000. You have a messenger to each of these do-nothing committees, who gets $1,440—at least, most of them do—while a messenger to a Senator who has no committee gets only $1,200. There is the injustice of it. There is no justification at all for it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to say, in that connection, that I think the clerk of a Senator who is chairman of a committee like the Committee on Public Lands, and has to act ex officio as the clerk of that committee, has a great deal more work to do than the secretary of a Senator who is not chairman of such a committee.

Mr. JONES. Why, of course. The Senator has not read my resolutions or understood my remarks thus far. I recognize that and provide for it. I expect I increase the salary of the clerk of the Public Lands Committee by my resolution. I do not reduce any salary now paid, unless possibly that of the clerk of the Appropriations Committee. I do raise some, and during the recesses I abolish some entirely.

Mr. MYERS. I thought the Senator said that one secretary or clerk of a Senator had as much to do as another.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. MYERS. I misunderstood the Senator, then.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to remind the Senator that he accomplished while he was in the minority what we could not accomplish when we were in the minority.

Mr. JONES. You could have accomplished it if you had tried.

Mr. OVERMAN. We tried. We did all we could.

Mr. JONES. Never on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, we did on appropriation bills. We tried to get additional clerks, and could not do it; but the Senator succeeded in doing it.

Mr. JONES. You did not try like I did. You took it up when a point of order could be made against your efforts, and when it was made you stopped.

Mr. OVERMAN. Since the Senator's party has been in the minority the majority has given him his clerks, and all other Senators who are not chairmen; whereas we, when we were in the minority for 12 years or more, had only two clerks.

Mr. JONES. That does not justify the continuance of the condition. I am not blaming the majority here. I am willing to admit that the Republicans followed this system, and that it was an unjust system then, as it is an unjust system now. If you should look at it in that way, one criticism I have of the majority is that they are undoing all the good things the Republicans did and leaving the bad things to continue in force and effect. This is one of the bad things, and no party is responsible for it. We ought to get rid of it. If we denied Senators the help they needed when we were in power, we did not do right. If we gave to our clerks more pay because we were the chairmen of nominal, useless committees, it was unfair, and you do not act wisely to follow our mistakes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator made the statement that the clerks of these committees had no more to do than the clerk of a Senator. Of course they do on some of the committees.

Mr. JONES. Oh, some of them; yes.

Mr. KENYON. Now, the clerk of the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments must have a great deal to do.

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that I saw something about that, where it was reported that while there was some business done by that committee, the Senators did it.

Mr. KENYON. The Senators did the business of the committee?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I may be mistaken.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume that was because the clerk was overworked.

Mr. JONES. It may be that the clerk had to strike the match to touch off the papers.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator ought not to overlook one point, and that is this: A Senator may have an unimportant committee as chairman. He has no personal clerk. He has only the committee clerk. In the meantime he is serving, perhaps, on the most laborious committees of the body. He is serving a constituency that are calling on him repeatedly and urgently. So to pass it over lightly, with the statement that a committee of less importance does not need a clerk, or that he has nothing to do, hardly covers the case, I think.

Mr. JONES. Why, Mr. President, the Senator overlooks what I am trying to point out, and that is this: These clerks are nominally committee clerks, but they are in fact Senators' clerks, and intended as such. We ought to give the Senators all the help they need, but let us not use a fraudulent way to do it. Let us not use a subterfuge to do it, because that is all in the world that it is. We give more pay to the clerk of one Senator because he is the chairman of a certain committee; and the trouble with the Senator's suggestion—I am going to refer to that further in just a little bit—is that it does not really work out in the way he suggests.

There are Senators who have just appeared in this body who do not have any more business than the Senator from Wyoming, yet their clerks and their messengers are getting more than his clerks and messengers are getting. I believe I can hardly say that, however, because the Senator from Wyoming benefits, as he ought to, from the present system. He ought to get more help. He benefits from this system, and his clerks get the same pay as those of the Senator who has just come in, but there are many of long service whose clerks do not get the pay of clerks of Senators who have just come into the Senate. I am going to notice these various points a little further on, however.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to suggest, if I do not interrupt the Senator as he goes along——

Mr. JONES. It is no interruption at all.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to suggest that the plan I have always felt should be followed is this: It is no new matter with me. It seems to me the best way would be to give every Senator a clerk as a Senator, and at a sufficient figure to obtain the best talent, and then give to each committee such clerks as the work of that committee requires, and no more. That would give each Senator one clerk, we might say, at a high salary, and such assistance as he needed in the way of stenographer or messenger as in the House of Representatives. There each Member has a clerk. He does not appear in the records as a committee clerk at all. For that matter, the Member of the House spends the money as he sees fit. He simply has to make affidavit that the money has been expended for services. If we should change the plan, I think that is a better plan—to have Senators' clerks and then committee clerks, who perhaps would be interchangeable as to the work they would do, yet it would make a more equitable distribution, I think.

Mr. JONES. I think there is very much merit in that except I am not in favor, and I do not believe the Senator would be in favor, of making an allowance for Senators' clerks on the same basis they do in the House. I think they ought to be Senate employees all right, and whatever pay we provide for them should go to them.

Mr. WARREN. I will not go into it, but——

Mr. JONES. I do not want to go into it further, either.

Mr. WARREN. It might seem like criticism, but I will say that I have always advocated a different plan.

Mr. JONES. I am glad to know that, and it is a good suggestion for the members of the Committee on Rules to consider. I think it is a good one, and the logical and natural way would be to provide a Senator with his help as the Senator suggests, and then whatever committee help is necessary to provide that. That would be all right. That is really the logical and just and fair way to do it, however. The difficulty, however, is in separating committee work from the work of the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to call the Senator's attention to another very interesting matter that he ought to point out.

Mr. JONES. That is what I want. I want all these matters to be brought out.

Mr. OVERMAN. Some Senator comes in and says that he has not help enough, and he offers a resolution to pay $1,200 or $1,500 for an extra clerk, and the Senate generally passes it. I think that is a matter that ought to be rearranged. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we amended the rule under the Senator's resolution so as to give clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees.

Mr. JONES. The Senator is right. We pass these resolutions too easily. I will cover that suggestion a little further on, too, more fully.

It matters not that a Senator comes from a State great in population, great in resources, and diverse in local interests; it matters not that he may have been a Senator for years or may have served his State in the House of Representatives with distinguished ability for many years; the simple fact that he belongs to the minority places him and his clerks on a different and lower basis from that of his colleague who has just entered the Senate, but who happens to belong to the majority.

Recognizing this manifest injustice, the subterfuge has been slightly broadened so as to include some of the minority. A further favored class has been created, and 15 or 20 Senators are singled out for special favor because they may have served a little longer than some one else or because their names happen to begin with "A" instead of "J."

Mr. TOWNSEND. Or "T."

Mr. JONES. Well, "J" under this would have the advantage of "T."

To my mind nothing more discreditable to the Senate has grown up than this unjust system. We owe it to ourselves, as well as to the people, to do away with it as soon as possible, and especially so as there is an easy way to do it.

Mr. President, it has been suggested from time to time that the length of service of Senators is the reason for providing these additional committees, so that they may have a chairmanship. That excuse may have existed at one time. It is not followed now. It does not seem to have very much weight now. What do we find? We find on the floor of the Senate now from one State a certain Senator who has served six years and from that same State another Senator who has served four years. The clerk of the first Senator gets $2,000 and the clerk of the other Senator gets $2,220. The stenographer of the Senator who has been here six years gets $1,200. The stenographer of the Senator who has been here four years gets $1,440. Length of service does not seem to cut any figure in that case.

There is another State in the same situation. There is another State that has a Senator who is closing his six-year term. Another Senator has just started on the second part of his term. He has been here two years and the other Senator four. The one Senator's clerk gets $2,220 and the other Senator's clerk gets $2,000. One Senator's messenger or assistant clerk gets $1,440 and the other Senator's messenger or assistant clerk gets $1,200. That is not right. It is not in accordance with length of service. It is not in accordance with the excuse that has been given with reference to the reason for these different salaries.

Then we have this also: We have here a Senator who has been here 2 years. Another Senator—the great Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]—has been here for 24 years. Their clerks gets the same salary, $2,220. The Senator from Wyoming has been here for 24 years. He was the chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations and presided over it with ability as well as with dignity.

What now is the situation by reason of this arrangement of committees? The Senator from Wyoming is now chairman of the very active Committee on Engrossed Bills, that I presume never has a meeting, that has nothing to do as a committee. The Senator from Wyoming is entitled to more help, in my judgment, than a Senator who has been here only a couple of years, whether he belongs to the minority or the majority. Yet his help gets exactly the same pay as that of the Senator who has been here for two years.

In this connection I will notice another phase of this system. It seems to me to be rather amusing and rather undesirable that a Senator who should have been at one time the chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations should by reason of the mutation of politics and the changes in this body be placed at the head of an insignificant committee like the Committee on Engrossed Bills. It would be more consistent with the dignity of a Senator when he retires from the chairmanship of the great Committee on Appropriations that he should simply take his place as a Senator on this floor rather than that he should be placed at the head of an insignificant nominal committee.

Another Senator—the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who has been here for twenty-odd years—was the chairman of the great Committee on Commerce in the Senate. He presided there with ability and with great efficiency. He is now chairman of the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes, a committee that never has any meetings, that never has anything to do with the Five Civilized Tribes or with civilizing any tribe, for that matter. It is simply a committee which exists for the purpose of providing a clerk with a little more pay. The clerk of that Senator ought to have $2,220, and probably more, a year, but he ought to have it because he is the clerk of that great Senator—not because that Senator is the chairman of such an insignificant and unimportant committee, a committee that never has a meeting, a committee to which no bills are ever referred, a committee that never submits any report to the Senate—absolutely a nominal and a useless committee.

The great Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was the chairman of the Committee on Finance. He came to the Senate in 1897. He is now the chairman of the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress. A few days ago he was pleading for something for his committee to do—for something to be referred to it. I suppose the plea was made in a rather sarcastic way and not seriously, because this committee is not expected to do anything.

I am satisfied of the fact that we do not need any such committee as that, and we ought not to use it for the purpose of increasing the pay of clerks to Senators who do the Senators' work and who have absolutely nothing to do as committee clerks.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] was the chairman of the great Committee on Interstate Commerce. He presided over it with great ability and great knowledge and great efficiency. Under this system he becomes the head of the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures. I think there was one bill referred to that committee; I doubt if any more than that in this whole Congress. I know about that bill, because I introduced it myself. The committee was polled and the bill was reported to the Senate. There was no work devolved upon the committee by reason of its being a committee. There is no necessity for such a committee as that.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] was at the head of the great Committee on the Judiciary. He has been in the Senate since 1895. If length of service entitles Senators' clerks to more pay, then his clerk ought to have more pay; yet he gets the same as that of a Senator on the minority here who has served for two years. He is now the head of the great Committee on the Geological Survey. I venture to say that no surveys have been made, no surveys have been contemplated, no surveys have been examined, no propositions for surveys have been considered by the committee. Those things are taken care of by appropriations in the proper appropriation bill. It is simply a nominal committee that really has no excuse for its existence.

Then the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] was the chairman of the great Committee on Military Affairs. Now, with the change in the control of the Senate, he is chairman of the Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, a committee that might, if it could just reduce the price of meat to a great many people of the country, command great acclaim and great applause; and if there was any hope of doing it, the people would be writing to it from all over the country and there might be a good deal of business for it. It is an inactive committee, one that has nothing to do, and which is not expected to do anything.

Then the great Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who is soon going to leave this body, and who has been here since 1893, was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. He presided over that committee with marked ability. He is now the chairman of the Committee on Railroads. That name might mean a good deal to the people of the country. Railroads are a very important matter, yet that committee has nothing to do with the railroads of the country. There are no propositions coming before it. Those matters are taken care of by the other great committees of the Senate. The Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Interstate Commerce deal with the great subject of transportation.

So it is with a great many of the Senators in this body who have been here the longest, who have had the longest length of service, who have had the greatest experience, and who would be expected to have the greatest amount of business by reason of their service here. They are given these insignificant committees not because it honors them or they honor the committees, but simply for the purpose of giving their help a little more pay. The help ought to have more pay, but it ought not to be given in that sort of a way.

The size of a State is not taken into account. The imperial State of New York is not given the consideration that is given to the great State of Delaware. The great Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], completing the close of his first term in this body, after having served with great honor and distinction as Secretary of State, closes his term with his clerk receiving only $2,000 a year, while the clerks of Senators from a great State like Delaware and other States of equal importance are getting larger pay, although they certainly do not do more work. Certainly it is unjust and unfair and unworthy of the Senate of the United States to allow such a system. There is not any question but that the help of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], who has just entered this body, ought to have this salary, but there is no reason why the clerk of the great Senator from New York should not receive the pay that ought to come to the service that is demanded.

Then, length of service in the House of Representatives before coming here is not taken into account at all. We find that Senators on this floor who for years have served in the House of Representatives, who occupied prominent positions there, when by reason of that service demands are brought on their time and their attention and their ability in this body, do not receive any consideration for it. We have some of those Senators who are closing their terms here, and yet their clerks get only $2,000 a year, while clerks of Senators just coming in who have served two years and never have been in the House of Representatives are getting $2,220.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only entered the Chamber when the Senator from Washington was referring to my State; I do not know in what connection. I did not catch it. He seemed to make some reference to me personally.

Mr. JONES. Not at all. I simply suggested that the size of the States do not seem to be taken into account in fixing the salaries of clerks of Senators. I simply said that from the great State of New York there is a Senator just closing a six-year term, where the clerk gets $2 000 a year, while from the great State of Delaware the Senator's clerk gets $2,220. I said that the clerk of the Senator from Delaware was no doubt entitled to $2,220, and he ought to have it, but that it is fair to assume that the clerk of the Senator from the great State of New York has at least as much business to do as the clerk of the Senator from Delaware, and he ought to receive better compensation than he now receives.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator has explained in what respect he was addressing the Senate. It does not seem to me that the triviality of the subject needs any attention from me.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator will agree with my position in regard to it. There are 33 committees of the Senate with absolutely nothing to do. I have written to the clerks——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think that under our system of government there is a reason why a Senator or a Member of the House belonging to the majority party—I do not mean the majority party in the Senate or in the House necessarily, but the party that controls the Executive Department of the Government, the administration—ought to have more clerical assistance than those who are in the minority?

Mr. JONES. I think probably so.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that it would be only fair to make a distinction. I have had experience both ways, as I presume the Senator has had.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. He knows that as to the party which has control of patronage, whether the Senator believes it is right or wrong is not material here; whether he believes there ought to be a change or not is not material; the fact remains that the party having control of patronage makes it necessary for a Representative or a Senator belonging to that party to devote a great deal of time to patronage considerations. Whether he likes it or not he can not get away from it.

Mr. JONES. There is no question about that.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me it is not unfair as long as we have that system of government to give to the majority Member more clerical assistance than to the minority.

Mr. JONES. I am not complaining of that. It is the way we are doing it; that is all.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has pointed out the difference, and some of the differences he has pointed out are very glaring, of course; he has told us that it was not on account of one Senator being here longer than another; that it was not on account of a Senator representing a larger or more populous State than another Senator, but he has not said anything about the real reason that I presume has been the cause in some instances.

Mr. JONES. Of course that may have been the basis in the first instance for allowing this increased pay for the clerks, and there is some reason for it, as the Senator says; but if we do it and recognize that, then we ought to recognize it in a fair way and recognize it on that basis, and not in the roundabout way we do. If we act on that, we should pay the clerks of all majority Senators so much and the clerks of all minority Senators so much. What we ought to do to meet that would be to allow some additional help and not greater pay.

Then we have to consider this point: While it is true that a Senator belonging to the majority has much more to do with reference to filling the offices from his State, length of service, as was suggested by the Senator from Wyoming, also adds to a Senator's duties here, even if he is in the minority. So we ought to take into account not only the fact that a Senator belongs to the minority in fixing the pay of his clerks, but we ought to take also into account, in order to be just, the length of service of the Senator in this body. Of course we can not devise any system that will work absolute justice in these various cases, but we can put them on a fair basis, at any rate.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that we ought to make any discrimination in regard to length of service?

Mr. JONES. I do not believe we can do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to suggest that it would be absolutely impracticable and that we ought not to attempt to do it.

Mr. JONES. I think that is right.

Mr. NORRIS. Nor do I believe it would be practicable to make a distinction on account of the size of a State.

Mr. JONES. No; I think not.

Mr. NORRIS. We can not get absolute justice.

Mr. JONES. That is what I have just suggested.

Mr. NORRIS. We ought to get as near to it as we can, but we ought to do it by some general rule.

Mr. JONES. That is what I have suggested, and I base my suggestion on my experience here as a Senator. I have been in the majority here, and I am now in the minority.

So far as I am concerned, my work is greater now than it was when I was in the majority. Why that is so I am not prepared to say. I think probably the fact that my State is growing has something to do with it; it is increasing in population. More people write me about various matters in the State than did previously, because there are more people there to write; it may be because of my long service and getting better acquainted with the people that more of them write to me, and all that sort of thing, but I recognize that we can not take all that into account. Therefore I have suggested in the first part of my remarks that we ought to give to each Senator a clerk as a Senator from an independent sovereign State, and fix the salary at a certain amount, making it uniform, because I do not care how long a Senator has been here or whether or not he is in the minority or the majority, his secretary has all he can do. If he is the right kind of a secretary, he ought to be properly paid. So we ought to assume that the secretary of every Senator here should be on the same basis and get exactly the same pay. If more work comes in, it may be necessary to give additional help. I have provided for an assistant clerk. Then I have provided in my resolution that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate should have authority to provide for additional help while Congress is in session. In that way I think we could work it out fairly well.

I was going on to say, however, that there are 33 committees with absolutely nothing to do, with no excuse for their existence, and the matter embraced in their titles is covered largely by other committees. Those committees ought to be abolished. That does not mean that the clerical help of Senators should be abolished or that their pay should be reduced; not at all. As has been suggested here, we should give them the pay to which they are entitled because they are the clerks of Senators and not because they are clerks of committees which have nothing to do.

There are 13 committees to which a very few bills are referred once in a while. I now have in mind the Committee on Irrigation, of which I was chairman when the Republicans were in the majority in the Senate. We had quite a number of bills referred to that committee, and yet, taking it year in and year out, there was practically no business as committee business coming to the clerk. The work of that committee can well be discharged by the Committee on Public Lands, which does most of such business anyway.

I was also chairman of the Committee on Industrial Expositions while the question of the Panama Exposition was pending. That was the only question that came before the committee; and that took but very little of the time of the secretary as secretary to the committee; it practically amounted to nothing.

I was at one time chairman of the Committee on Fisheries. I have been going around on all these insignificant committees pretty fast. There were a good many bills referred to the Committee on Fisheries—bills providing for fish hatcheries—but most of those bills had been previously acted on. We held some meetings and reported those bills; but so far as the clerical work coming to my secretary as the clerk of the Committee on Fisheries was concerned, it amounted to practically nothing. I know that the present chairman of that committee attends to the business of the committee most carefully and closely, and that quite a number of bills have been referred to that committee. They are considered and acted upon; and yet, as a committee, its work amounts to practically nothing. That committee, however, the Committee on Irrigation, and some other committees, have something referred to them. The Committee on Mining, for instance, has some bills referred to it; and yet we find that important measures referred to that committee are taken away from it and given to the Committee on Public Lands. So I propose to do away with the Committee on Irrigation and the Committee on Mining, and that their business shall be done by the Committee on Public Lands. Then there are five committees of even greater importance than those to which I have referred for the existence of which there is some excuse, but which, as a matter of fact, furnish but very little work to their clerks as clerks of committees and can well be merged in other committees.

So far as I can figure it, the expense to the Senate under the system that I propose would be less than it now is. Assuming that the Senate will be in session on an average of six months in a year, and that we should have an additional stenographic force for the Senators during that time, the expense, as I figure it, would be about $460,770. My recollection is that we are appropriating for this purpose in the pending legislative bill something over $500,000. So it would leave a margin by which the necessity for extra help while the Senate is in session could be taken care of.

I have provided for the Committee on Appropriations only a clerk, an assistant clerk, a stenographer, and a messenger. They now have more help than that, and it might be that when the Senate is in session they would need more help. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, however, can take care of that.

Mr. President, there is another reason that I want to suggest why there should be a rearrangement of these committees, and especially a classification into a first and second class and a limitation as to the service of Senators upon these committees.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to suggest to the Senator—I do not know but he may have covered it in his proposed rearrangement—that I believe and have advocated for a great many years that a committee of the Senate should be created, composed of the chairmen of the committees which handle appropriations, to the end that they might take appropriations in the aggregate and determine the amount that could be placed to the credit of each department, just as a business concern would do. After pressing that for several years, the then leader of the Senate agreed to it, but instead of limiting it to the chairmen of the committees having appropriation bills he added four or five other members to it. Then, at the very first meeting of the committee he divided it up again into subcommittees, which, of course, put us right back where we started. I trust the Senator in pressing this matter in reference to committees may see proper before he gets through to urge the creation of a committee of that kind.

There is no business enterprise on earth that would permit the heads of the various departments of their business to determine how much they should have. They would make their estimates, and then a board passing upon the entire subject would say, "We can allow so much for this and so much for that, and the work must be harmonized to that allowance." I believe that it would save at least 25 per cent of our appropriations if they could first come under one general committee, so that then the chairmen of the respective committees could say to their committees, "It will do you no particular good to pile up appropriations here, because it has been agreed that this department or this function must content itself with such a proportion of the entire revenues of the Government."

I make the suggestion to the Senator in the hope that he may see it in his way before he gets through to incorporate it in some manner in his proposed plan.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that I have not taken up that subject. I recognize its importance, and I agree very much with what the Senator has said. It seems to me, however, that a committee of that kind would have to be a joint committee of the two Houses.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, Mr. President, it would be a great deal better if it could be a joint committee; but if they will not begin it in the House, we might take the initiative here. The trouble is that the appropriation bills are made up in the other House; they come here, and there is a tendency to keep adding to them. The chairman of the committee would be powerless unless he had back of him the coordinated purpose of a number of Senators, each situated in a similar relation. Then he might say to his committee, "We can have so much and no more." While that would not accomplish what a joint committee would accomplish, it would effect a great saving and reduction in appropriations.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think that is true, but I did not feel that I had had service and experience here long enough to suggest a proposition of that kind. I simply wanted to suggest some way by which the committees of the Senate as we now have them might promote the efficient work of each committee in the Senate without taking up that great subject. I should like to see something of that kind done. If the Committee on Rules should bring in something of that sort in connection with these resolutions, I should be very glad, and should also be glad to render any assistance that I possibly can in connection with it. I know the Senator from Minnesota could give some very valuable suggestions with reference to that matter. I think it is very important; I think it would save to the Government probably many millions of dollars a year if we could get some committee like that and give it the power to enforce whatever it decided upon.

Mr. President, I have provided in resolution No. 398 that the committees of the first class "shall consist of not to exceed 11 members each and shall be so constituted that each Member of the Senate shall be a member of one of said committees, and no more."

We have had during the last year or two especially, and before that time, too, great difficulty in keeping a quorum on the floor of the Senate, and I remember that at one time during the last session there was an order passed revoking the permission theretofore granted allowing committees to sit while the Senate was in session. The reason for that was that so many Senators were members of so many different committees which were holding meetings that it was almost impossible for us to maintain a quorum on the floor of the Senate. I think we can see the evidence of that now.

Frequently when there have been but few Senators on the floor of the Senate and a roll call has been had, Senators come in and say, "We are in attendance on committees which are holding meetings." I think one of the things that makes our body inefficient is the fact that so many Senators are upon so many important committees that they can not attend to the business of those committees without neglecting the business of the Senate.

Furthermore, I do not see how they can give to the various subjects that come before those various committees the attention which those subjects ought to have; and yet we know that in this body, as in all other legislative bodies, we must depend very largely upon the reports made from the different committees upon various matters of legislation. No Senator can acquaint himself thoroughly with the various important matters that come before this body. We must of necessity depend upon the report and the judgment reached by members of committees having particular subjects in charge.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. At that point, if the Senator will pardon me, I want to emphasize the statement he has made. In the committees, because of their membership being so large, the same difficulty in securing a quorum exists as is experienced on the floor of the Senate. It is almost impossible to keep a quorum of a committee. Senators will come to a commitee meeting and say "I have had three or four committee meetings this morning." The committees are too large; Senators are on too many committees; and a lot of the work of the committees has to be done largely by the proxies of those who can not be there. I do not believe there is a suggestion the Senator has made more vital than the proposition to reduce the membership of the committees, so that those who serve on the different committees can attend properly to the work incident to committee service. If I may be allowed, I want to congratulate the Senator on having brought that matter up, for I believe it is one of the most vital features of his entire plan.

Mr. JONES. I think that is true. That goes really to the fundamentals of legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course.

Mr. JONES. The other is more of a financial matter, but this does go to the fundamentals of legislation. Every Senator no doubt has had the experience of attending a committee meeting and having some other Member telephone over that he could be counted to make a quorum if necessary; or some Senator would come into the committee for the purpose of being counted to make a quorum, saying, "I must go to another committee meeting;" or, "I have two committee meetings this morning;" and so on. We have even passed a resolution through this body authorizing less than a quorum to constitute a quorum of a committee, for the very purpose of enabling the committees to do their work and transact their business. So I have provided in this rule not only that Senators shall not serve upon more than one of the first-class committees, but that they shall not serve upon more than two of the second-class committees. That would permit a Senator to be upon three committees, if it were necessary, and that is enough. A Senator would be far better off, we would have better legislation, and the Senate could rely with greater surety upon the reports of the committees if we diminished the membership of committees and also enforced the limitation as to Members serving on more than three committees.

In looking into the matter, I find that one Senator, for instance, serves on the Committee on Claims, the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Pensions, and the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, every one an active committee having great and important subjects coming before it and having frequent meetings. No Senator, no matter how great his ability may be, no matter how great his industry may be, can give the subjects that come before those various committees the consideration and study and thought which they ought to have, and when reports come from those various committees they can not have the same weight with this body and we can not rely upon them as we could if the committees were limited in membership and Senators were enabled to give to the various subjects that come before them the attention they ought to have.

I find that another Senator serves on the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Public Lands, and the Committee on Territories. Another Senator is a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Immigration, the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and the Committee on Pensions. Another Senator is a member of the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and the Committee on Military Affairs, committees not only dealing with great subjects of general legislation, but with great appropriation measures involving the expenditure of millions and millions of money.

I find that another Senator serves on the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Immigration, the Committee of the Judiciary, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on Rules. Another Senator is a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Interstate Commerce, every one of those committees having questions coming before it that could well engage the attention of a Senator almost all the time.

I find that another Senator serves on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Committee on Finance, the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and the Committee on Rules. It is not possible for a Senator to deal with and carefully digest all the various questions and problems that come before those various committees; and I trust that if the Committee on Rules does not do anything with this resolution further than to provide for changes in that respect, it will do that much, because, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has said, that is a matter which goes to the very fundamentals of legislation. If we had our committees made up in that sort of way, then the Senate could more safely rely upon reports from committees.

Very frequently now committees bring in reports, as the Senator from Minnesota has suggested, without a quorum being present, but by counting Senators as present to make a quorum or by taking a poll. Of necessity many Senators must attach very great importance to the truth and verity of committee reports, and many bills go through this body because Senators believe that they have a right to trust in the judgment, the experience, the investigation, and the study which the committees have given to the various measures.

Mr. President, I have taken more time than I intended with reference to this matter. I have simply made suggestions which I hope the Committee on Rules will consider. As I have said, they are all Senators of experience, greater experience than I, and longer service in this body than I, and they, no doubt, can suggest ways of improving the resolution; but I do hope that something will be done. I think something ought to be done. I think in fairness to ourselves, in fairness to the Senate, in fairness to our employees, that some of the insignificant committees should be abolished and the salaries placed upon a fair, open basis, and especially that the committees should be reorganized and we should provide for the limited membership suggested here and also the limited service upon the various committees of the Senate. Earnest, careful, prompt attention will surely bring forth a plan that will treat Senators as equals, and then help fairly and justly and provide openly for that assistance which will enable them to discharge most efficiently the responsible duties of their great office.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of alines to and the residence of alines in the United States.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I raise the point of order of the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Hardwick	Page	Smoot
Bryan	James	Perkins	Stone
Burton	Johnson	Pittman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones	Poindexter	Swanson
Chilton	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thomas
Clapp	La Follette	Reed	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Shafroth	Thornton
Crawford	Lewis	Sheppard	Townsend
Culberson	Lippitt	Sherman	Vardaman
Dillingham	McCumber	Shields	Weeks
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	White
Fletcher	Norris	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the pending immigration bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to take a little time on that amendment.

The amendment as finally perfected and as it is now offered reads as follows:

> That the following classes of persons, when otherwise qualified for admission under the laws of the United States, shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious, political, or racial persecution, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by discriminatory laws or regulations.

It is proposed by the amendment to insert in the text of the bill, after the word "persons," in the sixth line on page 9, the words "when otherwise qualified for admission under the laws of the United States," and after the word "religious," in the eleventh line on page 9, to insert the words "political or racial," so that the clause would read as above stated.

The amendment would broaden the provision as contained in the text of the bill by putting persons seeking admission because of political or racial persecution on terms of equality with persons asking admission on the ground of religious persecution. That is to say, all persons embraced in any of the three classes would be exempted from the literacy test; but, to guard against any possible admission of undesirable immigrants who might be excluded under other provisions of law, the following words are proposed to be inserted: "when otherwise qualified for admission under the laws of the United States."

Mr. President, I think I said on day before yesterday all I need or care to say with respect to the proposed amendment. I then addressed myself to the exceptions proposed in the bill and in this amendment to the literacy test, seeking to broaden the exceptions so as to embrace persons persecuted for political or racial reasons and to put them on an equality with those persecuted for religious reasons, the latter being already excepted from the operation of the literacy test by the terms of the bill as reported.

I wish now to make one or two additional observations intended to have a more special reference to the literacy test in its larger aspects, although incidentally referring to the exceptions also.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a document entitled "Jewish Immigrants," being a report of a special committee of the National Jewish Immigration Council appointed to examine into the question of illiteracy among Jewish immigrants and its causes. That report was presented to the Senate by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] March 24 last, and it has been printed as a Senate document. I wish to read briefly from this document to show how the Jews at least in some foreign countries are persecuted because of their race. I do this to confirm what the chairman of the Immigration Committee of the Senate [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] said in his very interesting speech here the other day, to the effect that in one of the larger countries of northern Europe Jews were discriminated against and persecuted not because of their religious opinions and affiliations, but because of their racial extraction and connection. From this document I will read only an extract or two, as follows:

> Staro Constantinow, Province of Volina: Jewish population, 56.5 per cent. In the years 1909, 1910, and 1911 no Jewish children were admitted to any of the Government schools in that city.

And that in a city where 56½ per cent of the entire population was made up of Jews. Again:

> Proskurow, Province of Podolsk: Jewish population, 80 per cent. The city schools are maintained exclusively by the income derived from the Jewish population. In 1911 not only was admittance refused to Jewish children, but 20 Jewish pupils who had previously attended the Government schools were discharged. In the year 1912 not a single Jewish child was admitted to the Government schools.

This pamphlet of 26 pages is filled with stories of discrimination like these I have read, practiced by the public authorities against this particular race of human beings.

This persecution is practiced against the Jews, not because of their religion but because of their race. The honorable Senator from South Carolina can be quoted in support of that statement, and yet, strange to say, that distinguished Senator is unwilling, and he says the committee over which he presides is unwilling, to add racial persecution to religious persecution as an exception to this literacy test.

Is it persecution to collect from the Jews by force of law one-half or, in one instance, all the taxes needed and expended in support of the public schools and yet refuse their children the right to enjoy the use and benefits of those schools? Would that be called persecution if it were practiced in the District of Columbia or in the State of South Carolina or in the State of Massachusetts? What would the big-hearted, patriotic people of any or of all our States say in answer to that? With one voice our people would proclaim that a policy of that kind was not only persecution, but intolerable and wicked persecution.

Mr. President, when it stands admitted here on the floor of the Senate, even by the chairman of the committee reporting this bill, that these people in this land where these things have occurred and are still occurring are suffering these frightful wrongs solely because of their race, upon what ground, in the name of reason and of humanity, can we open the door to the Jew who can prove that in some other country, perchance, he is persecuted for his religious convictions and practices and at the same time close the door in the face of his brother fleeing from the particular country to which the extracts I have read refer, to escape the bitter persecution leveled at him and his children, not because of his religion, as the Senator from South Carolina said, but because he belongs to this particular race of human beings? If the Senator from South Carolina or any of his confrères on the Immigration Committee can give a reason for this distinction, I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STONE. I will be glad to yield to have the Senator throw light upon this question which so puzzles me.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that on yesterday I attempted to show that the committee, without any discrimination in the application of the bill against the people whom we do admit, if otherwise qualified, applied the test of religion, restricting it solely to that, making it conform to the principle that runs through the whole bill as to restrictions.

We did consider that when an immigrant, not collectively under such a name as Christian or Mohammedan, but the individual, was being persecuted for the faith that was in him, it was testimony of the fact in the minds of the committee of the personal fitness of that individual to come to our shores regardless of the literacy test, for the reason that it was an evidence of the moral fiber that withstood the persecution to such an extent for himself that he sought to escape to a country where he could worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. The Senator from Missouri would not apply that racially in such a way as to throw wide the door to let a race come in without regard to the personnel or the individuals who constitute that race? No matter how superior they may be collectively, we have no right to stand here and allow one race, because they were persecuted as a race, to come in indiscriminately while applying a test by which the immigrant does, in a measure, testify to the faith that is in him.

Mr. STONE. The Senator need not construct a man of straw that he may have a chance of knocking him down. No one who favors this amendment has even suggested that the door should be open to the admission of the Jews because they are Jews, or open it to the admission of any other race of people because they belong to a given race. No such proposition has been made and no such idea is entertained.

The Senator speaks of persecutions directed against the individual immigrant where the persecution is for religious reasons. Mr. President, that part of the bill as it is written, exempting those seeking admission because of religious persecution, says nothing about requiring an immigrant to show that he has been the victim of a special and peculiarly personal attack. Such a thing as that would rarely happen. The bill has no such limitation as that. Under this provision, as it appears in the bill reported, if we found that the Jews, for example, were persecuted generally and universally in a given country—it might be France or Germany; it might be Austria or Russia—and that they were so persecuted universally in their native land because of their religious faith and practice, would not the persecution be leveled against all who professed that faith? And the individual would suffer along with his fellows only because he was a part of the whole. The persecution would not be distinctly and separately personal.

The Senator would not contend for a moment that if one coming to our ports seeking admission to our country, where religious liberty is guaranteed by the Constitution and by the public sentiment of the people, should show to the satisfaction of the immigration officials that he had been persecuted because of his religious faith, that that alone would be sufficient to admit him. No; but he would have to show that he possessed every other requisite required by law. But he would not have to show that the persecution had taken the form of a special personal attack upon him. It would be sufficient if he could show that he suffered in common with all who believed as he did. Does the Senator from South Carolina dispute that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Missouri is too well trained a man to really and seriously produce the parallel that he has just drawn as an argument before this body. It is sufficient to say that the religion or the faith of an individual is a thing over which he has control. The race from which he springs is a thing over which he has no control. Therefore, when we say to him, You can be admitted for religious persecution, we have the right to discriminate amongst the members of a race; but if you say he shall be admitted for racial persecution, you take the whole business regardless of the fitness or qualification of the individual.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. If my colleague will pardon me a moment, the Senator from South Carolina says that a man's religion is something he can control; his race can not. That may be true. Certainly if he was born an Indian or a German or a Jew he could not control that; he did not have enough to do with it in the beginning to control it; but, Mr. President, the Senator says he can control his religion. Of course, the Senator does not mean to intimate that as to those who suffer persecution for conscience's sake, because of the inborn and long-taught religious principles they profess, it might be convenient and politic for them to change their opinion.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No, Mr. President; I do not want that interpretation placed upon what I said. Perhaps my definition was a bit unfortunate. What I meant to say was that a man's religion is personal. I am not entering into the degree to which he might control that conviction, but it is personal. However, the racial characteristics are universal so far as that race is concerned. I am afraid the Senator is going to allow himself to come into a field of admission that he himself later on might not be willing to attempt to sustain; that because of heredity and environment and racial characteristics or the circumstances under which for a period of years he and his forbears have been reared he has no control over those influences that he has absorbed individually through heredity, and therefore that might be an argument that if he was reared under certain circumstances that were absolutely obnoxious to the genius and spirit of our Government he might not be able to be assimilated. So that might be made an argument on the side of those against whom we have been contending.

Mr. STONE. I do not mean to say, of course, that a man who may have been born into and as a part of a certain race and who had acquired his convictions largely by environment can not change his views and his faith. Of course he can, and of course that has been frequently done. But, Mr. President, there is no danger that I shall put myself in a position where I would have to defend a position of the kind the Senator has advanced. The immigrant may come illiterate and say that he is persecuted because of his religious faith, and prove it beyond a doubt to the satisfaction of the officers who are to act upon his application; but that alone does not give him a right to enter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It exempts him.

Mr. STONE. It exempts him from the literacy test, and that is all it does; but if otherwise he is forbidden the right to enter, the other laws will exclude him. Likewise if he comes saying he is persecuted because of his race, and proves it to the satisfaction of the immigration officials, beyond a doubt that alone under the pending amendment, if put in the law, would not entitle him to come in. It would exempt him as in the other case from the literacy test, but if he were otherwise unfit within the purview of the law, he would be excluded; and the same is true of persecution for political reasons.

The Senator from South Carolina speaks about religion as being a part of a man's life, of such a character that he can not divorce himself from it, except by and through some mental process which convinces him that his faith is not well founded, or else he disavows it and becomes an apostate for some selfish reason. Mr. President, I am fully aware of what religious convictions and feelings amount to with our human kind, whatever the faith may be. We all know that along the track of history are scattered the ashes of thousands who have been burned at the stake for their religious faith, and the track of history is marked with the blood of martyrs to the faiths for which they died; but high and ennobling as religious influence and conviction may be upon the lives of men, it is little above another lofty inspiration that also moves the hearts of men and influences their mental and moral life. The inspiration of patriotism, the love of liberty, the enjoyment of individual and collective freedom, thank Heaven, are as strong in the hearts of men, or almost as strong, as the most devout conviction with respect to things religious. As many, if not more, indeed, have suffered martyrdom, have been burned at the stake or butchered in their homes or on the field by ruthless tyrants because they lifted their hands against some oligarchy that would chain their minds and subject their souls and bodies to a species of intolerable slavery as have ever been sacrificed to religious persecution.

The history of the world is full of examples of men struggling up a mounting way for higher and better things who have been overcome by the force of numbers and of organizations and thrown into prison, their lives often taken in the most humiliating way, their property confiscated, and their children driven into exile. To save my soul I declare before high Heaven I can see no sounder reason why a man who has fought such a battle should be denied asylum here when he comes with outstretched hands than I can see why asylum should be denied to one fleeing from religious persecution. You can not draw this line without doing violence to the high ideals that from the beginning have been set up as our standards in this Republic. Sir, it seems to me that if a man or woman who has suffered in the way I have described comes begging for shelter at our door, pleading for sweet liberty on our hills and plains——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STONE. In just a moment I will yield.

Mr. President, I want to say that in such a case to close the door in the face of such a petitioner would be to forget who we really are, for it would be to blot out our history and to slap liberty and human hope in the face. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Ah, Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is presumably arguing from the standpoint that this test will shut out all that class that he has so eloquently described. The committee, and I am sure the Senate, would be delighted to admit and are in no way attempting to prohibit that great class, when moved by sentiment such as the Senator described, from coming here, when they are otherwise qualified. The literacy test is one of the elements which we propose to use to prove whether it is the splendid class to which the Senator refers which is coming, because I think the Senator is willing to admit with me that with the modern facilities for acquiring an education surely those whom he is here calling our attention to as a class should have acquired at least the rudimentary elements of reading and writing which this test prescribes. Of course there may be exceptions, but we can not pass a law here to fit exceptions.

Mr. STONE. That is what you are doing.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We are not doing that; we are simply saying that as a class they must subscribe to that which we consider a prime essential for our own people. In some of our States we have compulsory education, and that sentiment is growing. We are simply attempting to take care of the character of our own citizenship and applying this test as being one of the means of ascertaining whether these people are of the splendid class to which the Senator from Missouri refers.

Mr. STONE. Oh, yes, I understand, Mr. President, what the Senator now says and what he has before said to the same effect, but he should understand that, when I speak in general terms about the kind of people I have attempted most feebly to describe, I have meant to limit the application of my remarks to such of them as could not comply with the literacy test. I have not thought it necessary in this intelligent body to keep repeating the term "literacy test" every time I attempted to formulate a sentence; that is to be understood.

Mr. President, I think we can limit the right of entrance into our country so as to exclude undesirable people of whatever kind, even though this literacy test should be eliminated from the bill. The Senator from South Carolina says that it is put in to help eliminate or to exclude undesirable immigrants. I would not write that into this proposed law if I were conscious that only a single man of the kind I have described should be denied entrance here—a man who is brave, who is physically and morally sound, whose soul is lit up by the fire of patriotism, whose sole offense is the advocacy of things intended for the betterment of his race and human kind—a man who was driven from his native heath by the sharp sword of persecution—I would never shut him out of America; and especially would I not shut him out when I reflect that men of bad morals, of imperfect physical condition, men afflicted with maladies mental or physical, men who would undermine the very foundation of our institutions, which are built upon the toil and tears and blood of our people, may come to our shores notwithstanding the literacy test. None such as these I last describe ought to be admitted; but they may not be excluded by the literacy test, for we do know, if we know anything, that the most dangerous of our immigrants will not be kept out because of that test. I repeat I would not shut out a brave man of noble impulses merely because he could not read, nor would I shut his children out because they could not read.

My friend from South Carolina says that it is hardly conceivable that men and women should grow to maturity in any land without acquiring the ability to read or write, or to read according to this test. Why, Mr. President, I have just read in the hearing of the Senator from South Carolina and of the Senate several instances which disprove his conclusions. I called his attention to the fact that that little volume from which I quoted was full of instances where a class of people were taxed even to the extent of furnishing all the money required for the support of public schools, and yet their children were excluded from them. The father and mother at home might light the lamp or candle and assemble their little ones about them in the flickering gloom and teach them the alphabet and how to read, but God only knows—I do not. nor does the Senator from South Carolina—how difficult it may be for the parents to do that thing. Nobody knows how many of them, even before the sun first lights the eastern sky, must rise for the daily toil and continue at it until after the shadows of night have fallen. There is a limit to human endurance, and even such instruction as that may be under surveillance, frowned upon, and made difficult. No, Mr. President, it is not difficult to understand the prevalence of ignorance when the acquisition of knowledge is made an offense by law.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the bill here before us is a confession by the honorable committee of which the Senator is the head that the former bills on this subject went too far. There was a bill some years ago which required that an immigrant should be able to read 25 words of the Constitution of the United States as a test; and then, two or three years ago, the same committee reported another measure requiring that the immigrant should be able to read and write so many words in some recognized language; and now, still retreating from a position that ought never to have been taken, the committee says "We will limit it to the capacity of the immigrant to read a certain number of words"—not to write, but to read a certain number of words—"in any known language, including the Yiddish." As you have so far receded from the original position, you ought to have left it out entirely.

Mr. President, when the last immigration bill was before the Senate, reported, I think, by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], he said in his report that, in the first instance, they left out the literacy test because they thought it such a change in American policy and such a radical departure from the whole course of American history in dealing with this subject that it ought to be considered, discussed, and acted upon as a separate measure. Then afterwards they wrote it in.

Mr. President, when the bill requiring that the immigrant should be able to read 25 words—I think that was the provision—of the Constitution went to the then President, Mr. Cleveland, he vetoed it on the ground that that test was un-American. In a speech I made before the Senate when the last immigration bill was being considered, three or four years ago, I quoted from that veto message of President Cleveland. I am not going to take the time of the Senate, and particularly the time of the Senator from South Carolina, who is so anxious to proceed, by reading again what I read at that time, but I will ask that the marked portions of that veto message, on the first and third pages of the printed message, may be incorporated at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the quotations indicated will be incorporated.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A radical departure from our national policy relating to immigration is here presented. Heretofore we have welcomed all who came to us from other lands, except those whose moral or physical condition or history threatened danger to our national welfare and safety. Relying upon the jealous watchfulness of our people to prevent injury to our political and social fabric, we have encouraged those coming from foreign countries to cast their lot with us and join in the development of our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

* * * * * * *

I can not believe that we would be protected against these evils by limiting immigration to those who can read and write in any language 25 words of our Constitution. In my opinion it is infinitely more safe to admit a hundred thousand immigrants who, though unable to read and write, seek among us only a home and opportunity to work than to admit one of those unruly agitators and enemies of governmental control, who can not only read and write but delights in arousing by inflammatory speech the illiterate and peacefully inclined to discontent and tumult. Violence and disorder do not originate with illiterate laborers. They are rather the victims of the educated agitator. The ability to read and write as required in this bill in and of itself affords, in my opinion, a misleading test of contented industry and supplies unsatisfactory evidence of desirable citizenship or a proper apprehension of the benefits of our institutions. If any particular element of our illiterate immigration is to be feared for other causes than illiteracy, these causes should be dealt with directly instead of making illiteracy the pretext for exclusion, to the detriment of other illiterate immigrants against whom the real cause of complaint can not be alleged.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the bill against the passage of which I made that address went finally to the then President, Mr. Taft, and he vetoed it. I wish to read an excerpt from his message. He says:

But I can not make up my mind to sign a bill which in its chief provision violates a principle that ought, in my opinion, to be upheld in dealing with our immigration. I refer to the literacy test.

He then refers to a communication addressed to him by the then Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Nagel, and I desire to read one or two brief extracts from that communication. Secretary Nagel said:

My observation leads me to the conclusion that, so far as the merits of the individual immigrant are concerned, the test is altogether overestimated. The people who come from the countries named are frequently illiterate because opportunities have been denied them. The oppression with which these people have to contend in modern times is not religious.

Here the Secretary of Commerce agrees with the Senator from South Carolina.

The oppression with which these people have to contend in modern times is not religious, but it consists of a denial of the opportunity to acquire reading and writing. Frequently the attempt to learn to read and write the language of the particular people is discouraged by the Government, and these immigrants in coming to our shores are really striving to free themselves from the conditions under which they have been compelled to live.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator from Missouri if the Secretary was referring to the Jews, or was referring to all immigrants?

Mr. STONE. He does not say to whom he was referring.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. He was referring to all immigrants?

Mr. STONE. I take it so. At least, no particular class of immigrants is singled out in his communication.

Again, he says:

The census returns show conclusively that the importance of illiteracy among aliens is overestimated, and that these people are prompt after their arrival to avail of the opportunities which this country affords. While, according to the reports of the Bureau of Immigration, about 25 per cent of the incoming aliens are illiterate, the census shows—

The decennial census taken by the Government—that among the foreign-born people of such States as New York and Massachusetts, where most of the congestion complained of has taken place, the proportion of illiteracy represents only about 13 per cent.

Mr. President, that shows to my mind that though 25 per cent of the immigrants admitted were illiterate, in a brief time, having the opportunity, they devoted themselves diligently to the work of acquiring the essential rudiments of education; and because of that the percentage of illiteracy represented in the census returns of immigrants as they came in was reduced one-half within the census period in the larger States of the Northeast, where, as the Secretary said, the greatest congestion occurs.

Mr. President, there are so many things in this bill that have my most hearty approval that I could support it with the greatest pleasure if this gross invasion of our great historical American policy had not been made. I do so wish that the Senators and the Senate would let that pass. That is too bitter a cup to hold to the lips of men who are honest in purpose, sound in mind and body, unexceptionable in their moral character, full of the impulse of patriotism, and capable of adding something to the industrial activities and growth of our country. It is a bitter cup to offer when we tell them that because of unfortunate and untoward environments and conditions for which they are in no wise to blame they will not be admitted because they are too ignorant; that vice is a certain and sure companion of ignorance; that where a man is without learning he must be branded as a scoundrel.

Still stronger is my objection and protest when such a one as I have described comes asking to partake in some degree of our liberty and opportunities that he is to be denied the benefit of a like exception to the literacy test as that granted for religious persecution. He may admit that he is ignorant of books; that may become manifest upon a moment's examination; but otherwise he comes up to the best standards you ask for citizenship. Nevertheless, because he is ignorant of books, you cast him out; and you cast him out even though he is a fugitive, not from crime or its consequences, but from a miserable and intolerable political persecution or because he is put under an oppressive ban solely because he was born into a certain race of people. No matter how good he may be, as a rule; no matter how industrious, frugal, patriotic he may be, as a rule; no matter how cruel the persecution of him because of race, he will be cast out. Every impulse of my heart is against a policy of that kind.

Mr. President, it would not be meet, I think, to comment upon and to express my opinion or my feeling with reference to the public policies of another Government. In this forum I feel that there is such an environment, such a call for propriety and delicacy of conduct, that we should speak with caution when we undertake to speak directly and by name of a great nation with which we are at peace. But you know full well what I mean. Shall we become a partner in such crimes against mankind?

Mr. President, I can not get it into my heart to support such a provision as that to which I have been addressing myself. That is all I care to say.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I hesitate somewhat to burden the Senate further with my views on this question, for I have already spoken on it; but my apology, if one is needed, is that I feel this matter keenly.

Senators, I plead with you, strike out the so-called literacy test in this bill. It is un-American, to my mind; it is unholy, in that it does not treat mankind as brother; it is unjust, in that you would punish a would-be American for shortcomings not his own fault.

When you men of New England were laying the foundations of your great fortunes in mill and workshop, you did not stop then to ask the question—you hardly cared—whether your operatives could read or not. Again, Mr. President, in the crucial days of our late war, when the very life of our Nation seemed in the balance, you did not ask, when enlisting a soldier: "Can he read?" No! You only asked: "Is he strong in body and steady of nerve, to battle with and vanquish our foe?"

A few months, mayhap a year ago, a giant craft, the Titanic, while freighted with her human cargo, was rent from bow to stern in the black night on the deep sea. A cry rang out from the commander on that still, black night: "Man the boats! Women and children first!" It is not recorded, Mr. President, that he said: "Man the boats with men who can read only," but "Man the boats!"

Ah, I ask, who amid that awful gloom stopped so long as to ask the question: "Can this seaman read?" Was there any namby-pamby specimen of humanity there to raise his puny, squeaky voice to protest at being rescued by a seaman who could not read? Oh, no—a thousand noes! Away with this sentimental nonsense!

When at Valley Forge, at Lexington, at Princeton, at Monmouth, at Bunker Hill, you did not then invoke the literacy test. Ah, no! You were broader then, more Christian then. Prosperity and wealth have made you selfish and, I fear, un-Christian.

I deny the thought that was advanced here a day of two ago, that it is through immigration per se that vice and immorality have spread in this land. Take the Irish, take the German, the Dane, the Italian, and the much-despised Jew, and I say it is utterly untrue. I almost defy you, Mr. President, to find an unchaste or lewd Jewess, almost never a Jewish criminal; and yet the effort of this bill is to inveigh against that race that would seek liberty and the blessings of this God-blessed and holy land.

For chastity and observance of the marriage vows it is not safe, Mr. President, to depend upon your so-called literacy test. Search the records of our divorce courts and you will find the pages there replete with marital woes and divorce, not among the illiterate but among those high in the social scale, on the social register, and in the literacy-test set.

No, Mr. President; literacy does not mean morality and virtue. Thousands of those who passed the gates of our Castle Garden and other ports of this land, though unable to read, both of men and women, though illiterate, have made good fathers and splendid mothers; they have amassed fortunes for themselves and have become honored citizens in our land. Divorce is practically unknown to those races whom you charge with being, and who may be, illiterate according to our test.

Mr. President, I have no fears of opening the gates. This splendid land of glorious liberty, with its magnificent conditions and with the feature of a public-school education, is the mill, so to speak, that will and does assimilate the unfortunate illiterates that may come from abroad.

Great colonies of Italians and Jews are in my own little State. They are law-abiding, thrifty, and honest. I have received over a hundred telegrams from gentlemen who are Hebrews, who have amassed fortunes, who have become citizens of our land, who have an interest in common with all of us in advancing the well-being and the welfare of this glorious land, who hold up their hands in holy protest and raise their voices against the passage of this bill.

Mr. President, I feel that I am not pressing the cause of selfishness, but I am pressing and pleading for the cause of justice and humanity; and I plead with you earnestly and seriously. I have reasons, which I need not repeat, why I press you, as men blessed with glorious opportunity, to lift your voices and cast your votes against this iniquitous and ungenerous proposition.

A few lines came to me a day or two ago which I beg to read, and which meet my ideas quite fully. They are headed:

THE MEN AT THE GATE.

We've dug your million ditches,
  We've built your endless roads,
We've fetched your wood and water,
  And bent beneath the loads.
We've done the lowly labor
  Despised by your own breed,
And now you won't admit us
  Because we can not read!

Oh, statesmen, high in Congress,
  From East, West, North, and South,
You render valued service,
  But mostly with the mouth.
The sons are like the fathers;
  Hard work is not their creed;
They won't swing picks and shovels,
  But then—they all can read!

We've given honest labor,
  And liked our humble lot.
Our children learn the letters
  Their fathers haven't got.
We've fled from persecution
  And served you in your need,
But now you would debar us
  Because we can not read!

Most crooks are educated
  And to the manor born;
Their white hands show no callous;
  They look on us with scorn.
Mere learning is not virtue,
  The word is not the deed;
Disdain, then, not your toilers
  Because they can not read!

Good friends, if we are brothers,
  Why do you raise this test?
Will talk, then, till your acres
  And feed your people best?
Your children trained as idlers—
  Some workers you must need;
Don't bar our only refuge
  Because we can not read!

Your farms are half deserted;
  Up goes the price of bread!
Your boasted education
  Turns men to clerks instead.
We bring our picks and shovels
  To meet your greatest need—
Don't shut the gates upon us
  Because we can not read!

Oh, God of all nations, we pray, open the gates to those of Thy children who, through the edict of fate, can not read, but can only recite, with heartfelt earnestness, the words "charity, justice, and humanity." In Heaven's name, will this great, free Republic and this glorious Senate demand more?

I plead with you, my friends, as you love your country, as you hope for a grander and more glorious future, strike this iniquitous, unholy, un-American, and ungenerous provision from the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in spite of the sentimentality of the Senator from New Jersey, and in spite of the plausibility of the Senator from Missouri, ignorance is neither a great, nor a grand, nor a glorious, nor a lovable, nor an advantageous thing. In a self-governing country, where all the people have a hand in ruling, it is the chief danger and chief menace to free institutions.

The long speech of the Senator from Missouri might be answered in one sentence, if it were thought advisable to answer it in one sentence, and that would be this: The American people are now expending something like a billion dollars a year to eradicate ignorance; and yet men, so-called statesmen, come here, misled by prejudice in favor of some race or misled by political interest, appealing and pleading to the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States to import more ignorance!

What use have you for it after it gets here? You say it goes into the mines and goes upon the farms and goes somewhere else. Maybe so. What does it do when it goes there, if it does—and it generally does not. The illiterate and ignorant immigration generally hangs around Chicago, New York, and Boston; but if it goes to these other places, what does it do? It simply displaces intelligent American workingmen. American workingmen are not out of work because they are so highly educated as to be above work. It is because men with lower standards crowd them out. The men who are chiefly interested in importing ignorance into this country are the great tariff barons of this country and the great mine barons of this country who want cheap labor, and know that they can not get cheap labor unless they get ignorant labor, because ignorant labor is the only sort of labor that can not take care of itself, that can not organize, can not combine, and can not defend itself.

I am tired of hearing tributes to ignorance and demagogic appeals against intelligence. There is no reasonable excuse in the world today for any Norwegian or Swede or Dane or German or Hollander or Frenchman or north Italian, any Scotchman or Irishman or Englishman, any Swiss or any Belgian, reaching the age of maturity without being able to read and write.

When you bar men because of illiteracy you do not bar them because they are themselves—you bar ignorance; and you bar ignorance because ignorance is dangerous to free institutions in a self-governing country. Ignorance is not dangerous in a despotism. Ignorance is not dangerous in Russia. On the contrary, it may be to the interest of Russia or Turkey to keep people in ignorance; but ignorance is dangerous in a country where five years' residence makes a citizen of a man. If every State in the Union did as Mississippi and Massachusetts have done, and debarred from the franchise their ignorant, it might be different, but they do not do it.

It might be safe enough to have them if they had nothing to say about the Government; but when you go into—I will not particularize, either, because that would be, I think, in bad taste; I started to mention a special part of the country—but when you go into a great ignorant settlement of people, whether they be native or foreign, it does not make any difference which, when you go there to plead for certain political measures or against certain political measures, what hope have you, in God's name? If people like that are to control a government or constitute the balance wheel, even, in certain great centers, as they do, what hope have you for an intelligent solution of any great public problem?

This is not a matter of sentiment. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] appeals to "brotherly love," and all that. I can have brotherly love for a man without making him a part of my household. I may be perfectly willing to do the very utmost I can for him and yet not be willing to take him in as a member of my family.

I tell you, Senators, you can not establish democratic institutions anywhere except in a temple which is supported by these four pillars—liberty, equality, fraternity, and justice. I tell you that neither liberty nor equality nor fraternity nor justice can exist amidst an ignorant electorate. It does not make any difference whether the ignorant electorate is a lot of negroes in Mississippi or whether it is a lot of people who can not read and write of the white race somewhere else, you will have your choice sooner or later, either to defy the spirit of democracy to prevent them from ruling or else to surrender the soul of democracy while you permit them to rule.

What is our use for them? A man was talking to me the other day, and he said, "My mother could not read." Well, his mother would have been a better woman if she could have read—perhaps not a better woman, but at least a more useful and efficient one. All these appeals to men to destroy the character of the American body politic upon the ground that some good person somewhere who could not read and write might be affected are absurd. I know and have known in my life a lot of very good people, not in this country so much as abroad, who could not read and write.

But we have the whole world to pick from. There are 90,000,000 of us here now, probably 100,000,000. We do not need anybody else particularly. We welcome guests to our front door and within our house, but we have the whole world to pick from, and why not pick its cream? Why pick its blue milk?

You tell me that it is cruel to say that no man merely because he can not read and write should be left beyond the American portcullis. I tell you that as a rule upon the Continent of Europe to-day educational institutions are more numerous and better than they are in America.

I tell you, moreover, that the man who reaches adult age without being able to read and write is not only ignorant, but as a rule he displays a lamentable lack of enterprise, of initiative, of willingness to help himself; and I tell you that in a majority of European countries to-day ignorance has ceased to be a fault and has become a crime. It has become a sin—a crime against man, a sin against God—because any man could acquire a decent elementary education if he wishes to do it.

There may be countries—I need not name them—where it is difficult to get an education, where it is difficult to learn to read and write. There are some I know in Asia, and in southeastern Europe, perhaps. But why are we anxious to have them? Why do we want to make an exception in order to get them? Is there anything in their present status or their past history that encourages us in the belief or hope that they would make good citizens of the United States?

It is a good idea when you can to take only the best. The law of natural selection can be helped out by the law of human selection, or rather by human selection, because it is not a law. The law of evolution—the survival of the fit and the extinction of the unfit—is a great natural law; but it is a great mistake to think that men can not modify it; that men can not direct and guide it. Men can help to select the fit, and they can help to exclude the unfit.

When this question presents itself to my mind it does not present itself to my mind as a question for the benefit of Asiatics, or Europeans, or Africans. It presents itself to my mind as a question of benefit and self-preservation to the American Republic and to American free institutions. When a foreigner comes to these shores I want two things of him, if I can get them. One is to know that he is fit to become an American, the other to know that he is willing to become an American; that when he takes the oath of naturalization he takes it without mental reservation; that down in the bottom of his heart he reserves no allegiance to prince, pope, power, or potentate, to Kaiser, Czar, or King, and that his action as an American citizen shall not be controlled or modified by the interests of the place of his derivation. I ask these two things, that he shall be fit and that he shall be willing.

Now, of course, there is a higher test of citizenship than mere literacy. If there were a god amongst us who could draw up and put upon the statute books and execute a law admitting the morally fit and excluding the morally unfit, of course that would be better. But there is no god amongst us in either of these legislative halls. There is no man who can look into the secret arcanum of another man's heart and tell what manner of man he is by looking upon his face. We must approximate it as best we can, and the best way to approximate it is along the line of intelligence, and the nearest approach we can make to a line of intelligence is through the literacy test.

It is also true that sometimes a man who can not read and write is more intelligent even than a man who can, but as a rule the man who has not thought enough about this small brain of ours and has not sought an opportunity to cultivate it and acquire at least common reading and writing, is less intelligent than the man who has thought enough to do it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And he is often the bigger scoundrel.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; that is very true indeed. Lord Bacon was said to be "the wisest and meanest of mankind."

That again fails to come to the point. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], upon his feet, said "You are going to brand the man as a scoundrel" because he can not read and write. What enfantillage, what absolute childishness is that, coming either from the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from New Jersey. You do not brand him as a scoundrel at all; you merely brand him as unfit, untrained, untaught for American citizenship; that is all. He has not the trained intelligence to inform himself upon great public questions. You do not brand him as a scoundrel at all.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment. Some of the most honest men I have ever known in my life were ignorant. One I have in my mind now was a negro man who belonged to my grandfather. He was absolutely honest. As Thomas Jefferson said of John Adams, "The Eternal Spirit who made him could not be more so." He was absolutely ignorant, and yet my grandfather introduced him to Jefferson as "an honest man." But that is not the point.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have not claimed that you brand him as a scoundrel, but I have——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Missouri did so claim in so many words.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not responsible for what the Senator from Missouri said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator himself a moment ago said that a man might be very wise and still be a scoundrel. Why did he mention that well-known fact except as an argument along Senator STONE's remarks?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What I did say was why deny him equal opportunity as a result of immigration to this fair land of ours? I deny in toto the Senator's proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. "Deny him equal opportunity." I take it the Senator means by opportunity a rightful, a just, a natural opportunity?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A natural right. What is the natural right of any human being to enter the United States?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. To earn his bread by the sweat of his brow and to abide by the laws of the country of his adoption.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is no such inherent opportunity or right in any man living anywhere to come into the United States and constitute a part of our domestic family—of this body politic—much less is there any natural right or any well-founded right or opportunity inherent in anybody anywhere to constitute a part of what is higher than the body politic of the United States, and that is its soul politic. Your body politic is a mere frame of government, your executive and your judiciary and your legislative and all that, but the soul politic is constituted of the traditions and the ideals of your citizenship; and when a man is unfit to take on those traditions and those ideals, if there were any possible test whereby you could determine that he was unfit, I would exclude him. But there is no possible test whereby you can determine it accurately, scientifically, and certainly.

Mr. President, I am the last man in the world to have any sort of chauvinism of any description. I boast that I am more than a citizen of the United States, that I am a citizen of the world, and I have lived with the world in thought, in feeling, in study, and to a certain extent bodily as well. I have no sort of sympathy for any man who thinks for one moment that a man who is a citizen of the United States is for that reason any wiser intellectually, any better morally, any stronger physically than a subject of the Kaiser or the Czar or the King of Great Britain, or per se than even a subject of the Sultan of Turkey. I know that we are neither wiser nor better nor stronger than those great Scandanavian people along the Baltic and North Sea, the Norwegians, the Swedes, and the Danes; nor the Pomeranians in Prussia nor the Germans in Bavaria, nor those dearly loved people along the Rhine, nor the French people in northern or in southern or in central France, nor the purely white Italians, nor the Swiss. There I stop, because there my personal knowledge stops. They are as good as we are; they are as smart as we are; they are as strong as we are; they are as honest as we are; they are as honorable as we are. An American who sets himself up as better than other people because they are under some other flag is simply a fool, in my opinion.

This, then, is not a test of chauvinism at all. It is a test not directed against a man but a thing. What is the thing? It is ignorance.

You talk to me about ignorance being a misfortune. I do not care whether it is or not. It is a fact, is it not? It is an unfortunate fact and it is a dangerous fact; it is a menacing fact; it is a criminal fact; it is a sinful fact if the man could have helped it; and whether he could help it or not he himself when he has it is dangerous to me and you, because he and his ignorance are one and inseparable.

I might concoct a government in my imagination which would not be dependent entirely upon intellectuality. I have often thought that perhaps there might be a better government than a democracy, to wit, a government of the wise, as the Greeks called it—an aristocracy, etymologically speaking—provided you had God to help you select the wise. But you have not. He has declined to do it, and He has left us to rule the world in a free country by the common sense and the common conscience of the common people. I want the highest form of common sense and common conscience I can find, and therefore I want a trained common sense and a cultured common conscience.

It is folly to tell me that you can go blundering around in the world and accidentally hit upon Tom, Dick, or Harry, regardless of all their mental characteristics, and that they are going to give you good government. You can not thus have it. Your Government here in America depends upon Tom, Dick, and Harry. It depends, therefore, upon their intelligence; and there is no practical test of intelligence except literacy. It is not a perfect test, but it is an approximate one.

You people up North here had an experience of that sort, or, rather, you inflicted upon us an experience of a sort which ought to teach you something. Soon after the war you began to talk, in connection with citizenship and the suffrage and social rights, about "the man and the brother." You were going to make a citizen out of the negro because he was "a brother," and you made a citizen out of him. What happened to us? We were ground between the upper and the nether millstones—the very life and pride ground out of us practically; honesty was ground out; everything was ground out. Why? Because, among other things, the man to whom you gave power was ignorant, stupid, leadable, no master of himself, no captain of his own soul. No ignorant man is captain of his own soul, and he can not be.

I want later on to make one exception, Mr. President, to the literacy test. I offered an amendment the other day in these words; to insert, on page 9, line 12:

Or for five years after the passage of this act, because of the military conquest of their country.

Since that time I have received a letter from Representative BURNETT, of Alabama, a Member of the House. I have more confidence in his opinion upon questions of immigration than in the opinion of any other man belonging to either of the two Houses. He has convinced me that the amendment in that shape will not do. Guided partially by his mere authority, which I so highly respect, and guided still more by the reasons which he gave in his letter, I do not want to insist upon it in that shape, but I shall ask to amend it before it comes to a vote. I might just as well say, because I do not believe it is in violation of even the spirit of neutrality, that my desire is to leave the doors of the United States wide open for the Belgian immigrants. So I would make it read:

Or for five years after the passage of this act, because of the military conquest of their country, in cases where the territory of their country had received recognition by belligerent powers as neutral territory and where their land was invaded for no other reason than that their Government refused to consent to let it be invaded.

Further than that I do not want to make any exceptions to it except religious persecution, and I make that exception because of reasons which I think it would be internationally unwise for me as a Senator of the United States to dwell upon too much. But the condition of the Belgians has appealed to me to such an extent that it seems to me that almost all rules of every description ought to be waived in order that they may have a home and a haven somewhere upon the surface of this earth. I do not say "a place in the sun"; they are not seeking that; but just a home, a haven.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was rather surprised at the Senator's illustration when he referred to the fact that the North after the Civil War had forced upon the South the colored man as a citizen. He compared that condition to admitting European immigrants without a literacy test. I want to ask the Senator whether it would have been satisfactory to him if the South had permitted the colored man to enter citizenship provided he could have read 40 words in the English language?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand the ad hominem thrust, and as somewhat of a debater myself I can perhaps appreciate it more fully both in its force and its irrelevancy. To some extent the illustration was unfortunate. If the Senator understood me to mean that the only objection that the southern man had to negro suffrage was the fact that the negro could not read and write, then I made a mistake, and he knew that as well when he interrupted me as he does now after I have told him so. There are some races upon the surface of this earth that do not belong to the white race who are racially incompetent for self-government. They have proven themselves so both in their native habitat and here. But I was merely calling attention to the comparison in so far as the element of ignorance entered into it. The Senator perfectly understood me and it needed not his question to enlighten his intellect at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I asked the question because the Senator had elaborately stated that in his opinion the European people who might be excluded by the literacy test were in all respects capable of the same development, equal in honesty, equal in character, equal in health, and equal in all the qualifications of good citizenship to the American; and he compared their plight with the colored man in the South. I wanted to know, therefore, whether the South would have been satisfied with the colored man as a citizen, provided he could mave met the literacy test.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I compared them only with respect to their ignorance. I was not ready to make a race speech, nor would a race speech be relevant or pertinent to this question. I was merely trying to call your attention to the fact that you had thrown upon the South a perfect cloud of ignorance. That is totally outside of the fact that there are between white men and negroes racial distinctions, as Mr. Lincoln himself said—"moral and physical differences," as he stated it—which render it absolutely impossible that they should be politically and socially equals in the same country. In Mr. Lincoln's celebrated words, "when it comes to taking a choice as to which one of these two shall be superior, I will align myself with my own race." I said those were Mr. Lincoln's words. They were not literally his words, but he said in exact substance, "When it comes to determining which shall be superior and which shall be inferior, I of course, like every white man, am in favor of white superiority."

Now, that and the question propounded by the Senator from Nebraska, which invoked it, has nothing to do with this question. The Senator from Nebraska knows it has nothing to do with it. He knew it when he made the interruption. He merely thrust it in for the purpose of deflecting me from the line of argument, by trying to make me discuss the race question. His purpose would have succeeded better if he had tried his tactics on some other Senator. Now, I am not a monomaniac upon the race question, luckily, nor upon anything else. I have common sense about it. I know that the white man is the superior, as a race, to the colored man, but I am not prepared to discuss it every time some gentleman digs his spur at me, roweled with it, but in connection with some question with regard to which it has no pertinency and no relevancy. So the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me from further observation along that line.

To go back to the question, we have the whole world to choose from. We have our natural children in our family here now, and it is the family that we ought chiefly to care for. It is our own American children that we must care for first. The question presented to us is what adopted children are we going to add to the family—what adopted children are we going to admit to the high privilege of associating with our own children? I say we should admit adopted children who are fit for the association. I admit that you can not always tell who are fit and who are unfit, but we must approximate it by some rule as close to it as we can come.

I say that this literacy test bars a thing—ignorance—and I say, moreover, that in barring this dangerous and awful thing it happens accidentally to admit a very large proportion of the best races of the world and to exclude a very large proportion of the worst. That is natural. That is an incident, but it is a fact. However, it does not change the essential thing, which is that we are barring menace and danger. In a certain higher sense, there is nothing dangerous in this world except ignorance. Thomas Jefferson said that he did not mind giving freedom to error, provided reason was left free to combat it. I am of that opinion, too. But suppose that in a given place you have not any reason to combat it? Suppose the man in whose mind you are going to combat it has not any reason; or suppose he has nothing but natural and uncultivated reason, uninformed reason, untrained reason, untaught reason—not much above instinct—to what sort of a forum, then, to what sort of a jury, then, is reason to carry its appeal against ignorance and prejudice, especially when you consider prejudice always sits high-throned in the very altar center of the temple of ignorance?

I could draw a picture of a Russian family, oppressed, persecuted, no haven at home, no haven in bordering countries, anxious to come to America, and in the first or the second or the third generation to make out of themselves a new thing, making out of their dead selves of one generation a stepping-stone to higher things in another generation. I could draw the picture perfectly as well as any of these gentlemen, it may be; I do not mean as well, but I mean as sincerely and as honestly as any of them.

But that has nothing to do with this question. Here is your household; here is your family; here are your children—the sons and daughters of the Republic. Whom are you going to adopt in the family with them, giving adopted children equal rights? Whom are you going to take in as members of the family, as coheirs with them, upon an equality with them? And, strange to say, too, into a queer family, because it is a self-governing family, where every child has a voice as well as the father and the mother in the government of the household. Whom are you going to take in—fit or unfit material?

The Senator from Missouri dwelt upon the fact that several Presidents had vetoed such bills. Oh, yes; and that brings me to the question of the "invisible empire" in American politics, national executive committees, State political committees, promises made by them during campaign times, to be fulfilled afterwards by the parties when they come into power. Here we stand, the visible political empire of America, the House, the Senate, and the White House, and there stands behind us the invisible empire, the unknown, unelected men, with their secret campaign promises of one description or another. One President after another, guided by them and ruled by them, now and then has vetoed measures of great importance to the American republican-democratic household—among others this—and may do so again for aught I know, although I think not. What do I care about that? What do you care about it? What has it to do with common sense of the question? What has it to do with the real justice of the question? What has it to do with the real generosity of the question?

Senators have hitherto taken the position that all the generosity that we should show was a generosity to be shown toward foreigners when they come to our shores, but there is a higher form of generosity than that, and that is the generosity you should show to the children of your own household.

Are you going to bring in the unfit, the unprepared, the untrained, the untaught, put them upon grounds of absolute equality, and make them coheirs with the children of your own loins, to drag them down intellectually and politically? That you shall bring them in and make them coheirs with the children of your own loins is all right, provided they are fit, provided they are really equal when so acknowledged, provided they are competent to help carry out this great American, republican-democratic world mission, a mission of holding up a light to the whole world, the light of liberty and fraternity and equality, "founded upon intelligence," as the father of Democracy said, because it is "the only safe foundation upon which free institutions can rest." I do not care how perfect the moral character of a man may be, if he is absolutely untaught, uninformed, and untrained intellectually he can not be thoroughly and intelligently sympathetic with free institutions; neither can he be thoroughly competent to constitute a part of the governing power amidst free institutions.

Mr. President, before I take my seat I ask leave to modify the amendment which I have presented, so that it will be pending in its present suggested shape.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be modified as requested.

The amendment proposed by Mr. WILLIAMS, as modified, is as follows:

On page 9, line 12, after the word "persecution" and before the semicolon, insert the following words: "Or for five years after the passage of this act, because of the military conquest of their country, in cases where the territory of their country had received recognition by belligerent powers as neutral territory, and where their land was invaded for no other reason than that their Government refused to consent to let it be invaded."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 13 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 21, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 19, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We would approach Thee, Almighty God, in the spirit of Him who taught us when we pray to say—

"Our Father who art in heaven. Hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen."

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I present the river and harbor bill, which, together with the accompanying report (No. 1230), I ask be referred under the rule. I would like also to say that I propose to call this bill up at the earliest possible moment. I do not expect, however, according to information I have received, to get it up until after the holidays. But I present it thus early that the membership of the House may have every opportunity of scrutinizing it before it is taken up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The bill, with the accompanying report, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6867. An act to increase and fix the compensation of the collector of customs for the customs collection district of Omaha.

HELEN L. BREMNER.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman sends up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 406 (H. Rept. 1232).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Helen L. Bremner, clerk to Robert Gunn Bremner, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey, compensation at the rate of $125 per month from and after the date of the death of the said Robert Gunn Bremner until his successor is elected and qualified.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all of the resolution after the word "Jersey," in line 5, and insert the following: "the sum of $125, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Member of the House.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is different from any resolution that has come from the Committee on Accounts, so far as I know, and it is intended to serve somewhat as a precedent for action hereafter. If the House sees fit to pass this resolution, this committee will consider such resolutions hereafter.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, this proposes to pay for services that were not rendered during the lifetime of a Member. This lady was a clerk of a Member, and she was to receive $125 a month. The usual custom, that with which I am familiar in such cases, is to pay the amount up to the date of the death of the Member. Is not that correct? This is to pay a full month's salary, regardless of the fact of whether the Member died at the end of the month or in the middle of the month.

Mr. LLOYD. If this resolution is adopted, the individual is paid $125 additional to anything she would receive. She would receive pay up to the date of the death of the Member at the rate of $125 a month.

Mr. BARTLETT. So that this is a mere gratuity?

Mr. LLOYD. Of $125.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of $125.

Mr. MANN. It is not a gratuity.

Mr. LLOYD. I beg your pardon. I am accepting your term, but I do not think you mean the word "gratuity" exactly, because a private secretary must stay here and do some work after the death of the Member; and many of the secretaries are expected to stay here sometimes for a month, or even three months.

Mr. BARTLETT. I remember a case when I was a member of the Committee on Accounts, of which committee I was a member for 16 years, which appealed to us very much, where a Member died and his successor was not elected, and the secretary, who was a lady, stayed here and attended to all the correspondence and things of that sort; but we were not able at that time to bring ourselves to the conclusion that it was anything more than a—if it is offensive to say "gratuity," I will say "payment"—a payment not authorized by law or custom of the House. It is, in fact, a gratuity, so far as we are concerned. A Member of Congress receives $125 a month for the purpose of paying for clerical services. There have been numerous instances of where Members have died and their secretaries have not been paid more than the amount that was due at the date of the death of the Member.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; if I have the privilege of the floor.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARNHART. Does not the gentleman believe that in the case of the death of a Congressman the services of the secretary should be continued until a successor is elected, in order that the district may have some representation here?

Mr. BARTLETT. No.

Mr. BARNHART. I think so, myself.

Mr. BARTLETT. I voted a number of times, and still believe that we should vote, for a salary for our secretaries sufficient to maintain them here in Washington, and that we should put them on the roll and make them employees of the House, subject, of course, to be removed by the Member whenever he pleases to do so. That is my view about secretaries. I do not think we pay them enough in these years when the business of the Congressmen has increased. I believe they ought to be on the roll of the House. I do not think that in this day now of decreasing revenues and increasing expenditures we ought to set an example of giving money to somebody.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman's theory, then, would enable the district to have a clerical representative here until some successor should remove him?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. The law and the Constitution do not provide for any such and I do not believe we ought to do that just as a mere gratuity.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the House well understands that if a Member of Congress dies it is the custom to pay to his representatives one year's salary. If an employee of this House dies, it is the universal custom to pay his representatives an amount equal to six months' salary and to defray the funeral expenses, not to exceed the amount of $250. Now, this lady is an employee of the House, in a sense, but as the law reads she is not an employee of the House, and thus far no allowance of any kind has been paid to a secretary, and it works a grievous hardship.

It is brought to the attention of the House as forcibly, perhaps, if not more so, in the death of the late Mr. PAYNE than in any other case that we have had. Mr. PAYNE was here one day in the House attending to his duties and the next day he was a corpse. The secretary drew the secretary's salary to the date when the breath left the body of Mr. PAYNE, and not a cent afterwards. The secretary, of course, had made his plans to stay with Mr. PAYNE until the end of the session of Congress, and now he is left by this action of Providence without any compensation, and actually it is true, as we find in some cases, that the secretaries have not money to get home with after the death of Members in the case of sudden death, and we think it but fair, inasmuch as we pay something to everybody else under the circumstances, that we should make some kind of a gratuity—if that is to be the term—to the secretary to the Member of Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not a fact that if these secretaries were put upon the roll as employees, in place of leaving it solely as money paid to Congressmen for their services, there might be some change of the rules?

Mr. LLOYD. Then, if they were placed on the rolls as employees of the House, their representatives would, according to the custom, receive in case of their death an amount equal to six months' salary and funeral expenses not to exceed the amount of $250.

Mr. BARTLETT. In case of death of the employee?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; and in that case a sum not to exceed $250 for funeral expenses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This covers a case where a Member dies during the session of Congress. What would be done if, suppose after the 4th of March, between then and the first Monday of December following, the clerk of some Member dies? Is it proposed to pay him a sum equal to a month's salary?

Mr. LLOYD. This would not cover that case at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know; but what is the policy that it is proposed to establish?

Mr. LLOYD. Each case will depend upon its merits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be; but you have got to have a general rule, and the Members should know what the policy of the committee is to be when it is established.

Mr. LLOYD. That policy has not been established, and the committee would be glad to know what the views of the House may be with reference to that contingency. We think that if the secretary of a Congressman is here in the discharge of his duties and the Member dies, there ought to be something in the way of compensation paid to that secretary beyond the salary, which stops absolutely on the death of the Congressman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think the resolution as amended ought to pass. If, as suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], the clerk was placed on the roll, he would draw his salary until the successor of the deceased Member was elected and sworn in, and he would draw a great deal more than is provided for here. As I understand this proposition, it is to pay to the clerk of a Member, upon a Member's decease, one month's salary in addition to what the clerk would otherwise receive.

Mr. LLOYD. To pay him an amount equal to one month's salary.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is a distinction like that between tweedledum and tweedledee. It is to pay him $125.

Mr. LLOYD. Very well.

Mr. MANN. Now, the fact is that clerks of Members attend largely to the correspondence of the Members and to the routine work of Members, answering letters, and letters come in to a Member who is dead. People do not know. Much correspondence may be on its way when a Member dies. The clerk also attends to a great deal of routine work in the departments which can not properly be dropped at once. I think it is but fair to pay to the clerk a month's salary, with the expectation that the clerk will attend to and clean up the official business of the Member who has passed away, and attend to the work of the constituents of that Member which is current at the time. It is an eminently proper provision.

Mr. LLOYD. Question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GEORGE CURTIS PECK.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 680 (H. Rept. 1234).

Whereas George Curtis Peck was the clerk of the Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE, late a Member of the United States House of Representatives from the thirty-sixth district of the State of New York, and is not entitled to compensation as such clerk after the death of the said Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay to George Curtis Peck the sum of $125, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Member of the House, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

With committee amendments as follows:

After the word "compensation," in the preamble, insert the words "under the law."

In line 2, after the word "Peck," insert the words "out of the contingent fund of the House."

In line 4, after the word "House," strike out "the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, is this resolution privileged? A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the resolution privileged when it does not pay out of the contingent fund of the House?

Mr. LLOYD. It does pay.

Mr. BARTLETT. The amendment says "strike out."

Mr. LLOYD. It struck it out in one place and inserted it in another, in order to make better reading.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ANNA J. OURSLER.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 669 (H. Rept. 1233).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Anna J. Oursler, widow of J. R. Oursler, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll of the House, an amount equal to six months of his compensation as such messenger, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said J. R. Oursler.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution in cases of the kind.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FOLDING SPEECHES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 671.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $400, to be expended, under the direction of the Doorkeeper, for labor employed in folding speeches.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, in the last few days of the second session of this Congress there were an unusual number of speeches ordered printed, and there was not sufficient labor authorized by law to meet all the expense. We are now without funds to get any additional help, and we need to pay this additional amount that was incurred after the adjournment of Congress and just before the election.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this to pay for help that was hired without any funds to meet it?

Mr. LLOYD. There were some funds. There was a little money left. Part of this pays for labor incurred in folding speeches, for which we did not have the money to pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not mean to say that this is to pay for services that were employed without any money to pay for them—because that is absolutely prohibited by law!

Mr. LLOYD. There was a vast amount of work to do, and it was done. When we got through with the work it turned out that it was a little bit over the amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has already, since Congress met, has he not, reported a resolution for folding speeches?

Mr. LLOYD. No, sir; I beg your pardon. I have not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have a request for a deficiency appropriation for folding speeches. Within the last year or so the practice has grown up of having the Committee on Accounts furnish pay for additional help for folding speeches. If that practice is to continue, there will be no appropriations of that character carried in any appropriation bill. Why does the Committee on Accounts do this, anyway?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Accounts had no information at all that this matter, or any of it, had been presented to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman ought not to go into these matters, because it has never been the custom for the Committee on Accounts to provide for help for folding speeches until the last year or two. Before that the money was always carried in the appropriation bill.

Mr. LLOYD. I think the Committee on Accounts has never done it except in a few cases of special emergency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no such emergency, because the Committee on Appropriations is now considering an urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. LLOYD. I am perfectly willing, if the gentleman insists upon it, to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman ought to withdraw it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I am quite confident that since I have been here we have repeatedly passed resolutions providing for additional help in the folding room, to be paid for out of the contingent fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been very rare until recent years. There is a request now from the Doorkeeper before the Committee on Appropriations for extra help in the folding room, and that request is pending in a bill that the Committee on Appropriations are at work upon. Two committees should not be providing money for this purpose. No one can keep track of it if they do. It may be necessary at times of great emergency for the Committee on Accounts to make some provision, but I do not believe such a situation exists at present. I have no knowledge or information about that.

Mr. LLOYD. There is no question about the necessity for this payment, but if the Committee on Appropriations will take charge of the matter I will withdraw the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have an estimate before us now.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not need to ask unanimous consent. He has a right to withdraw it anyway.

ATTENDANT FOR LADIES' RETIRING ROOM.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 678 (H. Rept. 1235).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized to employ a woman attendant for the ladies' retiring room, adjoining Statuary Hall, at a salary of $800 per annum, and that same be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided.

Mr. LLOYD. With the following amendment: To strike out the word "Clerk," in the first line, and insert the word "Doorkeeper."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 1, by striking out the word "Clerk" and inserting the word "Doorkeeper."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, there has recently been provided a ladies' retiring room, just off Statuary Hall. It has not been used yet, and the purpose is to employ an attendant, so that she may take charge of that retiring room. There can be no question but that this retiring room is one of the most necessary of any that could be found about this Capitol.

Mr. MANN. Is there any reason for employing a person there at an annual salary? Congress will not be in session all the time.

Mr. LLOYD. Statuary Hall is open the year round, and visitors are the persons who would use that room. Visitors are there every day in the year, and the room will be used every day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the old room where the newspapers were kept, and I believe it will be used all the year round. If it is to be open, an attendant should be there.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL TELEPHONE OPERATOR.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution. This is the last one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 679 (H. Rept. 1231).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to employ one additional telephone operator, at a salary of $900 per annum, to be paid monthly in equal installments out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the recall of judges.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the recall of judges. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, H. R. 19906.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19906) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19906, the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he desires to use any time now.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. How much time, Mr. Chairman, have we used upon this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has used 45 minutes. The other side has consumed 29 minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to go on for 5 or 10 minutes, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. Chairman, we were discussing yesterday the numerous recommendations for new legislation and the change of policy on the part of the Post Office Department. I called attention to the recommendation of the Postmaster General in his last report.

He renews the recommendation embodied in his last annual report—

That Congress seriously consider the question of declaring a Government monopoly over all utilities for the public transmission of intelligence, and that steps be taken as soon as practicable to incorporate into the postal establishment the telegraph and telephone systems of the country.

I referred to his recommendation in regard to abolishing assistant postmasters, of which we have about 2,500 in the United States, and the proposition to let all Rural Delivery Service out by contract to the lowest bidder for four-year periods.

The Constitution of the United States, Article II, section 3, referring to the duties of the President, says:

He shall from time to time give to the Congress information on the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

The President of the United States this year has only favored us with an address upon recent legislative history and political economy. He has not referred to any of these subjects nor has he said he favors any of them. The people of the United States are interested in knowing whether or not the President of the United States favors the recommendation that we should declare a Government monopoly of the transmission of all intelligence by electricity, which would destroy every farmer's telephone in the country. It would involve an investment of billions of dollars.

It was said yesterday by the chairman of the committee that every recommendation of the Postmaster General is the recommendation of the President. Well, we are not so sure about that. Two or three years ago the Postmaster General of a Republican administration, Mr. Hitchcock, made similar recommendations in regard to the telegraph and telephone in his annual report, and it was given out by newspaper interviews and otherwise at the White House that the President disagreed with the Postmaster General on that subject.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him a moment?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. I did not quite catch what the gentleman said a moment ago; but I want to ask this question: Is it not a fact that there is nothing in the pending bill on the subject of telegraph or telephones?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, yes; I believe it was omitted; but I am discussing what is in the report of the Postmaster General. I stand corrected, as far as that is concerned; but the people of the United States are interested in knowing whether the President favors the letting of Rural Delivery Service out by contract, which provision is in this bill and will be in the bill unless it goes out on a point of order. The people of the United States and 44,000 rural delivery carriers who are to have their salaries cut down one-third are interested in that question, and they want to know it before they vote at the next election. They want to know whether the Government will declare a monopoly for the transmission of intelligence, so that they can vote understandingly. The people are interested in knowing whether the President favors Government ownership of all these utilities.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Not yet. If these recommendations of a Cabinet officer have the support of the President of the United States, the people of the United States want to know it, and for that reason I have drawn a very short resolution requesting this information on the part of the President of the United States, which I ask to have read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives what, if any, of the recommendations for new legislation contained in the last report of the Postmaster General he recommends for the favorable consideration of the Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. I am very much interested in the question of telephones for the farmers. Under what theory does the gentleman think that if the Government of the United States were to take over the lines it would destroy the right of the farmer to have a telephone in his house?

Mr. STEENERSON. If the Postmaster General's recommendation is carried out, the Government will declare a monopoly of all telephone communication, as they do over the transmission of letter mail.

Mr. HOWARD. And would it necessarily follow that the farmer would lose his telephone?

Mr. STEENERSON. It strikes me that way; I may be mistaken about it. If the United States have a monopoly, there is no room for a private line.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman stated that there was quite a division of sentiment in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads as to the recommendation of the Postmaster General in regard to the purchase of telephones and telegraphs.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, I made no such statement. I said nothing about it.

Mr. HOWARD. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee was not unanimous.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then I think the gentleman is better informed on what took place in the committee than I am. The chairman states that that was not considered.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman seriously propose to ask the House to vote for his resolution?

Mr. STEENERSON. I dropped the resolution into the basket, to be referred under the usual procedure.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But if it came from the committee, would he support the resolution in dead earnest?

Mr. STEENERSON. I certainly would.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that it would be more becoming for the House and the other branch of Congress to do more legislating with less interference from the Executive?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, I just quoted a section of the Constitution of the United States which imposes upon the Executive the duty of recommending legislation. I think we have a right when a Cabinet officer dumps a report upon us which demands serious consideration to know whether he is speaking for the Chief Executive or on his own account.

Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. I reserve the balance of my time; and if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], I will use some of my time now by yielding to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for 30 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this bill making appropriations for the Post Office Department in all its essential phases I believe to be one of the best bills ever reported to the House. There were a great many recommendations and suggestions made by the Postmaster General for modification of the methods pursued in the conduct of the department. Some of these recommendations were approved and others were disapproved. The committee believed that the recommendation of the Postmaster General to reduce the compensation of substitute carriers and clerks from 35 and 40 cents an hour to 30 cents was a recommendation which ought not to be adopted, and the committee, I believe, was unanimous in its conclusion not to recommend the suggestion of the Postmaster General in this particular.

The question of compensatory time for Sunday service rendered by clerks and carriers throughout the country was given careful consideration, and the department believed that to allow compensatory time off during the succeeding six days after the service is rendered is embarrassing to the department, and on the other hand it is believed by members of the committee that the humanitarian side of this subject should be considered, and that no man working for the Government should be called upon to work seven days a week. The tendency of the times is toward better conditions for working people, and legislation has been enacted by all of the States of the Union, and by the Congress itself, seeking to encourage better conditions between employer and employee, reducing the working hours, and giving a larger proportion of the earnings of labor to labor itself. In the face of this condition throughout the industrial world it was thought to be wise not to adopt the recommendation made by the department giving it the opportunity to grant compensatory time whenever they think it most convenient; but it was believed by the committee that during the holiday season of the year the business of the department is so pressing that the executive officers of the department should have the right not to be called upon to grant compensatory time for Sunday service during the succeeding six days, and so there is a provision in the bill which directs the officers managing the Post Office Department to grant compensatory time for Sunday service rendered in the month of December during the succeeding January, but for all other months in the year for every hour worked on Sunday by the clerk or the carrier in the Post Office the compensatory time must be granted during the succeeding six days.

There was a recommendation made by the department requiring that carriers discontinue the delivery of mail to residences and business houses where either of these institutions failed to provide a receptacle on the outside of the door, but if such a recommendation were to be adopted it seems to me that in great office buildings, where there may be a thousand different business concerns, the carrier himself would not be allowed to enter any of these offices, and that the business of such offices would be disarranged, and the committee believed that also, and they have not recommended the adoption of that suggestion from the department.

The committee also believed that it was unwise to accept the recommendation of the department for biennial promotions among the clerks and carriers in the classified grades. The men who enter the Postal Service as clerks and carriers, in great cities at any rate, are usually required to serve as substitutes for from two to three years. They are required to report every day for duty. They are required to remain there every day on call until all of the men are placed at work before they are able to ascertain whether any employment is to be given to them. They are required to pay their car fare to and from the post office. The average compensation earned by a clerk or carrier during his substitute service does not reach more than $30 a month, and when a man works for two or three years at the rate of not to exceed $30 per month the fair assumption is that he must be in debt when he secures his regular appointment. When he is appointed he receives $800 a year. Under the classification law governing the postal clerks and carriers men are automatically promoted from $800 to $900, $900 to $1,000, from $1,000 to $1,100, and between $1,100 and $1,200 75 per cent of the men in the $1,100 grade are entitled to promotion after one year's service in the $1,100 grade.

The proposition of the department was that, instead of promoting them automatically every year, both in the clerical and carrier forces and in the Railway Mail Service, they be promoted every two years. It seemed to the committee that this would be a great injustice to the men, and that it would be a detriment to the service as well, because you can not get the best there is in a man in this character of service unless you give him the right to hope for some preferment as the result of efficient service. The men who are employed in these places are not only required to work 8 hours, but under the present law they also must be on call for 10 hours, and when they leave their work and go to their homes they are also required to study the schemes that will enable them to accurately distribute the mail for dispatch to every section of the country. They are required to know every post office on a number of railroads, the time of the departure, and the arrival of trains, so that they will be able in the distribution of the mail to automatically throw the letters into the box which will dispatch that mail on the first train. This is an onerous task imposed on these men, and they get no compensation whatever for the time they are at work in the study of these schemes, and the department recommended that the men should be on call not for 10 hours, but for 12 hours a day and that during the 12 hours they would be required to work 8 hours, and in addition to the 8 hours required of them to work in the Post Office Department they would still be called upon to study the schemes which make for the efficiency of the department and the scientific dispatch of the mail. The committee decided that this recommendation was not one in which it could concur.

The reorganization plan embodied in the report of the Postmaster General and accepted by the committee is thought to be one of the most scientific business propositions suggested for the conduct of the Post Office Department that could be made. Some men, it is true, dissent from the opinion I have just expressed, but I have given careful consideration to the question involved in this reorganization plan for more than two years, and I believe that never in all the history of the Post Office Department has there been a suggestion from any executive official in control of this institution which justifies the confidence of the Congress or the people of America to the extent that the suggestion for this reorganization does. It provides no new offices. It may do things with which many men in the House will not agree. It proposes to establish a new schedule of pay for postmasters; it fixes a new basis upon which this payment shall be made; it increases the receipts upon which the salaries are to be based, and to the ordinary man in the supervisory service of the Post Office Department it increases the receipts required to make his salary $1,300 from $80,000 to $100,000, and so on all through the list. It places the service on a scientific, economical business basis, for it establishes the receipts as the basis of expenditure and limits the cost of operating the department and at the same time increases the efficiency of the department. It is said we are creating new offices. Not at all. There is no new office being created under this plan. We are not only not creating new offices, but we are, if our recommendation be adopted, suggesting the merging of the assistant postmaster into the supervisory branch of the service. We are not taking the assistant postmaster out of the service, and we are not in any essential sense reducing his salary. What we are doing is to change the five-division plan into a two-division plan, believing that the five-division plan is not only obsolete but cumbersome and ought not any longer to exist.

Now, what is the five-division plan? It consists of this. In post offices sufficiently large we have now a superintendent of registry, a superintendent of mails, a superintendent of delivery, a superintendent of money orders, and a superintendent of carriers. That makes five. Now, what we propose in this bill is to make one superintendent of finance, and give him jurisdiction over all financial matters in the post office in which he is employed; one superintendent of mails, who will have jurisdiction over the dispatch and receipt of mails, as well as the delivery of mails. This simplifies the work, it expedites the work, it economizes the conduct of the department, it makes for greater efficiency, it places a higher responsibility on the men appointed to those places and encourages them to hope for better things in the future. Their compensation is fixed upon the basis of the receipts of the office, and if the receipts increase their compensation is also increased.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. In just a moment. The assistant postmaster now in the second-class office, drawing $800 a year, will not have his services dispensed with, but he will be transferred to a clerical place in the office, the maximum salary of which is $1,100 a year. So that instead of being injured, he will have been benefited by the change. Of course, the maximum salary paid to an assistant postmaster in a second-class office is $1,400. He will be transferred to a place as superintendent of finance, perhaps, or superintendent of mails, and his maximum compensation perhaps may not be to exceed $1,300. Now I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. I simply would like the gentleman, who is making a very lucid and able explanation of the bill—the best I have heard so far on the bill under consideration—state just what branches or departments will be included under the superintendent of finance.

Mr. MADDEN. All the money-order matter, all the registered matter, all the sale of stamps, all the pay rolls—everything that has to do with the monetary branch of the department.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the position be under the civil service?

Mr. MADDEN. All in the civil service; and I may say for the information of the committee that if this method shall be approved by the House and the recommendation of the committee become a law one of the men selected as superintendent of finance and superintendent of mails will by the direction of the Postmaster General be designated by the local postmaster as the acting postmaster in the absence of the postmaster, and this designation will be a permanent designation during all the period for which the postmaster is to serve.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will it necessarily follow where the assistant postmaster is qualified that he will be designated for either one of the places?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all; if he is not qualified——

Mr. GOULDEN. I say, if he is qualified, as they should be.

Mr. MADDEN. If he is qualified, it is the intention of the department to select him for one of the places if he has earned the right to be recognized for efficient service.

Mr. GOULDEN. Who would have the right to designate these appointments?

Mr. MADDEN. The local postmaster.

Mr. GOULDEN. One more question, if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am now reading on page 13—and it affects the gentleman's city and mine alone, I think—where the receipts are $20,000,000 and over the superintendent of finance shall receive $3,800, and I desire to ask the gentleman, How does that compare with the salary paid assistant postmasters in these two cities of Chicago and New York?

Mr. MADDEN. The assistant postmasters in those places now are receiving $4,000 a year. The assistant postmaster in each of these cases will be dispensed with as such, and if he has the qualifications to fill one of the other places there is no doubt but what he will get it.

Mr. GOULDEN. If the gentleman will pardon, I wish to say that the party occupying the place in the New York office as assistant postmaster is eminently qualified for any place, and should be preferred; but it would mean to him, if designated, a loss of $200 a year in salary.

Mr. MADDEN. The men who are now acting in New York, Chicago, and other great cities of the United States as superintendents of mail, superintendents of delivery, and such superintendents as that, where they have under their jurisdiction anywhere from 3,000 to 3,500 men each, and where they are required to keep track of all the minute details of the office, are only getting $3,200 a year now.

Mr. GOULDEN. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], as I understood him, referred to the New York post office as a case in which there would be a reduction in the salary of the assistant postmaster of $200 a year, did he not?

Mr. MADDEN. Two hundred dollars.

In the readjustment of the department there will be cases where men will get less money and where men will get more money as the result of the readjustment, but in all cases where increases of salary result from the reorganization of the department it will be not only where they are entitled to it but have been entitled to it for the years gone by. But, on the other hand, if the receipts of the office fall the men in this class of the service, although now being classified for the first time in this bill, will have their salaries reduced correspondingly to the reduction in the receipts of the office. So that as a matter of fact the passage of this law will encourage the men in every office in the Union to look for business, to encourage progress, and to increase the receipts of the office. To-day there is no incentive whatever of this kind, and there is no reason in the world why the Post Office Department should not encourage the increase of its business just as much as any private enterprise does.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] if he wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reply at a later time.

Mr MADDEN. Now, the Post Office Department recommended, for example, that the deposits in postal savings banks should be increased from the present amount allowed to be deposited up to $2,000, and that the limit of $100 of deposit for any individual for any single month should be taken off, so that, for example, if a man had $300 and wanted to make a deposit, and he thought that he would like to deposit that money in the postal savings bank to-day, he would not be prevented from depositing more than $100. Under the present limitation he would not deposit any part of his $300. He would go away. He would deposit the money some place else. We have had hundreds of cases where men have come wishing to make a deposit and learned for the first time that the limit allowed to be deposited by any one man during a single month was but $100, and they went away and refused to open an account at all. And so they want now for the House to concur in the recommendation that a man may be allowed to deposit any amount up to $2,000, whether he does it in a single month or in a single year.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Why is it necessary to encumber a system of this kind by putting a limit of any amount on postal savings? If people want to loan the Government money for 2 per cent, or want them to take charge of it and put it into the legitimate channels of commerce, when they themselves would not do it ordinarily, why limit it at all?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no reason at all why it should be limited. But the Senate in the bill which they sent over expressed the opinion, and the President vetoed the bill which the House and Senate passed, that the measure conflicted with the Federal banking law recently enacted, and this recommendation of the committee is based on that action, and we recommend the limit of $2,000, with interest payable on only 1,000 of the $2,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Under the present system of keeping an account against a man to see that he does not overdeposit, and also keeping his interest account, does it not cause a duplication of the work of the postal savings department and entail on the Government a greater expense to operate it?

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that if there was no limit placed on the deposits we would have very much greater deposits, and in consequence of that the cost of operating that branch of the Postal Service would be correspondingly less. We undoubtedly would have been on a very profitable basis to-day in the Post Office Saving System if we had had no limitation on the amount to be deposited. The money would have been taken from hiding. It would have been placed in the Postal Savings Bank System and redeposited in the local banks and put in the channels of trade. It would have helped the prosperity of the country. It would have encouraged many people to save money that do not now save. It would have encouraged them to have more confidence in banks; and when they had learned as the result of their communication and correspondence with the Postal Savings Bank System to invest in a Government bond, which is issued and purchasable by postal savings-bank depositors, they would soon learn to have still further confidence in investing their money in some other class of paper drawing a higher rate of interest, and they would become more patriotic citizens, more devoted to the Government, and better husbands and better wives, better sons and better daughters, and better in every way for the community in which they live.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for one other question.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. Has the gentleman given any thought to the issuance of these Government or postal savings bank bonds in small and varied amounts directly to the people and abolishment of the certificate system? I understand France has done that very successfully.

Mr. MADDEN. The commission charged with the responsibility of conducting the Postal Savings System already have authority to issue bonds to be purchased by depositors in the postal savings banks with the funds which they have there. And a great many of these bonds have been issued and a good many have been purchased, and they have the system already in force as the result of the Postal Savings System.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to his colleague?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Did the committee get any information in regard to the amount of money that has been rejected on account of the restriction of the law, compared to the amount that has really been deposited?

Mr. MADDEN. For some time it has been shown that wherever a bank failed in any locality many people having deposits there came to the post office and undertook to make deposits in the postal savings bank; but the postal savings bank was not allowed to take the money, because the amount offered for deposit was too large for them to accept under the law. The amount is quite large.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will say to my colleague that I was told that after the Lorimer failure in Chicago the Third Assistant Postmaster General received information that there was $90,000 deposited—that is, accepted as deposits—and $124,000 rejected in six days after that failure.

Mr. MADDEN. We had one man here in Washington at the time the United States Trust Co. failed, who came over to the post office and offered $5,000 for deposit, and it was refused, and he took it all away.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. SLOAN. Why should we increase especially the amount that may be deposited in the banks of the country while another department of the Government has reduced from two-thirds to three-fourths the number of banks eligible to receive deposits in the United States, leaving large communities, whole counties, and parts of States in such position that they can not qualify and can not receive them because they are not national banks?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, wherever there is a national bank the tendency is to deposit money in the national bank. Where there is not a national bank I have no doubt whatever but that a regulation will be put in force to authorize the deposit of postal savings in a State bank.

Mr. SLOAN. Such is not the law at the present time.

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. SLOAN. The law on our statute books prohibits the State banks from receiving these deposits.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

One of the important recommendations of the committee is the change of system for the payment of transporting the mails over the railroads of the country. Heretofore the railroads have been paid for the weight of the mail carried. The committee suggests to the House the adoption of a plan under which future payments will be made based on space and mileage. If the recommendation of the committee be adopted, I feel sure that the plan will prove to be much more scientific and that all concerned, the Government and the railroads, will in the end be better satisfied.

It is true that some opposition is manifested to the plan proposed. The railroads themselves, I believe, are not quite pleased with this plan. From all that I have been able to learn I judge that they would prefer the present system, but, after all, in the conduct of a great department, I think the most scientific and up-to-date methods should be employed. I am not in favor of doing any injustice to the railroads, and neither is any other member of the committee. On the contrary, we believe that ample justice should be done to them, and we think that our recommendation fully meets the case.

What could be more simple than a plan which pays the railroad company a fixed price for every mile movement of a car in which mail is carried? Everybody can understand what that means, for every unit of equipment employed is ascertainable. It requires no complicated figures to adjust the compensation due the railroads for the work performed, whereas under the present cumbersome system there is always a doubt as to what the weight of the mail is and how much the Government owes the railroads.

There may be a difference of opinion as to whether the committee has reached a just conclusion on the rate to be allowed, and I am free to confess that nobody can tell with exactness just what the rate should be. I think the railroad people themselves will admit that they do not know. If they do, they never have stated it in exact terms, as far as my knowledge goes.

What are the facts with respect to this important question? The railroad companies themselves have fixed the passenger rates of the country, and the record shows that prior to last year the average receipts for a period of five years from the passenger service of the railroads of the country were approximately 25½ cents a car mile, while last year they were only about 24½ cents.

It has seemed to the committee—and I am fully convinced of the justice of the committee's conclusion—that it will cost a railroad company less for a mile movement of a railroad post-office car and its contents than it does to move a passenger car, and inasmuch as the receipts from the passenger service on rates fixed by the railroad companies themselves amount only for the last year to approximately 24½ cents a car mile, it has been assumed by the committee that 21 cents a car mile for a full railroad post-office car and $8 terminal charges, covering the switching at both ends of the route, which would make substantially 22½ cents a car mile, is at least the equivalent of the earnings of a car mile from the passenger service of the railroads.

For a half railroad post-office car the price fixed is 10½ cents and $4 terminal charges, which is the equivalent for the price paid for the full railroad car, while for a quarter car the committee recommends the payment of 5½ cents per mile and $2 switching charges, which gives a little more in proportion for this fraction of a car than for a full car.

For the storage-car service the committee recommends the payment of 20 cents a car mile, and this price is fixed because the storage car is moved at less expense than the other cars, for it is cargo, and is carried from one terminal to another without being disturbed.

The closed-pouch service, under the recommendation of the committee, is to be paid for under the weight plan, and the weights are to be ascertained by the clerks on the car, without any special weighing period.

If there can be a simpler method devised, I have not heard of it. Can anyone say that such a plan is unjust to the railroads? I think not.

The Postal Service is constantly growing. It has grown during my membership on the committee from $170,000,000 per annum until to-day the cost of the service is $325,000,000 per annum, and I predict that within the next 10 years, with all its great activities, reaching into every home in the land, furnishing not only the ordinary mail but packages of merchandise of every character through the parcel post, the volume of business will increase to a billion dollars annually.

It is the greatest service in the Government, for every man, woman, and child is affected by it. All are interested in it, and everybody should be familiar with its activities. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, the subject of rural credits was mentioned in the platforms of all the great political parties in 1912, and each pledged itself to action for the betterment of credit facilities on the farm. The Democratic platform declared that the question is "of equal importance with the question of currency reform." The Republican platform contains substantially the same declaration: "It is as important that financial machinery be provided to supply the needs of the farmer for credit as it is that the banking and currency systems be reformed in the interest of general business." The Progressive Party pledged itself "to foster the development of agricultural credit."

In the spring of 1913 a commission of seven members appointed by the President traveled through Europe cooperating with a commission made up of members appointed by governors of the several States and some of the Canadian Provinces, to study agricultural credit conditions in the Old World. At about the same time the Department of Agriculture began an extensive study of the subject.

The President, in his annual message delivered on the 2d of December, 1913, presented to Congress "the urgent necessity that special provision be made also for facilitating the credits needed by the farmers of the country." The Committee on Banking and Currency promptly delegated a subcommittee, which began work on the question even before the Federal reserve act was finally disposed of. In January of this year the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate appointed a rural credits subcommittee, and the two subcommittees thus appointed held joint hearings and discussions from February to May.

The commission which traveled abroad made its report and recommendations, and the result of the best thought of the commission appointed by the President was embodied in a specific bill, S. 4246 and H. R. 12585, introduced simultaneously in the two Houses by Senator FLETCHER and Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The commission bill deals only with land mortgage credit, the commission having come to the conclusion that short-term personal credit can be better dealt with at a future time. The result of the deliberations of the joint subcommittees on rural credits representing the Committees on Banking and Currency of the two Houses was embodied in a specific bill, dealing, like the commission bill, only with land mortgage credit. It was introduced last May simultaneously by Senator HOLLIS and myself, S. 5542 and H. R. 16478. This bill has been before the country for more than seven months without drawing serious criticism. Absolutely no criticism fatal to any fundamental feature of the bill has been made. Yet we hear it said that it is impossible to secure an agreement about legislation on this vitally important subject. Believing as I do that the controversy over Government aid is the only thing that has prevented a complete agreement about rural credits, I purpose to devote the time now allotted me chiefly to this phase of the question. The Government aid proposal can not ultimately be ignored. We may as well discuss it frankly now.

I must confess to a sense of keen disappointment in the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture, for whom I have the highest respect and the highest personal regard. There has been no question before his department of greater importance than that of rural credits, and he has no doubt given it more or less active attention for a period of nearly two years, yet in presenting his annual report last week he found it either impossible or undesirable to make any helpful criticism of the definite plans now pending before Congress, and he failed to offer any constructive suggestion or even to present a clean-cut discussion of Government aid, that particular aspect of the question which he says is the ground for the chief difference of opinion on the subject. The six pages which he devoted to this great subject treat the matter so vaguely as to suggest that he has no policy at all, and so superficially as to lead the uninformed to wrong impressions about Government aid.

The Secretary is right in saying that "the chief difference of opinion arises over whether there should be special aid furnished by the Government," but that is not the clearest possible way to state the question, because it leaves us in the dark as to what is meant by "special" aid. I am entirely confident that the Secretary favors Government aid to agricultural credit, although he is opposed to what he terms "special" aid.

SEVERAL KINDS OF GOVERNMENT AID.

In order to make this discussion clear it will be necessary to enumerate the different forms which Government aid or State aid to agriculture may take, and for the present I shall confine myself to the subject of Government aid to long-time agricultural mortgages. There are no less than six forms in which such aid may be applied. First, the Government may loan funds out of its Treasury directly to individual farmers. Second, a bank may be incorporated to loan on agricultural mortgages such funds as it may raise by the sale of bonds, and its bonds may be guaranteed by the State. Third, a cooperative or joint-stock bank may be established and endowed by a State or Government with the amount of its organization expenses or with a capital sufficient to begin business. Fourth, a State or Government may subscribe to the capital stock of such a bank, taking perhaps all of its shares, perhaps only a part of them. Fifth, a State or Government may deposit public funds with such a bank either without interest or at a low rate of interest, or it may purchase bonds of such an institution, thus providing funds to be loaned for agricultural purposes. Sixth, an agricultural mortgage bank may be given special privileges by law—a monopoly, for example, or the right to compel nonborrowing landowners within a province to join in guaranteeing bonds, or the right to eject defaulting borrowers summarily without legal process, or the right to exemption from taxation of the institution's business, property, stock, or bonds. Another form of State aid is rather similar to one of those already enumerated, and consists in an agreement by the State to give a bank a certain line of credit in case of emergency, or in case of need to buy a quantity of its mortgages, or, to state it in another way and use a term with which we are now all familiar, to "rediscount" mortgages. Of course there may be combinations of two or more of these methods of State aid.

It will be observed that some of these methods of Government aid involve a subsidy or subvention to the farmer, while others may be so administered as to result in an entirely sound investment which may ultimately be repaid to the Government. Government guarantee of the bonds of an agricultural credit institution without compensation is clearly a subsidy from the Government. It is sometimes contended that it is a subsidy which costs the Government nothing. Probably, however, it does cost the Government something, even though the Government may never be called upon to make good its guarantee, since there is created a contingent liability on the State which is likely to affect its credit in borrowing money, though, of course, in some instances this effect is so slight as to be negligible. There can be no doubt, however, that the bank taking advantage of such a guarantee is getting something for nothing. Government endowment of a bank with an initial capital, or even with organization expenses, is also clearly a subsidy. Probably exemption from taxation amounts to subsidy, though on this point I shall have something further to say.

On the other hand, Government loans to individuals, Government subscription to capital stock, or purchase of securities, or the deposit of Government funds, may or may not amount to subsidy. It depends upon the compensation exacted by the Government for the benefits given. If the money be advanced without interest, or at a rate below the reasonable worth of the use of the money, subvention exists. If fair returns be exacted, the operation is that of investment, not subvention.

The subcommittee bill proposes the incorporation of local national farm loan associations, or borrowers' cooperative associations, whose sole function shall be to make loans on farm lands within limited territory. These associations are to be federated in 12 districts forming 12 Federal land banks which will correspond roughly to the 12 Federal reserve banks. The functions of these land banks will be to buy mortgages from the local associations as such associations need the funds and to raise the capital therefor by the sale of debenture bonds to the public. We propose that Government aid shall be extended not only by providing that the local associations and land banks shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation, but also in two more direct ways—first, by purchase of stock in the proposed land banks in order to insure them a sufficient capital to begin business, and, second, by purchase from time to time of the debenture bonds issued by the land banks, when such bonds are not readily absorbed by the investing public at a rate of interest which seems fair and reasonable to the Federal Reserve Board. These purchases are an investment, not a subsidy.

Some of the forms of Government aid which I have enumerated seem to be readily accepted in this country as sound, and meet with almost no opposition, while others are violently denounced as being unfair discrimination, class legislation, and so forth. Curiously, the distinction between those forms of Government aid which are readily accepted and those which are violently denounced does not depend upon whether the proposed aid is an investment or a subvention. For example, the spending of public money to provide for the organization of a bank for a public purpose is approved by all, so far as I know, though it is clearly a subvention.

Exemption from taxation of mortgages running to cooperative agricultural credit institutions, and of the bonds and capital stock of such institutions, seems to be generally approved. It was one of the provisions of the Moss-Fletcher bill specifically approved by the President of the United States, and I venture to predict that it will be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture. And it ought to be approved, since it means nothing more than that mortgaged farm lands shall be exempt from double or treble taxation. Yet it is clearly a special favor, in that we do not attempt at the same time to exempt the city mortgage from taxation; nor do we propose to exempt the farm mortgage unless it is made in favor of one of our proposed farm land banks. It smacks of subsidy from the Federal Government and compulsory subsidy imposed on the States; yet it is so obviously and substantially just that even the theorists have neglected to denounce it.

On the other hand, the proposal that the Government shall, if need be, make a reasonable investment in shares of stock of agricultural land banks comes in for its share of criticism, though it does not involve any subsidy whatever. This form of Government aid, however, will probably meet the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. At least, we have heard from him no criticism of an identical provision in the Federal reserve act with respect to Government subscription to the stock of the Federal reserve banks. But when we propose, as in section 30 of the subcommittee bill, that the Government shall invest in land bank bonds, a higher and safer security than land bank stock, a proposal carrying not the slightest trace of Government subsidy, I fear that we shall be told by the Secretary that we are proposing "special" aid and that he can not support us. He does not, however, clearly say this in his annual report, the only kind of "special" aid which he specifically disapproves in that document being Government assistance by cash or credit directly to the farmers.

WEAKNESS OF SECRETARY HOUSTON'S REPORT.

There is in the Secretary's annual report no clean-cut expression of approval or disapproval of any specific kind of Government aid, though this is the chief point of controversy in the subject of rural credits, and therefore the point concerning which we had reason to hope for constructive suggestion from the head of the department involved. The only clear implication ventured by the Secretary is that he would not approve the direct loan of cash or credit from the Treasury to the farmer. Such a plan has been proposed in some bills which have been introduced in Congress, but is not proposed in the bill of the joint subcommittee. I do not advocate such a plan myself; yet I can not but regret that the Secretary's report should discuss this proposal in a totally misleading manner and in terms calculated to discredit any suggestion of Government aid in any form. The report misleads by stating the following propositions, which are true, but carry a false implication:

> He [the American farmer] is not in a condition of serfdom or semi-serfdom in which were some of the European peoples for whom Government aid was extended in some form or other during the last century. He is not in the condition of many of the Irish farmers for whom encouragement and aid have been furnished through the land-purchase act.

The implication is that Government aid to agricultural credit has been obsolete since the last century, except in Ireland. As a matter of fact, as I shall show presently, a very large proportion of all Government-aid projects that have ever been inaugurated have been started within the last 20 years. Within this period Government-aid projects have been started in all but the smallest countries of Europe. The policy of Government aid has spread to Egypt, South Africa, Latin America, Japan, Australia, and New Zealand, where it has been most successfully practiced. It was of value in establishing the economic independence of liberated serfs, but it has no intimate or necessary connection with the question of serfdom.

Secretary Houston's nearest approach to suggesting a constructive policy to be pursued comes in a vague and half-hearted suggestion that some plan would probably be beneficial along the general line of the Fletcher-Moss bill, or of the subcommittee bill without the Government-aid feature. The suggestion is most indefinite, but it includes these words: "Operating through private funds." If the Secretary proposes that we shall attempt to establish a long-term agricultural land-mortgage system for the benefit of small borrowers without Government aid of any sort, he is asking that we attempt that which in all the history of the world has never succeeded. Let me explain why this is so and review briefly the reported experience on this subject.

ADVANTAGES THE FARMER SHOULD HAVE.

There is no reason why a farmer should expect to repay capital borrowed for the purchase of his farm, or for the permanent improvement thereof, within a period of three or five years, if he has borrowed an amount which is a substantial fraction of the value of his property. The railroad or the manufacturing corporation would not think of undertaking such a thing, and the farmer should not. Yet mortgage loans in the United States are frequently made for periods of three years and seldom exceed five years. When the mortgage is due there is the risk of foreclosure and in any event the expense of negotiating a renewal or a new loan. Clearly, it would be to the farmer's advantage to be able to borrow for a longer period, as he would thereby not only save trouble and expense but would be relieved of anxiety. He would be certain that the land he is working will continue to be his, that the benefits of his care and his improvements will accrue to himself and to his family. The need for long-time nonrecallable loans is urged by all who have studied the question.

The farmer should have another advantage in borrowing. He should be able to repay a small installment of the principal of his loan each year, an amount so small that it will not be a serious burden to him, and yet so large that in the course of 30 or 35 years the entire debt will be extinguished. By this plan, which is known as the amortization plan, the farmer does not merely postpone the evil day when the principal sum of his debt comes due; he actually averts it altogether. The effect of long-term nonrecallable amortization loans, under such a plan as is proposed in the pending bill, is something more than a mere reduction of the rate of interest—the effect will be to provide that if a farmer continues for a term of years to pay on his mortgage an annual sum about equivalent to what he now pays in interest, he will have retired his entire debt at the end of the term, and in the meantime will not be bothered with threats of foreclosure nor with the trouble and expense of negotiating renewals.

He should have still another advantage. He should have the right to pay at his option the entire balance remaining due on his mortgage and clear his land of debt at any time he may be able to do so. He might have either one of two reasons for wishing to do this. He may prosper so as to be able to repay his debt in a time shorter than that in which he undertook to repay it, or he may find that after a few years interest rates have gone down so that he can negotiate a new loan on terms more advantageous than the original one. So he should have the right to pay in full when he pleases, yet the lender should have no option to call in the loan. This is not mere theory; it is the actual practice in almost every civilized country on the globe. Let us examine more carefully the conditions under which it is possible for this result to be accomplished, and we shall see the necessity for Government aid.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALEXANDER). Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS. Has the gentleman's subcommittee considered whether or not the granting of options to pay at any time would increase the interest rate?

Mr. BULKLEY. It would not under the system we propose. It would have no effect on it at all. It would, without doubt, increase the interest rate if you depended upon private lenders.

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT AID.

It is practically impossible for the individual investor to make long-term loans on the amortization plan, as no one wants his capital repaid to him in small driblets from year to year over a long period. If long-term amortization loans are to be made, they must be made by institutions of considerable size, so that the annual incoming amortization payments will be in sufficient volume for efficient reinvestment or for retiring obligations of the loaning institution.

Funds loaned on such long-term mortgages become fixed investments, and they should be so regarded. That is to say, such funds should not be derived from deposits payable on demand or short notice, but should be raised by the issue of bonds having a remote maturity, or even no maturity at all, being simply recallable at the option of the issuing institution. Land-mortgage institutions in Europe issue debenture bonds of this character, the whole series of bonds being secured by the whole series of mortgages owned by the issuing land-credit institution.

The flotation of such an issue, however, presents a serious difficulty. The public will not invest in such bonds unless it has absolutely implicit confidence in the institution issuing them. It has, therefore, been the earnest effort of the joint subcommittee to put into the bill every possible provision to secure public confidence in the bonds which it is proposed to issue. The bonds will be secured by mortgages made by reputable farmers, who will pledge lands to the value of at least double the amount of their loans; the appraisals are carefully guarded and are subject to Federal inspection; and the loans will be controlled by boards of directors, the members of which are neighbors of the borrowers, familiar with their character and the value of their lands, and at the same time themselves financially interested in avoiding the making of any improper loan. These mortgages will be guaranteed by the local associations making the loans, and the land bank issuing the bonds will also be responsible to the investors, whether the guaranty of the local associations is made good or not. To this is added the collective guaranty of all the land banks in the system.

Thus the security is so carefully guarded and so strongly guaranteed that the bonds will deserve public confidence. Yet it must be remembered that public confidence is a thing of slow growth, and that the investor is not likely to turn eagerly to a new form of investment unless it has such unqualified indorsement as to give him confidence. Such indorsement may come through a great banking house; it may come through some respected friend—and it need not by any means carry any guaranty with it. But the small investor having neither the time, the training, nor the facilities to investigate investments, naturally mistrusts his own judgment and hesitates to buy even good securities until some impression has been made on his mind that causes him to believe that he absolutely knows that they are good.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Those bonds of which the gentleman speaks are the bonds of what is sometimes called the Landschaften banks in Germany?

Mr. BULKLEY. They are similar in some respects. The loans are made by institutions similar in organization to the Landschaften, but each Landschaft association issues its own bonds independently, whereas we have provided for a federation of local associations and the issue of bonds by 12 large institutions, and then every bond issued by each one of those land banks is guaranteed by each one of the other 11, so that we have made a national security, whereas the Landschaft bond is a local security.

Mr. COOPER. I have read that the bonds of the Landschaften in Germany were quoted higher than those of the Imperial Government.

Mr. BULKLEY. I shall discuss that particular point later at another place in my remarks.

Mr. COOPER. Very well.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman stated a few moments ago that no farm-mortgage scheme had been successful without Government aid.

Mr. BULKLEY. I said it with some limitation. I said that no system of long-time agricultural land mortgages for the benefit of the small borrower had ever been successful without Government aid.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman would not claim that the Landschaften in Germany had Government aid?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; I will show the gentleman that before I get through.

Mr. HAYES. I mean no financial aid.

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; they have had financial aid, too, and I will discuss that presently.

Such debentures as we have proposed could be sold on the say-so of any one of a number of great banking institutions that have built up public confidence in their judgment. But bankers require to be compensated for underwritings, and frequently the profits they demand are excessive. In a system such as we propose, to be operated at minimum cost for the benefit of both the small borrower and the small investor, there is no room for middlemen's profits in the shape of promotion fees or underwriting commissions. Having established a security which is good, we must take means to bring this goodness to the knowledge of the public in some way other than through the great promoting and underwriting syndicates of bankers.

It is of course not necessary to contend that promotions and underwritings have not done much in the development of the country in the past; nor do we need to express any opinion as to how much such syndicates may be of service to the country in the future. But we do believe that it will be for the benefit of the people of this country if we can exempt the small agricultural loan from taxation by the banker and underwriter, as well as from taxation by the Federal Government, the State, and the municipality. We believe that this can be done. But, against the natural opposition of the middleman who has made his profits between the borrower and the actual lender, success in this direction can not be achieved without the interposition of a financial power which is entirely unselfish and yet great enough to command the full confidence of all the people. There is but one such power, and so we have provided for financial assistance from the United States Government. Thus alone can we be certain of securing for an agricultural credit system that prompt success which will be necessary to command and retain the confidence of both borrower and lender.

Without such Government support as is provided by our bill, it is fair to predict that the land-credit system will be slow and uncertain in its beginnings and incapable of giving substantial relief for many years to come, and, though it can not positively be said that such a system would not succeed at all, it is fair to say that success is doubtful, and that there is not at hand in all the history of the world a single example of the success of a land-mortgage system on the long-time amortization plan and for the benefit of small borrowers which has not had public financial aid.

As a warning against taking chances as to what might happen if these newly established cooperative institutions should not at once command the confidence of the public to such an extent that adequate funds would be provided for their operation, I want to read a brief quotation from Mr. Henry W. Wolff, the great English authority on cooperative banking. I quote from page 258 of his work, Cooperative Banking:

> Bankers in Germany are very much given to speculation and could, with a little clever maneuvering, easily spoil the market for land bonds, forcing them up or down at pleasure and depreciating them generally by making quotations unsteady. Nothing, of course, could be more detrimental to a mortgaging society. With money in their pockets, the societies are able to meet such machinations, and to regulate the supply of the market, so as to keep the bonds at a steady quotation, which is not only desirable in itself and certain to benefit their credit, but which is in addition specially important to their members, since fluctuations of capital value are sure to influence the rate of interest.

The German cooperative land-mortgage societies, to which Mr. Wolff had reference, had all received Government aid of one kind or another. His statement is very suggestive of what would be likely to happen in this country should we attempt to start without Government aid. With the Government aid provided in this bill the system can start as soon as the borrowers are ready and can be proved a success before it has the cooperation of a single investor; as soon as the success is proved, investors will be plenty.

PRECEDENT IN FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The plan proposed is based on the provisions of the Federal reserve act, and the proposed government aid is similar and parallel to the Government aid provided by that law. The Federal reserve act provided that if banks eligible to membership in the Federal reserve system should not subscribe to the capital stock of the proposed Federal reserve banks an amount sufficient to provide the required minimum capital, then subscriptions should be thrown open to the public, and if public subscriptions should not provide an adequate amount, then the Secretary of the Treasury was required to subscribe the balance on behalf of the United States. The provision for Government subscriptions to the stock of the proposed land banks in the pending bill is substantially identical—the Secretary of the Treasury must subscribe if the public does not subscribe enough to insure success. The Federal reserve act provides for the deposit of Government funds in the Federal reserve banks, and it provides for the issue through the Federal reserve banks of Federal reserve notes, with no limit other than the effective demand, the notes being the direct obligations of the United States. The present bill provides that under certain circumstances Government credit may be used for the benefit of the proposed land banks by the purchase of limited quantities of their bonds, a transaction substantially parallel to the issuance of notes provided for in the Federal reserve act.

The use of the public credit to support farm mortgage loans, therefore, is justified by the apparent necessities of the situation as well as by the precedent of Government aid to commercial finance created by the Federal reserve act, which has proved so acceptable to the country. That is to say, it is justified by theory and precedent. It is further justified by the experience of all the nations which have established land-mortgage systems in the interest of the small borrower, and these countries comprise the greater part of the civilized world. Though the character of Government aid varies in the different countries, in the different provinces, and at different times in the development of land-mortgage systems, all experience shows that public aid of one kind or another has been given in the establishment of successful systems of long-term mortgage credit. The State or Government may be an imperial or Federal central government; or it may be a subdivision, a province, or a State. In practice there is no uniformity of method; all practical systems have been adapted to the special needs which they must meet and to the means available. The only uniformity lies in the uniform presence of some sort of public aid in every successful land-mortgage system for small borrowers. Lessons we may learn from the practice of other lands thus lead us to the same conclusion as theory and precedent.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. As the gentleman probably knows, I introduced a bill providing for the revising of the postal savings bank law so as to take the limit off deposits and permit the loaning of money to farmers and workingmen home builders. Have the committee considered the matter of making that both a land loan and a workman's home ownership loan measure?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes. Unfortunately I have not time to discuss in full the gentleman's proposition, but I will say briefly that workingmen dwelling in cities are at present much better taken care of, through the building and loan associations, than the farmers are. As a matter of theory, I do not see very much distinction between the two, and so far as I am personally concerned I would be glad to extend the operation of the law to home owners in the cities. But I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we are having already more trouble than we can carry in extending it to the farmers, although it has been directly promised to the farmers.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It seems to be a matter of a good deal of difficulty to get Government aid extended to the producers of wealth in this country, whether farmers or workingmen, when it conflicts with the profit of money changers.

Mr. BULKLEY. I am sorry to say that is true, and we are trying to remedy that as best we can.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The workingmen home owners are getting money by paying exorbitant rates of interest to money loaners.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is very largely true so far as collateral loans are concerned, but the mortgage loan situation is in fairly good shape on account of the operations of the building and loan associations.

EXPERIENCE IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Direct Government loans to tillers of the soil are made by Great Britain, Russia, Denmark, Sweden, New Zealand, and some of the Australian Provinces. Debentures issued by land-mortgage institutions are guaranteed either by the central or provincial governments in the following countries: Austria, Switzerland, Norway, Egypt, Australia, Mexico, Argentina, and Uruguay. The following Governments have contributed by endowment to the capital stock of land-mortgage institutions: France, Italy, Hungary, Roumania, and Sweden. Subscriptions to the capital stock of such institutions have been made by the Governments of Hungary, Roumania, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, Philippine Islands, and Chile. Government funds are loaned to such institutions in France, Italy, Servia, Chile, and Japan. From all of these lists I have omitted mention of Germany and the German States, because I shall discuss Germany separately.

I shall mention these examples in greater detail, taking up first those Governments which make direct loans to the farmer.

In England the small holdings and allotments act of 1908 enables the British Government to take all the land owned by any individual in England or Wales in excess of 50 acres and to sell or lease it to a farmer or laborer. Long-time credit is given to purchasers of such lands.

The British Government has been appropriating since 1911 about a million dollars a year for the work of the Scotch board of agriculture, a part of which is the making of loans to small land holders on the long-time amortization plan.

In Ireland the British Government makes long-term loans and free grants for agricultural purposes through four official bodies, the most important of which, known as the estates commission, is said by Ambassador Herrick to be the greatest body in the world for using the credit of the State to enable farmers to acquire real estate. Since this commission was established, in 1903, it has accomplished a change of title to two-thirds of the agricultural land in Ireland and committed the British Government to obligations amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

The Russian Government by direct loans to farmers has enabled the ex-serfs to acquire lands to an aggregate value of billions of dollars. The colonization of Siberia has been promoted largely by Government loans and free transportation provided by the Government. The Peasants' State Land Bank is the largest land-credit institution in the world; it is a financial organ of the Russian Government.

The Russian policy has proved successful from a social and economic point of view, in that it has made possible the breaking up of great estates into small holdings and laid the foundation for the independence of the agricultural class. The Government has, however, been obliged to meet heavy losses, as many interest payments have been defaulted and fear of insurrection has caused the canceling of many mortgages.

The Province of Finland loans its funds to communes and to cooperative societies for colonization purposes. The territorial credit establishments for Livonia, Esthonia, and Courland were enabled to begin business by the advance of Government funds.

Denmark inaugurated in 1899 a home colonization policy, granting direct Government loans to small agricultural holders.

Sweden also allows loans from the public funds direct to small farmers.

The New Zealand system of direct loans to settlers has proved entirely successful.

New South Wales, under the act of 1899, grants to settlers direct loans financed by the issue of Government bonds.

Queensland in 1901 created a commission to make direct loans of State funds to settlers. These funds are secured either out of general appropriations or the sale of State guaranteed debentures.

I now turn to those States which aid by guaranteeing the obligations of land-mortgage institutions.

In Austria there are provincial land-mortgage institutions in all but two Provinces. These institutions are practically bureaus of the provincial governments. Their debenture bonds are guaranteed by the Provinces.

In Switzerland the Mortgage Bank of St. Gall was created and is guaranteed by the Canton.

The Norwegian Government guarantees the debentures issued by the Norwegian Bank for Laborers' Holdings and Dwellings, founded in 1903 with Government funds.

In Egypt the Government guarantees not only the debentures but the dividends on the stock of the Agricultural Bank of Egypt. This institution was established on Government initiative in 1902, after it had been proved that the Credit Foncier Egyptien, a private institution without State aid, was unable to help small borrowers.

The Province of South Australia guarantees the bonds of a State bank established in 1895 to make loans to farmers, cattlemen, and others engaged in rural industries.

In Western Australia a State bank for a similar purpose issues Government bonds under the act of 1894.

Victoria sells bonds to finance bank loans to farmers under the act of 1890.

The Federal Government of Mexico guarantees the debentures of the Institution for the Encouragement of Irrigation Works and the Development of Agriculture chartered in 1908.

The Argentine Government guarantees the notes and bonds of the Banco Hipotecario Nacional founded in 1886.

Uruguay guarantees the notes and bonds of the Banco Hipotecario del Uruguay.

State endowment is not unusual. I shall mention some examples of it.

France, by the law of 1852, appropriated 10,000,000 francs as an endowment to be distributed among institutions incorporated under that law.

In Italy there are five very old savings banks which make loans on farm mortgages and issue debenture bonds against them. All of these banks were created by endowment secured either from Government funds or from philanthropic funds.

The Hungarian Government contributed a liberal endowment fund in founding the National Land Credit Institute in 1879, and it also endowed the National Federation of Land Credit Institutions which was established in 1911.

The Roumanian Government in 1873 contributed subventions to three institutions organized on the Landschaft principle for the benefit of large landed proprietors.

In order to put an end to difficulties arising from the attempt to handle the land-credit problem by private institutions without State aid, the Swedish Government found it necessary in 1861 to establish and endow the Swedish General Mortgage Bank, which is an association of Landschaft organizations similar to the land banks proposed in the pending bill. A further subsidy was voted to this bank in 1890.

Many times states and governments have purchased stock in land banks.

The Canton governments in Switzerland afford an illustration. The Mortgage Bank of Berne secured its initial capital from the canton government, and is a depositary of public funds. In the canton of Vaud the government subscribed to a majority of the stock of the Mortgage Bank of Vaud and guarantees a 4 per cent dividend to all stockholders. The several communes in the canton supplied all of the initial capital of the Land Credit Bank of Geneva. The canton owns a substantial part of the capital stock of the Mortgage Bank of Fribourg.

The Hungarian Government contributed to the capital stock of the Boden-Kredit Institut established in 1863.

The Roumanian Government in 1908 subscribed to the capital stock of the Rural Bank, an institution established for small borrowers.

The Mortgage Bank of the Kingdom of Denmark was founded in 1906 on capital furnished by the Government.

In 1903 Norway founded the Norwegian Bank for Laborers' Holdings and Dwellings with Government funds.

The Agricultural Bank of the Philippines was established in 1908 with capital supplied by the insular government.

Finally, we turn to examples of the investment or deposit of public funds.

France, after 26 years of active discussion of the question of land-mortgage credit, enacted the law of 1852, which authorized the National Government and the departments to purchase each year certain quantities of debentures of the land-mortgage institutions authorized by the law. This feature is strikingly similar to section 30 of House bill 16478. It is to be noted that the French law of 1852 was the ripe product of 26 years of agitation and debate, and also that it has stood the test of more than 60 years of practical operation, with no substantial change found desirable.

It is to be noted, however, that the Credit Foncier, the great institution which grew up under this law, is a joint-stock corporation and enjoyed a legal monopoly of land-mortgage business for some years. The legal monopoly was discontinued, but the bank has continued to enjoy a substantial practical monopoly. In consequence the bank has inclined to do that business which was most profitable and has neglected the small farmer, so that in spite of the great success of the Credit Foncier in its own field, the French Government has found it necessary in recent years to come more directly to the aid of the small farmer. By the law of 1906 the State obtains funds from the Bank of France and lends them to small agricultural borrowers through a system of rural banks, composed entirely of farmers and subject to the general control of the ministry of agriculture. French experience, therefore, shows the necessity not only for Government aid but for a small loaning unit organized on the cooperative plan and having either actual or potential competition, as provided in the Hollis-Bulkley bill.

Land-mortgage debentures of the old Italian savings banks and of the Instituto Italiano di Credito Fondiario, organized in 1890, are legal investments for the Italian Government, as well as for the Provinces and municipalities of Italy.

The Servian Government in 1862 founded a land-mortgage institution which is to-day the depositary of national and communal funds.

The Chilean State Land Mortgage Bank, founded in 1855, is owned and managed by the Chilean Government. It is of interest to note what Ambassador Herrick says in his new book, "Rural Credits," about Chilean land-mortgage debentures:

> Land credit was organized in Chile while the Indian and buffalo in western United States could roam from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian border without crossing a railroad track or seeing the face of a white settler. Loans of 33 years, repayable by annuities, were being granted in Chile when the farmers of Kansas were losing their homesteads by the foreclosure of three and five year mortgages. Chilean mortgage bonds or debentures are officially listed on the Paris Bourse and have been made legal investments by the French ministry of finance for all purposes for which even Government bonds may be used. They are bought also by English bankers and find a ready market in other parts of the European Continent where offers of American mortgage bonds would be refused.
> The Chilean land-credit law was enacted in 1855, three years after that of France, and it has proved so satisfactory that very few amendments have been made. The law is a general one, allowing any persons who comply with its terms to form a company. A number of companies have been formed thereunder and are doing a good business. Nevertheless they operate at a disadvantage, because of the fact that the Chilean, like the French, Government organized a State bank under the general law, and although it has not given this institution a monopoly it has invested it with such privileges that no others can compete with it successfully. It holds two-thirds of the mortgages taken by bond-issuing land banks in Chile, and it is able to hold so many more than its competitors that it absolutely dictates the rate of interest.
> * * * The bonds of the bank have been made legal investments for all persons and purposes and have been purchased in large amounts by the Chilean Government, not only because of their intrinsic soundness but in order to give them a popular currency. The bonds are guaranteed by the State, which has for its own protection the mortgages taken from borrowers and the reserve.

This high praise is given to the Chilean system in spite of the fact that the Government has suffered severe losses on several occasions on account of its guaranty of the bonds. It is apparent that these losses have neither wrecked the Government nor discredited the bonds, but that this Government-aided system has established land credit in Chile on a sound basis most advantageously to the farmers of that country.

The Government of Japan provides cheap loans to the Noko Ginko, or small local land-credit institutions, and has voted them subsidies besides. The Nippon Kwango Ginko is the central land-credit bank for large loans. The Imperial Government assisted in its establishment by guaranteeing dividends on its capital stock for a period of 10 years.

GERMAN LAND-CREDIT INSTITUTIONS.

Land-mortgage credit in Germany is supplied principally by four different kinds of institutions—Landschaften; mortgage-credit banks of the States, Provinces, and districts; joint-stock mortgage banks; and savings banks. In amount of loans outstanding the Landschaften and savings banks are far more important than the other two groups.

The Landschaften are cooperative organizations of borrowers for obtaining capital on the credit of the collective mortgages of their members. Ordinarily they have no share capital, but each borrower guarantees without limit the debts of all. In some cases lands not mortgaged are also held as security for the obligations of these associations. They are nonprofit seeking, except in the sense that there is a profit to the borrowing members in securing advantageous loans.

It is sometimes supposed that the Landschaften constitute an example of the success of land-mortgage credit institutions without any form of Government aid. This is not by any means true, though they exist practically without Government aid today, and it must be said that their debenture bonds without Government guaranty or support have maintained a very favorable position in the market. It is sometimes stated that Landschaften debentures sell on a more favorable interest basis than Prussian or Imperial German bonds. This is something of an exaggeration. The truth is stated by J. R. Cahill in the report which he was commissioned to make by the British Board of Agriculture and Fisheries on "Agricultural Credit and Cooperation in Germany." Cahill says, referring to Landschaft bonds:

> The quotations of the majority of these appear to remain from under 1 to about 2 per cent lower than Prussian or Imperial Government stock bearing the same rate of interest. More than a century ago they proved their strength. The writer was informed by the director of one association that 4 per cent Prussian stock in 1802 to 1805 stood first at 83, then at 50, and in 1808 at 20, yet that Silesian association bonds did not sink below 50.

It is obvious that during the Napoleonic wars the very existence of the Prussian State was at stake, whereas war does not destroy land nor entirely destroy its value. So in an exceptional case 100 years ago Landschaft bonds sold on a materially better basis than Prussian bonds, but that is not the rule.

Frederick the Great created the first Landschaften, which were originally compulsory associations of all large landowners within a Province, all their estates, whether the owners borrowed or not, being by compulsion involved in the guaranty of the bonds of the provincial association. Frederick endowed the original Landschaft, that of Silesia, with the equivalent of $432,000, and also subjected the Crown lands in Silesia to the collective liability securing the debenture bonds of this Landschaft. All the early Landschaften received Government grants in cash to begin business; the amounts of such grants were not very large, yet the aid thus given was necessary and substantial, especially since there was added to it a compulsory liability of all manorial landowners within the several Provinces, and in some cases Crown lands and forests were also subjected to this liability. There were further cases of Government grants to the Landschaften after the Napoleonic wars. In recent years the Bavarian Agricultural Bank, which is one of the most important of the 24 German Landschaft associations, was, as Cahill says, "practically founded and capitalized by the State" in 1896.

It is clear then that the Landschaften, the first successful institutions supplying long-time agricultural credit on the basis of debenture bonds, were brought into being by the Government, and were started only with the substantial assistance of the Government.

The Landschaften have proved an example to the world of the advantage which the farmer may receive through the issue of long-time debenture bonds secured by collective mortgages. It should be remarked that most of their strength has come from cooperation and not from Government aid, though it is important to note that Government aid established that first confidence which is so absolutely essential to a new financial enterprise. They did not, however, prove an unqualified success in rendering service to the small borrower. Of them Ambassador Herrick says:

The Landschafts, like their aristocratic members, adjusted themselves with bad grace to the march of events. On the breaking up of feudalism they gave very little help to the plebeian landowners and practically none at all to the liberated serfs. In 1887 the German minister of agriculture reported that the Landschafts did not reach the one-team farmer, that is, the farmer of 18 to 34 or even 61 acres. In 1895 Sir Frederick A. Nicholson, after an exhaustive investigation in Germany, declared that they had failed to assist the majority of small farmers. Hence the service which the Landschafts are now doing this class began within the last 15 or 20 years.

It is thus apparent that at a period 126 years after the foundation of the first Landschaft the majority of small farmers had still failed to receive any benefit from the system. In countries where Government aid has been more direct and vigorous it has required no such period for the benefits to reach the small farmer.

Side by side with the Landschaften there are in Germany 16 public institutions established for a State, Province, or administrative district which make loans to farmers on mortgage security. The liabilities of each of these are guaranteed by the State, Province, or district which created it. Ambassador Herrick, after showing that neither the Landschaften or private capital could fill the needs which these institutions were organized to meet, says:

The State, therefore, intervened from a national necessity, and in organizing land credit for the general purposes of agriculture, granted a greater degree of assistance than was available to the nobility in the Landschafts.

Cahill says of these institutions that they grant loans more cheaply than the joint-stock mortgage banks, the majority of which do not find it profitable to lend at all on small properties. The savings banks, Cahill says, not only charge higher rates, but grant loans only subject to recall and allow gradual amortization only on a limited proportion of their loans. He states, however, that there are certain drawbacks incident to the official administration of these State and provincial institutions, and expresses the opinion that "organizations of landowners governed by landowners which confine their business to rural mortgages are better able to take in consideration all the conditions in arriving at their decisions." This comment is interesting in that it shows that the institutions having public aid can serve the small borrower more cheaply than the strictly private institutions; yet it shows at the same time that extreme official administration is to be avoided, being inferior in efficiency to the management of local landowners. These criticisms by Cahill on the German system justify the Government aid and local management provided in H. R. 16478.

I have said that there are four classes of institutions dealing in land-mortgage credit in Germany, but the Landschaften and public-credit institutions which I have already discussed are by far the most important in the class of business which we are considering. Herrick says:

Nearly all long-term reducible loans in Germany are made by the landschafts and public, or semipublic, credit institutions. The reason is easily explained. Such loans, repayable by annuities running through periods of many years, can not be made out of funds subject to recall. If the money is raised by the sale of debentures, they must have no fixed maturity if amortization of the loans is planned. But instruments of this kind, depriving the holders of the right of demanding the principal of their investments, can not be sold in quantities unless guaranteed by the Government or a concern connected with it; at least, this has proved to be the case in Europe. The loans from private sources are generally for short terms; that is, under 10 years and are repayable in lump or in a few instalments.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. What is the extreme amortization period?

Mr. BULKLEY. In some of the European countries it runs as high as 75 years.

I have already quoted Cahill to show that the private joint-stock mortgage banks of Germany are unable to give the farmer as reasonable accommodation as the public land-credit institutions, and that, in fact, they do but a small proportion of the land-credit business. Of them Herrick says:

The lack of success of the German land-credit banks as regards farm loans has been attributed to various causes. But the trouble seems to be that only a few of them have the necessary size and standing to enable them to sell bonds which have no fixed time for maturity, and that in consequence of their inability to raise money by such investments, they are not in a position to grant long-term, reducible loans of the kind needed by agriculture. The proof of this lies in the fact that the two big banks which have gained the confidence of the investing public do a large farm-mortgage business, nearly all of which is on the amortization plan and represented by debentures not recallable by the holders.

It will be noted that Mr. Herrick says there are two of these banks big enough and strong enough to have gained the confidence of the investing public and therefore able to do a large farm-mortgage business on the amortization plan. What are these two banks, and have they had any Government aid? Ambassador Herrick answers the question:

These two concerns are the Bavarian Mortgage and Exchange Bank of Munich and the Prussian Central Land Credit Co. The King and Queen of Bavaria and high State officials were charter members of the former when it was founded in 1835. The latter, which was established in 1870 with the special object of aiding agriculture, is a semipublic institution. * * * The Prussian Central Land Credit Co., a joint-stock corporation, was the outcome of the efforts of Prince Bismarck to create a national mortgage institution for the great Empire that he was forming. He assisted three powerful banking houses to obtain a charter by a special law, and he persuaded France, whom Germany was about to fight, to order the then president of the Credit Foncier to serve on its board of directors. The Government Bank of Prussia bought a large block of stock so as to give the new concern prestige and aid its first ventures.

The German savings banks make loans in very large volume to farmers, but as these loans are made out of the funds which the banks must repay to their depositors on demand they are not able to make long-term loans on the amortization plan, and, according to Cahill and Herrick, they do not attempt to do so. They also charge higher rates than the Landschaften and public credit institutions. For these reasons their practices can give us no light on the problem of how best to secure long-term reducible loans at the lowest possible rates of interest.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. If I yield to the gentleman I must have some more time.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield the gentleman 15 minutes when he needs it.

Mr. BULKLEY. I thank the gentleman. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Has the gentleman any information as to Government postal savings banks in Europe loaning their money to farmers and workingmen?

Mr. BULKLEY. I can not give the gentleman full information, but in any case the amount that they loan on farm mortgages is not large. It is not a material element.

Mr. NORTON. I want to ask the gentleman a question. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois the gentleman from Ohio stated that he did not recognize any difference between Government aid in loans to workmen and to farmers.

Mr. BULKLEY. In endeavoring to answer the question briefly I perhaps may have said something of that kind; but I meant to say that there was no substantial difference. Of course there is a difference, because it must always be Government policy to encourage the production of the food supply for the people.

Mr. NORTON. I want to congratulate the gentleman on joining the forces for Government aid. But I wanted the gentleman to make clear that there is a distinction in principle.

Mr. SLOAN. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit, is not the difference this, that your loan is based on the earning power of the mortgaged property instead of the sale value?

Mr. BULKLEY. It would be based primarily on the earning power, and there would be some distinction on that ground.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I think the experience shows in Europe that in the loaning system there would be no difference in ability to pay.

Mr. BULKLEY. I think that is substantially true, and I am in sympathy with the gentleman from Illinois; but I hope he will not pursue that any further, as it is a question not at issue at this time.

Mr. NORTON. The principle is not in the ability to pay, but the principle is in the object and purpose of the Government going into the aid of credit to farmers who produce something that is needed by everyone in the country.

Mr. RAGSDALE rose.

Mr. BULKLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I was merely going to suggest that I was a member of the subcommittee of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is chairman, and I have some idea of the enormous amount of work he has devoted to this argument; and I would ask, as a courtesy to those who want to hear it, that he be allowed to present it in a connected form, and then, after he gets through, gentlemen can ask such questions as they wish.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise to second the motion.

Mr. BULKLEY. I thank the gentlemen.

Mr. Wolff, the great English authority from whom I have already quoted, in his work, "Cooperative Banking," discusses the failure of the Landschaften organizations to serve the needs of the small farmer and says, at page 249:

> It is on such grounds chiefly that various Governments, some considerable time ago, took the matter into their own hands, deeming it to be their duty to do so. We shall see that cooperative mortgage-credit institutions are fully as practicable for small owners as for large. But the fact was not at once perceived. And one can scarcely be surprised at the various Governments desiring not to let their horse starve, while the cooperative grass was slowly—very slowly—growing. "Paternal" Government interference, which means State socialism, is so much on the increase, to the discouragement of individual effort, that one scarcely cares to see additional arguments advanced in its favor. However, in this particular matter, it is impossible not to agree with the late Dr. Buchenberger, who testified that the Government institutions have plainly done good, and have, above all things, achieved their particular purpose of bringing appropriate assistance to the small agriculturists.

This concludes my brief survey of foreign land-mortgage credit institutions. In making it I have quoted many times directly from Ambassador Herrick's new work, "Rural Credits," and I am also indebted to this work for much of the information which I have condensed and submitted without quotation marks. The ambassador's very complete study of the land-mortgage credit institutions of the world shows clearly as a matter of historical fact that every success in the field we are considering has been attained by the assistance of Government in some form. The showing to this effect is the more impressive and the more incontrovertible because Mr. Herrick's work was not written with the idea of establishing the doctrine of Government aid as a rule of action in this country. On the contrary, he takes a position substantially opposed to it. We may therefore feel the more certain that if there had been in all history a single successful example of the establishment without Government aid of a system of long-term reducible farm-mortgage loans for the benefit of the small borrower Ambassador Herrick would have found it and described it. But he has not.

PROPOSED AID A PROPER GOVERNMENT FUNCTION.

Why then are we to cast aside all that is taught us by the experience of the whole civilized world during a century and a half of efforts to solve this great problem? What reason is there that our Government should refuse to adopt the most essential and fundamental element which has contributed to the success of small farmers' land credit everywhere else in the world?

Ambassador Herrick says:

> Special legislation either for individuals or classes would now be revolutionary and also would deaden the spirits of those who would rely on it. The American farmers are better men than the European peasantry. Furthermore they are the most independent and self-reliant part of the country's population. It does not seem likely that they will demand privileges and special favors devised for conditions which have no parallel in this country, and which would do them in the long run more harm than good.

All of us will agree with the ambassador in praising the American farmer, and we may also agree with him in opposing special legislation for individuals or classes if he means by it the direct appropriation of Government funds to be paid to individuals or corporations to increase the profits of a business, as is proposed by the ship subsidy advocates, or if he means such special legislation as has from time to time been enacted for the benefit of certain individuals and classes in pursuance of the so-called protective tariff system, which has indeed deadened the spirit of those who have relied upon it. We rejoice to think that such legislation would now be revolutionary; it would certainly not be novel.

But if he means that our Federal Government has no function but to gather taxes and to keep order, if he means it is not proper for the Federal Government through its departments to enter into such business as may best promote the prosperity and moral and material interests of the people, and that without regard to whether such business may be primarily of some incidental benefit to an individual or a class, then he is not abreast of the spirit of the times.

For years the Government has spent many millions annually, for which it has no hope of being reimbursed, in the improvement of rivers and harbors, and it has not hesitated to continue this expenditure for the general welfare because of the fact that it involves certain direct benefits to communities, to shipping interests, and to owners of docks and wharves. We have constructed great irrigation works to be sold to settlers at actual cost, and we allow them many years to make payment, yet we do not charge them interest on the investment. We have given away countless acres of the public domain to homesteaders for the purpose of developing our country, encouraging agriculture, and increasing the number of home owners. Yet we do not hear that the direct beneficiaries of these vast gifts from the Government have lost their virility by having had the door of opportunity opened to them by a beneficent Government.

The Government maintains diplomatic and commercial representatives in foreign lands, and no one questions the propriety or the necessity of this service, though its direct primary benefits can go only to travelers, importers, exporters, and those who have investments abroad, the vast majority of the American people being benefited only indirectly. Public opinion has approved the building of the Panama Canal, though some of our citizens will receive from it more direct benefits than others. Public opinion approves the building of the Alaska Railway, though in the development of that great country certain private owners will secure a greater benefit than the rest of us. And now we are proposing to put Government money into the purchase and construction of ships, the operation of which will unquestionably benefit the whole country, but more directly those communities which are situated on the seaboard, those merchants who have foreign connections, and the seamen who may be employed in operating the ships.

But neither foreign trade nor transcontinental transportation nor the development of Alaskan resources is more important or fundamental for this country than the development of agriculture. And if Ambassador Herrick thinks that special legislation and special administrative help is revolutionary or deadening to the spirit of the American farmer, he should read the reports of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1913 and 1914.

Secretary Houston confidently tackles the big problems in the development of our agriculture without too much refinement about "special legislation," "governmental favor," or "deadening spirit." He sees the big things that it is necessary in modern times for a government to do, and proceeds to do them even though the results of his action may be directly to increase the profits of a certain class of our citizenship. It is necessary not only for the Government to procure and disseminate information at considerable cost to the Government and no cost to the farmer, but it is necessary also to use the national resources in the interest of those citizens whose business and location make it possible for them to put such benefits to use. It is sometimes necessary to spend Government money directly to help the agricultural class, and even some individuals of that class. At least it is deemed necessary according to the modern way of looking at things, though the old laissez-faire school of government would doubtless have found it more consistent to keep hands off.

I speak now not of theory but of actual accomplishment, reported with justifiable pride and enthusiasm by Secretary Houston. The conclusive justification of Government activity in procuring and disseminating information concerning the preparation of foods is contained in the following words in Secretary Houston's report for 1913:

> Savings of waste and economical utilization of products are becoming more and more important; the Government must conduct such investigations, since they are usually so costly that only the larger industrial corporations can undertake them independently. The results obtained by the Government are published for the use of all. The results of private investigation are either kept secret or patented, and thus give an opportunity for monopoly.

Of course when the Secretary says "for the use of all" it must be taken to mean all that class of persons engaged in the preparation of foods. But this primary benefit to a class is distributed to the public generally by competition within that class. This is the sound principle of all the great activities of the Department of Agriculture in gathering and distributing information.

For the distribution of information the department has established the Office of Information for the purpose of preparing brief, popular statements of facts. Of it the annual report says:

> This office gathers the facts from the printed material and from typewritten reports and by direct interview with specialists. This material is then prepared in simple news form, mimeographed, and given to papers, particularly in the special districts to which it applies. It is also issued in the form of a weekly letter which is sent to more than 50,000 crop correspondents and progressive farmers.

In this service there is apparently discrimination in favor of "special districts," also in favor of special classes, namely, crop correspondents and farmers, and among farmers discrimination is made between those who are "progressive" and those who are not. Many finespun governmental doctrines may apply to this simple proposition, but the department very sensibly overlooks them and promotes the business in a businesslike way. Such information as it can gather is placed where it will do the most good without regard to the special benefit conferred upon classes or individuals. That it is impossible to secure all the information which might be desired by all of the people in the country and distribute it with absolute equality is not and should not be a reason for failing to supply such practical information as can be secured to the best of the department's ability.

The information secured and distributed to farmers is of considerable variety. The farmer is taught how to manage his farm as a business proposition. Says Secretary Houston:

Important results have been obtained in the study of the cost of producing farm products, the factors which affect the profitableness of farm enterprise, and the best way of organizing these enterprises so as to obtain the greatest net income. These studies have also made possible the devising of suitable methods of farm cost accounting for the farmers' use.

Again:

The department is giving special attention to the subject of farm management with the view of rendering to the farmer service similar to that rendered to the business man and the manufacturer by efficiency experts and engineers.

Of course the business man and the manufacturer are in the habit of paying for the service of efficiency experts and engineers, but as their business is ordinarily done on a scale large enough to justify such expense, and as it is in any case the policy of the Government to develop agriculture, it is of course appropriate that the department should supply this service to the farmer free of cost. There is little danger that the conferring of this special benefit to a class will deaden the spirit of the American farmer.

The farmer's wife is taught how to manage the home. Says the report:

The department believes that intelligent help to women in matters of home management will contribute directly to the agricultural success of the farm. It purposes therefore to make more complete studies of domestic conditions on the farm, to experiment with labor-saving devices and methods, and to study completely the question of practical sanitation and hygienic protection for the farm family.

The expenditure of Federal money to improve conditions in the farm home is directly in line with the intelligent development of agriculture.

The beneficent activities of the department are not confined to gathering and distributing information. Property is given to the farmer. To quote:

The distribution of drought-resistant field seeds in the Great Plains area and other dry-land sections of the country has apparently been productive of excellent results.

When it comes to fighting pests and diseases, the department is ready to spend money not only for the farming class as a whole but for the particular class of farmer, or even the individual farmer, who is suffering.

The following shows the good results of direct Federal appropriations for the benefit of cattlemen in the Southern States where cattle ticks have done great damage from Virginia to southern California:

The most effective means of destroying the ticks is by dipping the cattle in an arsenical solution. The success of this work is now only a matter of time and money, and with adequate appropriations the extermination of the ticks can be completed before many years have passed.

The Rocky Mountain potato grower, as well as the southern cattleman, comes in for his share of free Federal service, and the department pathologists have been giving attention to several new diseases of the potato.

Secretary Houston looks with favor on a plan of cooperation between the States and Federal Government by the terms of which Government money shall be expended in the improvement of rural roads.

That Secretary Houston does not hesitate to advocate the Government going into business in competition with private individuals and corporations when there is a public good to be served is shown in the following sentences concerning the department's timber policy:

The national forests must be made to grow all the timber that they can; they must supply the needs of the public at as low cost to the public as possible; and they must be so managed as to protect the public against timber monopoly through private control of stumpage or of the manufacture of lumber. * * * Sales of timber are being aggressively pushed, and the cut is rising yearly. The timber is sold on terms and conditions which safeguard the public against the evils of speculation and monopoly. Full value for the public timber sold for commercial use is obtained, and must be obtained if the Government is not to subsidize those business enterprises which buy the lumber.

Following is a statement of the department's grazing policy, a wise and constructive one, though it might be called paternalistic:

The objects of regulated use of the range for grazing are full use of the resources without injury to timber growth and water flow, the encouragement of the live-stock industry, and healthy upbuilding of the West through widely diffused participation in the range privilege by small owners. * * * Developing the industry along lines which contribute to home building and diffuse prosperity shows what true conservation means.

If the Government can issue its notes in response to the financial demands of commerce, it can with equal propriety invest its funds in response to the financial demands of agriculture. If it can use the public range for the healthy upbuilding of the West, to promote home building and diffuse prosperity, surely it can use the public credit for these same objects in the healthy upbuilding of the whole country. If it can go into private business in growing and selling timber in order to safeguard the public against speculation in timber and a monopoly of the Lumber Trust, surely it can take a hand in land-mortgage credits to safeguard the public against speculation in farm lands and the monopoly of the Money Trust.

EFFECT ON NATIONAL CREDIT.

There remains one aspect of the question which I have not yet discussed. It does not require much discussion, since no criticism has been made on this point, and it is altogether likely that none will be. Yet it is fair to inquire whether any possible danger to the national credit lurks in the provisions of this bill. A single comparison will dispose of any fear on that score.

Our national debt is roughly a billion dollars. The French national debt, before the beginning of the present war, was about seven billion dollars. French Government bonds were selling before the war on about a 3½ per cent basis. We have two and one-half times as many people, and many times the national resources that France has. Who will say that our credit is not good for as big a national debt as France can support?

The investment of Treasury funds contemplated by this bill would be only to such an amount as might be necessary to maintain a fair market for the land-bank bonds from time to time, but never to exceed $50,000,000 in one year. The rate of interest on the bonds would be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board according to the fair value of money in the world market. It would be evidence of bad management if the Federal Reserve Board should authorize the issue of such an amount of land-bank bonds at such a rate of interest as to make it necessary to call on the Treasury for the full fifty millions in any one year. It would prove incompetency if the full amount should be demanded each year for a series of years. It is inconceivable that the full amount could be called for each year for a hundred years. Yet if that should happen, and if during the century it were found impossible to resell any of those bonds, and impossible to raise the funds to buy them other than by reborrowing, and if none of the bonds were paid at maturity, then upon the happening of these four contingencies, any one of them practically impossible, it would be necessary in the course of a century to issue $5,000,000,000 in bonds, and increase our national debt to six billions, still a billion short of the French debt as it stood last summer.

Thus it is clear that, although the credit of our Government could support a bond issue of $5,000,000,000 in the course of the next century, it is quite impossible that so large an issue would be needed under the provisions of this bill. This conclusion becomes more evidently correct when it is considered that the proposed land-bank bonds would probably have a maturity of 30 years, corresponding to the longest maturity of mortgages authorized, so that if the Government should buy the full fifty millions a year for 30 years it could thereafter continue to buy $50,000,000 worth of bonds a year forever and pay for them out of the proceeds of the maturing bonds.

It must be remembered, too, that even if the Government should go heavily into debt to buy these bonds, it would certainly have something substantial to show for its investment. The possession of a large quantity of these bonds would be a source of great strength to the Treasury, for the bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may on 30 days' notice require the land banks to cease making further investments and to devote their total available receipts above maturing liabilities to the redemption of bonds held by the Government, even before the maturity of such bonds. Thus the Government, having borrowed at low rates in time of financial ease on its own bonds, which have no maturity at all, would have large sums available for immediate use in case of national emergency. And if the land banks were unable to redeem such bonds rapidly enough to meet the needs of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury could exercise the option which the bill gives him to sell land-bank bonds, an operation which he might find more convenient than the issue of new United States bonds in times of national stress. It is clear that the effect of this legislation, so far from being a drain on the Treasury or a strain on the national credit, will actually prove a very great source of national financial strength.

I have reviewed our reasons for proposing Government aid in the particular form in which we have proposed it—the theory of it, the precedent for it, the experience justifying it, its practicability, and its effect on the Government credit. My argument on that point is ended.

THE NEED FOR FARM-CREDIT LEGISLATION.

Now, just a few words on the need of farm-credit legislation. A year ago it was admitted by all. There seems now to be a disposition in some quarters to give the impression that the Federal reserve act will provide all the additional credit facilities that the farmer needs. It will not.

Secretary Houston's report elaborates somewhat on the benefits which he says that the Federal reserve act will give the farmer. Doubtless the rediscount facilities afforded by the Federal reserve act to national and other member banks, and the eligibility for rediscount of six months' notes drawn against farm products will, to some extent, ease the short-time credit situation for the farmer. The farmer will not fail to understand, however, that only a very small proportion of his total investment is represented by agricultural products which can be sold inside of six months to meet a six months' note drawn against them. He will not fail to contrast his situation in this respect with that of the city merchant, who probably has no capital tied up in his place of business, which may be established in rented quarters, and whose stock in trade may be represented by goods which remain in his possession less than 90 days, and can therefore be financed by notes which are rediscountable under the terms of the Federal reserve act. The merchant can make rediscountable paper for almost his entire investment; the farmer can make rediscountable paper for only a very small fraction of his investment.

The provision in the Federal reserve act permitting certain national banks to lend on farm lands for not to exceed five years may help the farmer to some extent. But it is not likely that the national banks will largely avail themselves of this privilege, as they know that it is not good banking to tie up in a long-term investment money which they may be called upon to pay on demand. Furthermore, commercial banks will generally find short loans, and consequent frequent compounding of interest more profitable than mortgage loans. The aggregate amount which can be loaned by a national bank on farm lands under the terms of the Federal reserve act is only one-fourth of its capital and surplus or one-third of its time deposits, whichever of the two is smaller. A bank having no time deposits could make no such loans at all, no matter how great its capital and surplus, and a bank with $40,000 capital and surplus could loan on farm lands but $10,000, no matter how great its time deposits. Under these limitations, even if the national banks were anxious to make as many farm loans as possible, which they are not, they could not take care of 10 per cent of the farm-loan business of the United States.

But the fact is that the Federal reserve act scarcely touches the need of agricultural land-mortgage credit at all. What we need in this country, and have not, is a system for long-time mortgages. Five years is ordinarily too short a time in which to expect to repay indebtedness incurred in the purchase or permanent improvement of farm lands. The Federal reserve act may help the farmer in certain classes of credit to which he already had access, but it has no application at all to the long-time mortgage, of which the farmer stands in need.

Secretary Houston's report says that the people of the United States have ampler financial agencies than any elsewhere in the world, and have greatly developed the habit of using these agencies. The farmer will be interested to know this. But the farmer also knows that he is paying higher interest rates than the European or Australian farmer, and that long-time mortgage credit is not available to him at all as it is to his foreign competitor. The President presented the situation with the right perspective a year ago when he said:

> We must add the means by which the farmer may make his credit constantly and easily available, and command when he will the capital by which to support and expand his business. We lag behind many other great countries of the modern world in attempting to do this. Systems of rural credits have been studied and developed on the other side of the water, while we left our farmers to shift for themselves in the ordinary money market. You have but to look about you in any rural district to see the result, the handicap and embarrassment which have been placed upon those who produce our food.

To meet this urgent need your subcommittee has prepared a bill which is in the nature of a compromise of many conflicting views. It accords with the experience of the world and with the views of practically all of the witnesses who came before the subcommittee. It has been substantially indorsed by the National Grange, as will appear from certain resolutions and reports which I shall ask leave to have printed with my speech. It has not been directly challenged in public on any vital point during a period of seven months since it has been made public, either in Congress or elsewhere, and I challenge any who oppose it to criticize it now.

All political parties have promised the farmer that the credit machinery peculiarly adapted to his business shall be provided. He knows that it is as much a Government function to do whatever may be necessary to provide him with adequate credit facilities as it is to teach him how to manage his farm and his wife how to manage her kitchen, which Secretary Houston is already doing. This great responsibility can not be evaded by saying, as the Secretary says, that "the American farmer is sturdy, independent, and self-reliant." These compliments could have been bestowed on the cave man who lived in bygone ages. The American farmer of to-day deserves not only these compliments, but one more which the cave man did not deserve—he is intelligent. [Applause.] And he knows that when a promise is made to him it should be fulfilled. [Applause.]

The President does not dispose of the shipping question by telling the importers and exporters that they are "sturdy, independent, and self-reliant." What would they think of him if he did? They are as well able to find ships for themselves as the farmer is to find credit for himself. True the ships they would find for themselves would not be conveniently adequate to their purposes, and would cost high, but that is true also of the credit which the farmer finds for himself. Yet the President does not propose to leave our men of commerce to shift for themselves, to depend on foreigners or profit-seeking capitalists to furnish vessels. He promptly proposes that the Government do what is necessary to put the American flag on the seas for the benefit of American commerce. This policy will bring trade and dollars to our land. Now, let the Government also do what is necessary to put the American farmer on his own farm. This will bring us dollars, too, and, better yet, will promote the prosperity and insure the independent ownership of millions of American farm homes, now and in the years to come. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, referring to matters that occurred in the House on yesterday afternoon when the chairman of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee was addressing the Members, I wish to say that when interrupting the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], I had no intention of reflecting on the integrity or conduct of any Member of this body on either side. The special rule which was up for consideration had been presented to this body at the request of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the Postmaster General, and the administration, and the Committee on Rules was only carrying out what it deemed to be its duty in presenting that rule. The previous question had been ordered on the rule by unanimous consent. A roll call was being had, and after voting I had gone to the restaurant and the barber shop and only returned just as the call was being completed, and was not personally cognizant of what was transpiring. The special rule in regard to railway mail pay embodied in the bill only what had been passed through the House at the last session of Congress practically by unanimous consent, and I had supposed that there was no objection to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, surely I did not have any wish to reflect on any Member, for I did not know how any Member of this House had voted on the special rule except myself, and presumed that practically all had voted for it, because the previous question had been ordered by unanimous consent. I thought the House was entitled to the information that came to me as chairman, and only interposed for the purpose of saying that much to my colleagues without meaning to criticize or disparage any Member. I would not appear now and read the telegrams to the committee were it not for the fact that my statements seemed to be challenged, and I stated that I would read the telegrams to this body. I did not show these telegrams to any member of the committee because I had thought another course would dispose finally of the matter, and such action was not necessary or important. Here is one telegram that came to me the night before the committee met and was sent to me at my residence:

PENNSYLVANIA STATION,
New York, December 15, 1914.

Hon. R. L. HENRY,
Chairman Committee on Rules,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of 264 leading railroads, representing nearly 90 per cent of the mileage of the United States, I would respectfully ask that you grant a hearing to our committee on the application of House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to make new legislation in order on appropriation bill which practically embodies the provisions of House bill 7042, which has already passed the House and is now pending before Senate committee. We earnestly protest against this legislation, and beg for an opportunity to be heard on the subject.

RALPH PETERS,
Chairman Committee on Railway Mail Pay.

Here is another telegram from San Francisco, Cal., dated December 16, 1914, coming to my residence:

Hon. R. L. HENRY,
Chairman Committee on Rules,
1825 Nineteenth Street, Washington, D. C.:

This association, comprising short important railroads of 11 Western States, respectfully protests against your honorable committee ruling to make Moon bill proper legislation as part of Post Office appropriation bill without giving this association an opportunity to be heard on the Moon bill, which vitally concerns us, and which hearing we respectfully request at an early date.

WESTERN ASSOCIATION OF SHORT LINE RAILWAYS,
By D. M. SWOBE.

Here is another, from Valdosta, Ga., dated December 16, 1914:

Hon. R. L. HENRY,
Chairman Committee on Rules,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of membership of Short Line Railroad Association of Southeast we respectfully urge that your committee do not make special rule making Moon bill proper legislation as part of Post Office appropriation bill, which House Committee on Post Offices has so included. We also respectfully request that you grant short lines hearing before passing upon this rule. Answer at our expense.

J. W. OGLESBY, President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. HENRY. Here is another telegram:

NEW YORK, December 16, 1914.

Hon. R. L. HENRY,
Chairman Committee on Rules,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Will you kindly grant this association a hearing on the proposed special rule to embody the Moon bill in the Post Office appropriation bill?

SHORT LINE RAILROAD ASSOCIATION,
60 Wall Street, New York City.

Mr. Chairman, these telegrams came to me as chairman of the Committee on Rules; and inasmuch as this legislation had been passed before, and inasmuch as I thought there could be no opposition to this special rule in the House of Representatives on either side, being, as I remember it, a unanimous report of the committee, I did not see any necessity for going into these things further than stating the general terms of the rule.

Answering these telegrams, I did not reply by wire, because I did not have time. They came the night before the committee was to meet; but here is one of my replies, and the others were strictly in line with it:

Mr. J. W. OGLESBY, Valdosta, Ga.

MY DEAR SIR: Permit me to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram in regard to the legislation proposed to be incorporated in the Moon bill. The committee did not deem it wise to have a hearing on this subject, inasmuch as the Post Office Committee had asked for the rule and it was thought proper to grant their request.

Very truly, yours,

R. L. HENRY.

On the day the committee met to act on the special rule, two gentlemen who claimed to represent railroads came to the Committee on Rules, and sent word to me as chairman of that committee that they wished a hearing before the committee. Judge MOON was in my office at the time, and he and I were conferring about it. I sent word out to these gentlemen that a hearing was unnecessary and would amount to nothing, because, in my judgment, the Committee on Rules would promptly acquiesce in the request of the chairman of the Post Office Committee, the Postmaster General, and the administration, and that any time given them would be lost and it would be useless to grant them a hearing. I will say that I sent word to my clerk by the messenger to take the names of these gentlemen and their addresses, so that if it became necessary to confer with them I could communicate with them later. One of those gentlemen left his name, stating that it was Mack, and that he was at the Raleigh Hotel, and that he represented the International & Great Northern Railroad. The other gentleman left his name, which was misplaced, but stated to the clerk, so the clerk informs me, that he represented the Southern Pacific Railway system, and wanted a hearing to protest against this special rule.

All that I said yesterday was that the only protests coming to the chairman of the Committee on Rules or to the Committee on Rules, as far as I knew, came from the railroads. When I said that, thinking I was stating a fact my colleagues would gladly hear and wanted to know, without meaning to impugn the motives or the conduct of any Representative about his vote on the rule, because it was personally immaterial to me, and I did not know how anyone voted except myself.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will my friend yield to me?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then my friend from Texas did not intend by anything that he said to sanction the abuse by the gentleman from Tennessee of Democratic Members who voted against the rule?

Mr. HENRY. I say I did not intend to reflect on any Member, expressly or by implication, and, not knowing all that had transpired in my absence, was giving the information to my colleagues. I would rather discuss my own motives and my own conduct, without trying to construe what some one else said. I was speaking for myself and for no one else.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the gentleman from Tennessee was very severe in his speech, and I think his remarks were unfounded and unwarranted from every viewpoint.

Mr. HENRY. I would rather that my colleague from Tennessee would take up that matter with him, because I did not hear all of the gentleman's speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I could answer the gentleman from Alabama. The remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee on that occasion were not abusive of anybody. The gentleman from Tennessee said expressly upon this floor that he did not undertake to say that any man on this floor was controlled by the railroads, the postmasters, or anybody else. He said expressly that he did not charge corruption to anybody; and he said further, and he says it now, that the facts and circumstances connected with the whole transaction, the part that certain gentlemen have played in votes and otherwise, left the impression upon my mind—and I had a right to express that impression to this House, whether it agreed with it or not—that there were some influences that prevented the adoption of this rule recommended by the administration, the Post Office Committee, and the Committee on Rules. The gentleman did not undertake to say that that was railroad influence. He simply asked the question, if you will see the RECORD, "Was it the influence of the carriers, was it the influence of the postmasters, or was it the influence of the railroad companies?" I do not care what influenced you, whether it is one of those three things or something else. I said, and say yet, it was a most egregious error not to give the rule that would save this country $10,000,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The gentleman from Tennessee has control of the time and has the floor.

Mr. MOON. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Characterized Members as craven cowards, and referred to those who went down to the Clerk's desk and changed their votes. I was one of that number to go to the Clerk's desk and change my vote, because I voted wrong in the outset. If I understood the proposition correctly—and we had not time to get an explanation about it—the only way we could have the matter reopened was to defeat that rule, and then let another rule come in, so we could have an understanding about it. The gentleman from Tennessee lost his temper and made a severe arraignment of the Democrats on this side who did not vote with him, and the arraignment was printed in the RECORD to-day, which was another mistake made by the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter on the Republican side.] And I state, as one of those who made the change, that no railroad influenced me, and I have heard of no railroad influence on this floor; and the gentleman ought not to make a charge of that kind unless he can prove it.

Mr. MOON. What did influence the gentleman?

Mr. HEFLIN. And I can not believe that any Member who changed his vote was influenced by any railroad.

Mr. MOON. I want the gentleman from Alabama to understand that I gave three reasons which appeared to me might actuate gentlemen in changing their votes. If neither one of those actuated the gentleman, what was the reason?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not want to injure the mail service as now carried on by the rural carriers. [Applause.] I did not want to injure the third and fourth class postmasters, and I did not want to injure the Railway Mail Service, either, in the United States. [Applause.] I am not an enemy of the railroads. I am the friend of every legitimate industry and enterprise in this country; and the Democratic Party is not the enemy of legitimate railroad business. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Nobody said it was.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, the gentleman on yesterday, piqued because this rule was defeated, was unjustified and unwarranted from every viewpoint in arraigning the Democrats on this side [applause], who are as good Democrats as live, and not only that, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. It does not lie within the mouth of my good friend to question my Democracy or that of other Democrats in this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. The gentleman from Alabama is speaking in the time and with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was very much in hopes, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Tennessee——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield further?

Mr. MOON. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was very much in hopes, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Tennessee, for whom I have always had a warm personal friendship, would follow the course of my good friend from Texas [Mr. HENRY], who stated to this House that he did not mean to reflect in any way upon the integrity or honor of any Democrat who dared to vote against him on yesterday. I had hoped that the gentleman from Tennessee would pursue that course and say to the country, as the gentleman from Texas said, that no Democrat who went down there and changed his vote on yesterday was susceptible to sinister influences in this House. [Applause.] I do not believe that any Democrat who dared to go down and change his vote that he believed was wrong ought to be characterized as the gentleman from Tennessee characterized us on yesterday, and I thought that after the gentleman from Tennessee had time to think deliberately over what he had said that he would not print that speech in the RECORD against men in this House who ought not to have aspersions of that sort cast upon them by him or anybody else. [Applause.] The Democratic Party has had such a record for clean dealing and for honest work in the open that I did not think the gentleman from Tennessee would arraign his party without warrant as he has done in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not answer my questions. He did not say what influenced him.

Mr. HEFLIN. I just stated——

Mr. MOON. He did not say whether it was the postmasters or the rural carriers or the railroads, but he dodged the question and said he did not want to injure any industry in this country, and so on. Does not the gentleman know that he could have voted for the rule and then have voted down anything under it, which was necessary? Does not the gentleman know that the main feature of this bill, the only great feature in it, is the railroad proposition, and does he not know that when he voted as he did he voted against the consideration of that railroad proposition that would save this country eight millions of dollars every year, if carried? I have no desire to reflect, and I have not reflected, as this speech shows, if it is carefully read, on the integrity of anybody. In order that we may be sure, listen to what I said, after I had time and again said what I did say:

> I do not know—I would not undertake to say, and I have not said, that the railroads have brought any direct influence upon any Member of this House.

That was said in the body of the speech, and that it might be certain——

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Wait one moment—that it might be certain, I said at the end:

> I charge no man with corruption, but with most egregious error when, intentionally or not, he permits himself to appear and act in opposition to the best interest of his party and country.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not one of those who changed his vote yesterday, but on that point I want to direct the gentleman's attention to a remark that he made in that speech.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman must take that speech as a whole, and not separately.

Mr. HAMLIN. I notice the gentleman says:

> I do not care whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. Shall the letters "R. I."—railroad influence—be branded on his brow when he goes back to his constituency and tells them that he would not consider a question under which their rights might be protected?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I said that, and I say that now.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then the gentleman says just what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] says he did say.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not apologize for anything I did say. That is put in the form of a question. I asked the question "Shall it be done?" You must answer that question yourself. I will not. I have not said that it was true that that influence existed. Upon the contrary, I disclaimed that, but I am not going to retreat one single inch. I have no apologies to make for one single word that was uttered here yesterday. You did put yourselves in a bad attitude. I do not say that you were corrupt, and I do not believe that you were, but you put yourselves in an attitude you ought not to have put yourselves in, and you are entitled to the censure that you received.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman said:

> Gentlemen, like craven cowards——

Mr. MOON. Oh, the gentleman stated that a while ago.

Mr. HEFLIN (continuing)— > destroying every vestige of respect that a decent Democrat should have, follow the lead of the Republican Party, repudiate the Democratic President, the Democratic Postmaster General, the Democratic Rules Committee, and the Democratic Post Office Committee of this House, for what?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. DONOVAN. There is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present. Gentlemen of the committee will be seated. The Sergeant at Arms will see that Members take their seats.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Just let the committee come to order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is not well taken. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present. In the Committee of the Whole only 100 are required to make a quorum, and the Chair thinks there are 100 Members present. The Sergeant at Arms will see that Members take their seats. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, it is immaterial to me what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] thinks about this or anything else. He has a right to his own judgment upon the facts of this case and I have a right to mine. I said, and I say now, and I do not propose to withdraw one single word of it from anybody, that, in my opinion, when the President of the United States and the Postmaster General, when the Democratic Committee on Rules, when the Democratic Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads asks for a rule to consider legislation that would save to this country millions of dollars, then the Democrat who turns his back upon that request, the Democrat who turns his back upon that demand, violates the best interests of the Democratic Party, and I do not care whether that Democrat comes from Alabama or anywhere else.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the language of the gentleman——

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that the President asked for this rule—demanded it?

Mr. MOON. Oh, the President did not go before the committee and ask for the rule; but the President did this: He approved the action of the Postmaster General in doing it, as I am advised by the Postmaster General.

Mr. COOPER. Did the President approve of putting the Rural Free Delivery System of this country under the contract system? If he did, then you will never have another Democratic President.

Mr. MOON. I do not know whether the President approved that or not, and that is not the question here.

Mr. COOPER. It is in your rule.

Mr. GORDON. It is not.

Mr. COOPER. It was in the rule yesterday.

Mr. GORDON. It was not.

Mr. MOON. The only question is whether the legislation shall be in order.

That issue was not before you. The rule was provided to make that in order. And I am going to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that under the terms of the rule that was asked for here the rural carriers of the United States have secured $100 additional compensation, and when you voted against the rule yesterday every man who voted against it voted against the proposition in that bill that would give the rural letter carriers the maximum pay, considering only distance and not weights and number of packages.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then a vote against the rule makes that additional appropriation of $2,000,000 for the increased pay of rural carriers subject to a point of order; that is to say, the rule would keep the increased pay in the bill, and if a point of order is made and no rule to protect it, then it goes out on a point of order? Is that the correct parliamentary situation as to the increased pay of rural carriers?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the Postmaster General and the President also requested that this item of the increase of rural carriers be included in the rule?

Mr. MOON. No; that was put in the rule by the committee without the request of either the President or the Postmaster General.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I would like to ask one other question.

Mr. MOON. I mean to say that administrative legislation was demanded generally by the Postmaster General. The President approved the railway proposition, and so did the Postmaster General, as I am advised. I never talked to the President on the subject and do not know what he thinks personally.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. One other question.

Mr. MOON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. As to the provision affecting the weighing of mails and thereby affecting the railroad companies, I understood the gentleman in his speech on yesterday to make the statement that this would save the Government several millions of dollars?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If that is true, will the gentleman state in his judgment whether or not that provision is subject to a point of order in this bill?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I think it is subject to a point of order, because it is entirely new law, and it does not show a saving upon its face, and can not do it, but only shows an administrative proposition of saving. The saving will occur, as the department thinks, in the handling of the mails. In other words, you have changed from the quadrennial weighing of the mails on a weight basis, on which the pay is to be computed, to the space provision, and you will have enough space under the contract to carry all your parcel post probably without any additional compensation and save many million dollars annually. That is their theory.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman took occasion to arraign many of us on this side of the House——

Mr. MOON. I did not call anybody's name.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Neither did I call anybody's name. I said many of us. I mean those who voted against the special rule on yesterday. I think the gentleman can not deny that.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. He arraigned us on the ground that we were opposing a policy which the President very much wanted and on the ground that we were not in favor of proper economy in governmental affairs. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he did not, when the President did recommend very specifically and urged within the knowledge of practically all the membership of the House his interest in the passage of the Alaskan bill, refuse to follow the mandates of the President.

Mr. MOON. I did. I do not ask you to follow it where you were able to get on the floor and justify your opposition to it. I simply said in all questions of administrative propositions connected with these departments and the economies there it was wise for the legislative branch to follow the Executive where they could conscientiously do so. If you will read that speech, you will see in that same connection that I said I did not favor any subservience to the Executive, that I would oppose, as I have done on this floor, the position of the Executive on the civil-service matter or any other matter of principle, but I do think that you ought to give some respect to the head of the Government and the departments when they are asking you simply for legislation, administrative and economic in its character and involving no question of principle upon which you might properly differ.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I believe, in answer to the question of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], you stated that none of the economies recommended by the department could be brought up for consideration; that they would be subject to a point of order, and would not come under the Holman rule, because the economies do not appear affirmatively in the bill?

Mr. MOON. That is true as to many of them.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, then, under the present situation there were $2,000,000 that were to go to the rural carriers which is subject to a point of order, is it not?

Mr. MOON. I think so.

Mr. HOWARD. And the $100 additional which they would have gotten if the rule had been adopted will be withheld from them if anybody makes the point of order?

Mr. MOON. I think so. I think if gentlemen who want to help the rural carriers based their opposition to the rule on the fact that the rule did not benefit them, they will find if they read it that they were mistaken.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does the gentleman think he was justified——

Mr. MOON. Now, if you are going back to that speech, I want to say to you that it is a matter of opinion. I stated the facts as I understand them and the inferences I drew from them, and if I had not thought I was justified I would not have done so. Of course I think I was justified. I do not charge you with dishonesty or corruption, or anything of that sort, but I do charge you with the very worst party judgment that any lot of men ever had in the world. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I merely want to ask the gentleman if he did not go too far? And I want to say to the gentleman that he is not charging anything against me, because I did not vote against it.

Mr. MOON. Well, then, what have you got to do with it? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAGSDALE. I have this to do with it, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOON. Well, ask your question. Do not go into a speech.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I will ask it if I am permitted.

Mr. MOON. Go ahead and ask it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I believe, Mr. Chairman, I have this much to do with it as a Democrat, that when this gentleman charges that there is railroad influence enough on this side of the House to defeat this legislation, I, as a Democrat, do not believe it, and I repudiate it, sir. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina has expressed himself, and he has given his opinion, and I am entirely willing that this House shall take it for just what it is worth. [Laughter.] I do not want to offend anybody in this House. That is not my habit. I have never said anything against a Democrat or Republican that was intended to be unkind. I have given the facts and have drawn the inferences from them. "Is it the hit dog that yelps or not?" [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] can proceed.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes in which to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to get time from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] or the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to make a statement?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; I want to make a statement.

Mr. MOON. Very well. Go ahead. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WEBB. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I think all of this business has been quite a tempest in a teapot. I do not think that Judge MOON intended to reflect upon the Members who voted against his rule yesterday. I know how men feel after losing a battle either in the courthouse or on this floor. At such times they say things that they do not really mean. They are at such times intemperate in speech. I acquit Judge MOON of what his speech would be understood to imply as to the motives of Democrats—60 of them—who did not vote for the special rule yesterday.

When I came in on the floor of the House yesterday I had been down at the department attending to some official business, and I asked some fellow Member what the rule was. He said, "It is a rule that the Committee on Rules has reported," and I voted "aye." Immediately two colleagues of mine said to me, "Look here, WEBB, that rule is 'loaded.' There are 37 pages of it, and it has not even been read in the House by the Clerk. There is a lot of 'dynamite' in it, and you ought not to vote for it.' I said, "I do not know about that. I am afraid you are like a lot of cattle, being stampeded; but yielding to your judgment, since you have heard the discussion, and to be agreeable, I will change my vote." [Laughter and applause.] So I went down and changed my vote, as also did about 30 or 40 of my colleagues. But the truth is I did not know a single syllable that the rule contained, and I do not suppose any other Member knew all the rule contained, unless it was the members of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee and the Rules Committee. I doubt if one out of ten Members even now know what the rule contained. All Members, in the stress of their numerous duties, must rely on their colleagues in a measure as to casting their vote, especially when one has not had the time to investigate fully a subject for himself. I voted against the rule because my colleagues—KITCHIN and PAGE and GUDGER and DOUGHTON—true and loyal men, noble representatives of a noble people, had voted that way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as far as the railroad influence is concerned, my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] knows that railroad influences did not touch the hearts or the minds of a single man who voted yesterday against that rule. I do not believe he himself really thinks that they did it on that account. If the men who voted against the rule yesterday were controlled by railroad influences, and a majority of the House did so vote, they ought to be kicked out of the House; and if Judge MOON makes the charge that they were controlled by railroad influences, and it is not so, then Judge MOON ought to resign as chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads or apologize to the House. [Applause.] I say that in absolute kindness, because Judge MOON and I have been good friends for a long time and are good friends yet.

I remember the time when Judge MOON felt it to be his duty to vote with 23 Democrats who supported Mr. Cannon; but I know that Judge MOON is an honest man and a courageous man, with positive views, and a man who has the courage to express them. For a long time the country wanted a parcel post and I wanted it. It was understood that Judge MOON was opposed to it. Yet I never said that the express companies owned or controlled Judge MOON. I would not say that for the world. I do not believe it is so. I believe in charity to my fellow man and to honest Members who differ from me.

Now I want to come back to where I started, and repeat that I do not think that Judge MOON really meant it when he intimated yesterday that the 60 men here who voted against the rule were controlled by railroad influences. The language is harsh.

I do not believe Judge MOON meant that. So far as I am concerned, it just so happens that I never voted with the railroads in my life.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes more. Not 1 Member out of 10, I venture to assert, even knew the railway weighing measure was included in the rule. I voted for this identical measure the 11th of last August, and the bill is now in the Senate and I am still for it.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. OGLESBY. Would not the gentleman vote for the railroads if he thought the railroads were right?

Mr. WEBB. I would; but it so happens in my public career that I did not think they were right on the issues presented in the State senate and in this House. We had a fight for eight years on the floor of this House over the Southern Railroad mail subsidy. This road runs through my district and carried this subsidized mail to it. They ran two magnificent trains, Nos. 37 and 97, and the subsidy was about $142,000 a year to those two trains; and every year when the appropriation bill came up I voted against that subsidy, and I was criticized on account of my vote by some of my friends. No railroad or railroad agent ever asked me to vote against a single provision in the 37-page rule, and I do not believe that 1 per cent of the 60 good Democrats who voted against it even knew that the railway weighing provision was in the rule.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for the opportunity of making this statement. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to put my friend right in regard to these matters. Does he know who made the report that started the fight on the railroad subsidy that he speaks of?

Mr. WEBB. I do not know, sir. I think the fight was on when I came to Congress.

Mr. MOON. I will inform the gentleman that I made the first motion to strike out the subsidy, and the first report against it, and I followed it to the end.

Mr. WEBB. I followed the gentleman and voted with him on that.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman said I voted with 23 Democrats who supported Mr. Cannon. The gentleman ought to know better than that. Mr. FITZGERALD, a Democrat in this House, offered the resolution containing the rules for which I voted with 23 Democrats. That was in the Sixty-first Congress. What happened? In the Sixty-second Congress the Democratic Party rejected the proposition of the majority in the previous Congress to leave the question of the determination of the rules to 15 men, 9 from one side and 6 from the other. I had opposed the proposition that 9 Republicans and 6 Democrats should settle and determine the destinies of the Democratic Party in the Sixty-first Congress. What did the Democrats do in the Sixty-second Congress? They adopted the old rules that had existed for many years—and it was a wise thing to do, because they were sensible rules—except they accepted and made a part of the new rules the identical four propositions that those 23 Democrats voted for, and they added one other rule, that took the Speaker from the Rules Committee; so that in that Congress the action of the 23 Democrats was vindicated by the unanimous vote of the Democratic Party. And so it happened again in this Congress, and you have no other rules here—save one, taking the Speaker from the Committee on Rules—except the Republican rules and the rules proposed by those 23 Democrats. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Will my friend permit an interruption?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. I am not criticizing the gentleman's course—whether he is right or wrong.

Mr. MOON. You did criticize it.

Mr. WEBB. No, no.

Mr. MOON. You had the notion that I was wrong, and I had the notion that you were wrong, and you criticized me.

Mr. WEBB. I did not express the opinion that you were wrong, but I expressed the idea that your efforts were charitable; and I did not charge you with betraying——

Mr. MOON. Oh, every Democrat, and you among them, went into a solemn convention and denounced us for our vote on the Fitzgerald rule—every single one of you—and then you came back in the next Congress and adopted every one of those rules.

Mr. WEBB. I do not remember any such convention as that.

Mr. MOON. Yes, you did, at your meeting—your caucus. I have not forgotten it.

Mr. WEBB. I have not joined in any such denunciation. I did not mean to bring up the merits of the rule question.

Mr. MOON. Those things were done. All the gentlemen around me know that the majority of the Democratic Party in caucus assembled denounced the 23 men and established for the first time the caucus proposition instead of the consent agreement that had theretofore applied.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I know my dear, good friend thinks that the remedy being applied is worse than the ailment.

Mr. MOON. Oh, I am not complaining of that now. I am just answering the suggestion of my friend WEBB against me.

Mr. HOWARD. Did you not think that?

Mr. MOON. They published an address against us, as my friend sitting beside me [Mr. CLARK] reminds me, and they issued it to the country. Then you took up our wisdom, every word of it, and had no wisdom to add to it. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. I think my friend misunderstood me.

Mr. MOON. I beg to be excused from going into that any further. I am in the very best of humor. My friend said that I was supposed to be against the parcel post. I was supposed to, and did, propose to give very careful consideration to that proposition, and not rush into that legislation until I had information in reference to it, just as I am about this railroad proposition now. But when all the facts were before us, when the time for action came, go and look at your record and see who introduced the parcel-post proposition that became the law. I introduced the proposition in the Post Office appropriation bill; and then, seeing the temper of this House, that we might go further than the mere rural delivery, I offered a substitute on the floor of this House for the proposition I had in the bill. That substitute was adopted by this House, and the bill went to the Senate, and the provisions of the House and Senate bill were combined by Senator Bourne and myself in the conference report that was adopted, and that is the parcel-post law of the United States to-day. [Applause.] Yet the gentleman takes these two things as rather suspicious against me. Well, I said, and it is not necessary for me to keep repeating it, but I want to assure this House that in that speech yesterday I was expressing, as I always try to express, my calm judgment upon all the facts and circumstances as presented. I did not care what influence you were ruled by, or whether there was any. I suggested three influences. If those were not the things that controlled you, you can tell us what did.

Now my friend pleads ignorance of the facts. Ignorance of the law excuses no man.

The gentleman says he was ignorant as to the provisions of the law. I want to make an exception of the general rule and to give the benefit to the gentleman from North Carolina and to all the other gentlemen who voted that way, because you were ignorant beyond all question or you would not have done it. [Laughter.] I am going to excuse you in that which the law will not do on account of your ignorance. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of pouring oil on the troubled waters of the Democratic sea. Far be it from me to restrain any of the gentlemen on the other side when they are disposed to tell each other just what they think of each other. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The only real regret I have in the matter is that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] saw fit to somewhat tone down his very caustic remarks of yesterday before he printed them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. And yet I am inclined to think that this is true. A great many years ago a great man is recorded as having said, "I said in my haste, 'All men are liars.'" It is not recorded that David in his sober moments, unmoved by haste or anger, ever laid that sweeping indictment against his fellow men.

Without any knowledge of what motives may have actuated gentlemen on the other side in their rather precipitate transfer of their votes before the roll call ended yesterday, I am at least inclined to think that after the sting of defeat has passed the gentleman from Tennessee will be inclined as he now, indeed, seems inclined, to considerably modify his very caustic and sweeping statement relative to his fellow Members on the Democratic side. He knows them better than we do, and he ought to be accurate in his speech in regard to them, even in moments of anger and defeat.

Mr. Chairman, my purpose, however, was to transfer the debate from this atmosphere of crimination and recrimination, of charges and countercharges, to the clear, pure, atmosphere of the western plains and mountains, to discuss a matter which may be of interest to gentlemen who voted on both sides of the rule yesterday. Assuming as I do—and I think accurately—that the vote on the rule was largely influenced by reason of the fact that it tended to affect, or the legislation it made in order would affect, the policy under which we have been operating in the carrying of the rural mails.

Out in the western country, particularly the mountainous West, we have not had to any considerable extent the benefit of rural delivery. There are only 14 rural routes in my State of nearly a hundred thousand square miles. We get along there with star routes. Now that the Postmaster General has suggested a change from the present system of annual salaries to rural carriers to the system of contracts, which is the rule under the star routes, it may be somewhat interesting to discuss the conditions where star-route service is the more important postal service. It is unfortunate for the star-route service that it has been so largely supplanted and overshadowed by the Rural Delivery Service that there are comparatively few Members of Congress interested in it. While we have seen the pay of the rural carriers increased year after year, until their average pay is more than twice what it was when the service was first inaugurated, the pay of the star-route carrier has advanced comparatively little.

It is perhaps natural that the Postmaster General, desiring to economize in his service, desires to modify a system that has so constantly increased in cost and bring it more in harmony with the star-route system, under which the Government secures service for much less money than it pays for a like service under rural routes.

This bill carries an appropriation of $9,000,000 for the star routes. That is an increase of $325,000 over the appropriation of last year. In my opinion it is not sufficient.

I have been calling attention to the fact that these star-route appropriations were inadequate for years. This is an annual speech of mine. I have on several occasions secured increases above the estimate. I shall offer an amendment above this estimate, and I think I shall be able to demonstrate that that increase is necessary if in the western and sparsely settled portions of the country we are to have a mail service such as American citizens, wherever they may be located, are entitled to.

There are more than 11,000 star routes in the country. For a considerable number of years, with the spread and extension of the rural system the number of star routes was constantly diminishing. The pendulum is somewhat swinging the other way at this time, and the number of star routes has increased in the last six months by something like 50. The probability is that if the service is reasonably cared for, if the people of the sparsely settled sections of the country are given any sort of reasonable mail facilities there will be an increase at least of several hundred routes in the coming fiscal year. There are at least a score of routes in my State now asked for that ought to be established in addition to the abandoned routes that should be reestablished.

I do not desire to unfairly criticize the postal authorities in connection with this matter. I realize that in their proper desire to economize within reason in the Postal Service they find it a little difficult sometimes to bring themselves to a frame of mind which they feel would justify the authorization of service at a very considerable increase of cost above the service of the past. I am not, however, able to understand why they object to retaining as good a service as the people have had in the past.

The fact is that the western mountainous country has, as to some of its communities, rather been injured than otherwise by the establishment of the parcel post, and in this way: The establishment of the parcel post necessarily increases the cost of star routes. The department desires to economize, and is not disposed to grant these necessary increases. The Postmaster General estimates a surplus of receipts over expenditures for the last fiscal year of somewhere between $3.000,000 and $4,000,000. This report indicates that the excess is over $4,000,000, but the Postmaster General in his report places it at something more than $3,000,000.

Now, this is a very excellent showing and ought to be approved by all providing it is not obtained at the expense of the service, and providing it is not the result of economies which deny American citizens postal facilities to which they are entitled. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that while you are having a considerable amount of disagreement as to whether or not rural carriers are to have their pay still further increased, there are a large number of people under the American flag in the western country that have no mail facilities at all.

We are putting in refrigerators down here in the post office in this city to care for perishable goods transported by the Postal Service. We are providing in many villages of small population for house-to-house delivery, and yet the Post Office Department is denying very considerable communities in my State and in other Western States postal facilities of any kind, except such as they secure under what is known as special service, which is no provision at all. The Postal Service is not justified in claiming credit for a surplus of revenues over expenditures when it does not maintain the Postal Service in as satisfactory condition as it has been maintained in the past. I have a list of 11 star routes in my State that have been operated from 5 to 30 years prior to July 1 last that are now abandoned, and the people living along those routes and at the end of some of them around the post offices have now no mail delivery at all at any time except as they provide for it and pay for it themselves. The condition in Wyoming is not dissimilar from that in other Western States. Wyoming is Republican in its representation, and some people have been unkind enough to the Post Office Department to suggest that possibly we would do better in the matter of star routes if our delegation in Congress was of a different political faith. In my opinion there is no ground or basis for such a criticism, because the conditions of which I complain are no more acute in my State than they are in the West generally. As a matter of fact, I think we have suffered less than any of our neighbor States. One reason for it, I think, is that we have been unusually active in calling to the attention of the department the needs of our people for postal service. The department by the discontinuance of these 11 routes—and nothing has been furnished to take the place of most of them, no other postal facilities having been provided—has saved something like $11,000, and by reducing the frequency of service on various other routes it has accomplished a saving of about $3,000, or a total saving in our State in these routes of something less than $15,000. I assume that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads takes this position, that every American community, every locality, where any considerable number of American people live is entitled to some postal facilities, and, be the cost however so high, some sort of postal facilities should be afforded.

The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General does not provide for the postal routes in Alaska. That service comes under the Second Assistant. I think if the Fourth Assistant had experience with the Alaskan business he would be a little more inclined to be liberal with western communities at home. In Alaska we spend $10 per capita for the carrying of the mail by star routes to the 35,000 white people who occupy that Territory. In a large portion of the West the expenditure is not one-fifth that amount. On the rural routes the cost of delivery, if I recollect rightly, is about $2.50 per annum per capita. Beginning with a cost of about 50 cents per capita, it has gone to $2.50 per capita, if I am rightly informed. The Postmaster General desires to make a saving by letting these routes by contract, and he believes that he can accomplish a saving of eighteen to twenty million dollars in so doing. I think that is questionable. I do not believe it would be possible to accomplish so great a saving as that.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does the star-route service in the gentleman's part of the country perform the same service that the rural delivery does?

Mr. MONDELL. Not entirely, because the star-route carriers do not sell stamps.

Mr. COX. Or money orders?

Mr. MONDELL. They do not do money-order business; but, with that exception, they do practically everything that the rural carrier does. They deliver the mail in boxes and collect mail along the routes and deliver the pouches at the post offices on and at the end of the route.

Mr. COX. Ordinarily, what is the length of your star-route service as compared to the rural routes?

Mr. MONDELL. The star-route service is all the way from 5 to 150 miles. They vary quite a good deal.

Mr. COX. What is the comparative cost between the two? Which is the higher, the star-route or the rural-route service?

Mr. MONDELL. According to the statement made before the committee by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, the average cost of star routes the country over is a trifle less than 10 cents, and the cost of rural delivery the country over is about the same fraction less than 16 cents, or a difference of almost 5 cents a mile.

Mr. COX. What is the cost per mile traveled for star-route service in the gentleman's country?

Mr. MONDELL. The cost of star-route service in the mountain region is almost exactly the same as the cost of rural delivery the country over.

Mr. COX. That is what I thought.

Mr. MONDELL. Almost exactly the same. Before I come to that, Mr. Chairman, I desire to emphasize what I had started out to say. I think the Postmaster General is mistaken in his estimate of the saving that he would make by a change of policy, because I believe that with the extension and the enlargement and the growth of the parcel post, the lowest contract rates that could be secured on the routes would be larger than the Postmaster General has estimated. But here is the situation out in our country, where we have to contract for the carrying of the mail: If the cost in any case approaches the average cost of the rural route per mile, the postal authorities say that the bid is too high. They again advertise, and sometimes four and five different successive bids are submitted before the department will let a contract, and frequently they refuse to let a contract at all. We are securing practically no new routes. We have applications pending in my State for some needed and necessary new star routes, and it is the most difficult thing in the world to get the department to give those routes favorable consideration. We should have reestablished most of the 11 routes that have been discontinued. Owing to the increased cost, by reason of the parcel post, the department refuses to let contracts. In other words, their attitude is this: The parcel post, instituted for the benefit of the people, in view of the fact that it increases the cost of the service, is to be denied to the people in these rural communities, and all other service with it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to inquire of the gentleman if he knew whether the refusal to extend these rural routes was begun lately or since the European war, or whether the practice is the same now as it was before?

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the department is not now refusing to establish these routes on account of the war in Europe. They are declining to establish them, evidently, on account of their desire to economize. Now, I do not wish to be unfairly critical of the department. The gentlemen down there have treated me with every consideration up to the point of letting contracts, and they have awarded some contracts with regard to which it seemed pretty difficult to persuade their judgment. The difficulty is that in the department there has grown up a notion that the Postal Service must pay everywhere, and that is the theory that is wrecking our star-route service. If we can afford to pay $10 to carry mail to every man, woman, and child in Alaska, we can afford to pay whatever sum is necessary—and it will be much less than that—to carry mail, at least occasionally and with reasonable frequency, to the people in the isolated settlements of the mountain States. There are people in my State 25, 30, and 40 miles from a post office who are now receiving no mail at all. These are not heavily settled districts, but there are considerable numbers of people so deprived, and largely due to this mistaken notion—which is not shared, I am sure, by the Post Office Committee or any of its members—that the Postal Service must be made to pay. We established the Postal Service for the purpose of supplying the people of the United States, wherever they might settle, with mail at reasonable intervals, and I hope and pray that the department will overcome and get away from its present disposition to unreasonably economize at our expense. I hope they will reestablish these old routes and give fair consideration to the demands we are making for new ones. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill. H. R. 19906, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MURDOCK, for 10 days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. Davenport, indefinitely, on account of illness.

LEGISLATION ON POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman from Texas think the House ought to be notified that we are about to take this rule up?

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I think possibly we can get them here after we begin the discussion. There will be some discussion on the rule, but I have no objection——

Mr. MANN. How much time is expected to be given?

Mr. HENRY. How much time would the gentleman like to have on that side?

Mr. LENROOT. Say 20 minutes on a side.

Mr. HENRY. If we should agree to 20 minutes on a side, I shall move the previous question at the end of the 40 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman think that Members——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have the Members here, and therefore I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HENRY. I thought we might read the resolution first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper willl lock the dooors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 256 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 684 (H. Rept. 1240).

Resolved, That after the adoption of this rule it shall be in order in the consideration of H. R. 19906, a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, to consider new legislation in said bill, notwithstanding the rules of the House, as follows, to wit:

"At each post office where the receipts are $20,000,000 or over: Superintendent of finance, $3,800; cashiers, $2,800; superintendent of mails, $3,800; assistant superintendents of mails, $2,400, $2,600, and $2,800; superintendent of delivery, $3,800; assistant superintendents of delivery, $2,400, $2,600, and $2,800; stenographers, $900 to $1,200; bookkeeper, $2,400; auditor, $3,000: And provided further, That there may also be employed at first-class post offices special clerks, foremen, and stenographers at a salary of $1,300 or more per annum, the total number at any post office not to exceed one at $1,300 for each $100,000 receipts, one at $1,400 for each $200,000 receipts, one at $1,500 for each $400,000 receipts, one at $1,600 for each $800,000 receipts, one at $1,700 for each $1,500,000 receipts, one at $1,800 for each $3,000,000 receipts, one at $1,900 for each $6,000,000 receipts, and one at $2,000 for each $12,000,000 receipts: And provided further, That on and after July 1, 1915, the salary of station superintendents shall be based on the postal receipts and number of employees at their respective stations on the following basis:

"When the receipts of a carrier station do not exceed $5,000 per annum, the station shall have a credit of 3 points, and for each additional $5,000 a credit of 1 point.

"When the receipts of a noncarrier station do not exceed $5,000 per annum, the station shall have a credit of 3 points, and for each additional $30,000 a credit of 1 point.

"When the employees (clerks and carriers, city and rural) at a carrier station are 3 or less, the station shall have a credit of 1 point and for each multiple of 3 employees a credit of 1 point.

"Stations having credit of less than 5 points shall be in charge of a clerk at a salary not to exceed $1,200.

"At stations having a total credit of 5 points or more the salary of the superintendent shall be as follows: Five and 6 points, superintendent, $1,300; 7 to 9 points, superintendent, $1,400; 10 to 13 points, superintendent, $1,500; 14 to 18 points, superintendent, $1,600; 19 to 23 points, superintendent, $1,700; 24 to 32 points, superintendent, $1,800; 33 to 44 points, superintendent, $1,900; 45 to 64 points, superintendent, $2,000; 65 to 100 points, superintendent, $2,100;

101 to 135 points, superintendent, $2,200; 136 to 200 points, superintendent, $2,300; 201 to 275 points, superintendent, $2,400; 276 to 350 points, superintendent, $2,500; 351 points and over, superintendent, $2,600."

Second. Line 26, page 15, and lines 1 and 2, page 16, as follows:

"Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster General may enter into contracts for the conduct of such stations for a term not exceeding two years."

Third. Page 23, lines 21 to 25, inclusive; and page 24, lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, as follows:

"The appropriation for two delegates to the International Postal Union, at Madrid, to be appointed by the Postmaster General from the Post Office Department, made by the act of August 24, 1912, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, is hereby continued and shall be available for such convention when it shall be held."

Fourth. Page 25, lines 8 to 19, inclusive, as follows:

"For pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, $54,700,000: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations: Provided further, That for experimental purposes, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Postmaster General is authorized to advertise for proposals and to enter into contracts with the lowest responsible bidders for a period of not exceeding four years, for performing service on rural routes in one county in each State, and to pay for the same out of the amount hereby appropriated"—and any and all other new legislation in section 1.

Fifth. Sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26, beginning with line 20, page 30, of said bill, and ending with line 3, page 54, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the act approved August 24, 1912, being 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended as follows: At the end of section 5 of said act, after the word 'service,' insert the following: 'Provided, That compensatory time for Sunday service during the month of December in any year may be allowed during the month of January next succeeding.'

"SEC. 3. That hereafter the Postmaster General may establish, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, one or more branch offices, nonaccounting offices, or stations of any post office for the transaction of such postal business as may be required for the convenience of the public.

"SEC. 4. That hereafter the Postmaster General may enter into contracts for the conduct of such stations for a term not exceeding four years.

"SEC. 5. That on and after July 1, 1915, when the total compensation of any postmaster at a post office of the fourth class for four consecutive quarters shall amount to $1,000, exclusive of commissions on money orders issued, and the receipts of such post office for the same period shall aggregate as much as $1,900, the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall so report to the Postmaster General, who shall, in pursuance of such report, assign such post office to its proper class, to become effective at the beginning of the next succeeding quarterly period, and fix the salary of the postmaster accordingly.

"SEC. 6. That so much of section 1 of the 'act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes,' approved August 24, 1912, which provides that the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge its present policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains, is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 7. That the Postmaster General, in cases of emergency, between October 1 and April 1 of any year, may hereafter return to the mails empty mail bags theretofore withdrawn therefrom as required by law, and for such times may pay for their railroad transportation out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes at not exceeding the rate per pound per mile as shown by the last adjustment for mail service on the route over which they may be carried, and pay for necessary cartage out of the appropriation for freight or expressage.

"SEC. 8. That when, during a weighing period, on account of floods or other causes, interruptions in service occur on railroad routes and weights of mail are decreased below the normal, or where there is an omission to take weights, the Postmaster General, for the purpose of readjusting compensation on such railroad routes as are affected thereby, is hereafter authorized, in his discretion, to add to the weights of mails ascertained on such routes during that part of the weighing period when conditions are shown to have been normal the estimated weights for that part of the weighing period when conditions are shown to have been not normal or where there has been an omission to take weights, based upon the average of weights taken during that part of the weighing period during which conditions are shown to have been normal, the actual weights and the estimated weights to form the basis for the average weight per day upon which to readjust the compensation according to law on such railroad routes for the transportation of the mails, notwithstanding the provision of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, requiring that the average weight shall be ascertained by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than 90, as the Postmaster General may direct: Provided further, That readjustments from July 1, 1913, may be made under this provision on routes in the first section affected by the floods in the Ohio Valley and tributary territories, commencing about March 25, 1913.

"SEC. 9. That so much of section 4 of 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes,' approved August 24, 1912, as provides that no adjustment shall be made unless the diverted mails equal at least 10 per cent of the average daily weight on any of the routes affected is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 10. That hereafter the Postmaster General may transfer, under such regulations as he may prescribe, clerks from post offices of the first and second classes to the Railway Mail Service at salaries not exceeding the salary which the clerks are receiving in the post offices at the time of such transfer, with the consent of the clerk.

"SEC. 11. That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid to railroad companies from the 30th day of June, 1915, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, for the transportation and handling of the mails and furnishing facilities and services in connection therewith upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter provided.

"The Postmaster General may state railroad mail routes and authorize mail service thereon of the following four classes, namely: Full railway post-office car service, apartment railway post-office car service, storage-car service, and closed-pouch service.

"Full railway post-office car mail service shall be service by cars 40 feet or more in length, constructed, fitted up, and maintained for the distribution of mails on trains. The authorization of full railway post-office cars shall be for standard-size cars 60 feet in length, inside measurement, except as hereinafter provided.

"Apartment railway post-office car mail service shall be service by apartments less than 40 feet in length in cars constructed, fitted up, and maintained for the distribution of mails on trains. Two standard sizes of apartment railway post-office cars may be authorized and paid for, namely, apartments 15 feet and 30 feet in length, inside measurement, except as hereinafter provided.

"Storage-car mail service shall be service by cars used for the storage and carriage of mails in transit other than by full and apartment railway post-office cars. The authorizations for storage cars shall be for cars 60 feet in length, inside measurement, except as hereinafter provided: Provided, That less than 60 feet of storage space may be authorized in baggage cars.

"Service by full and apartment railway post-office cars and storage cars shall include the carriage therein of all mail matter, equipment, and supplies for the mail service and the employees of the Postal Service or Post Office Department as shall be directed by the Postmaster General to be so carried.

"Closed-pouch mail service shall be the transportation and handling by railroad employees of mails on trains on which full or apartment railway post-office cars are not authorized, except as hereinbefore provided.

"The rates of payment for the services authorized in accordance with this act shall be as follows, namely:

"For full railway post-office car mail service at not exceeding 21 cents for each mile of service by a 60-foot car.
